The strong oppress the weak; the high trample on the lowly; [illegible] combinations, syndicates, crush the individual trader or force him to join them in their extortion, violence, robbery and wrongful gains. Even government lends itself to class and sectional interests. Law is made to join the oppressor against the oppressed. Bribery, wrong and violence go unrebuked and triumphant. The poor cry and no man heareth them. And man's inhumanity to man in a thousand ways plants pain, and hate, and revenge in human hearts as bitter seeds for a dire harvest of sorrow and disaster to be reaped in tears by and by.

All these evils are rife even here! Where on earth are they not rife? And what single reason have we from long and varied and abundant experience to hope that any wisdom or virtue, or power of man can overthrow and remedy them? We want a king to do this!

(2) We need a king to lead the race along the pathway of true progress, uplifting, ennoblement.

The kings of the earth have rarely and feebly ever tried to do this; have never done it effectively And popular government never leads. Well if it we did follow where others lead. As thoughtful students of history know, all the suggestions, impulses, steps of human progress upward have been from private individual enterprise. Human society is what it is and enjoys what it enjoys because individuals have thought and planned and toiled, and sacrificed themselves for the good of man. And so, at best, the Ordinary is dragged on a slow, blind, reluctant course upward by rulers that it does not recognize and leaders whom it is slow to follow and generally strikes to death.

For all this, for all these mighty interests a king is needed; a recognized king of men, whose authority is owned, whose person is loved. A personal king, with authority and power, and wisdom, is needed as a center of human unity, drawing all men into oneness of aim and interest through a common loyalty to the One Lord: as a leader whose energy can inspire, whose influence can guide, whose personality can control, whose power can protect—yes, the world needs its king!

II. And not the world at large, but also as individual souls, we need a King.

We will always have a master; we have a master each one of us. For some the master is self. Now, experience bears witness that this is not the true master. It is not for our own good that self should reign in our hearts. This does not make beautiful characters or useful lives, or easy consciences, or contented, peaceful minds. Our blessedness is found when we serve another master than self.

If we take not this, as we stumble on in our blind search, we shall take up with some other wrong master—mammon, the world, the flesh, the devil. We must have a master!

Well! the noblest master is a king—a person whose right it is to rule; one to be to us an inspiration to good; one to stir our loyalty: one to follow; one to serve; one to devote ourselves to.

The deep craving and need of the individual heart is for a personal Lord, a noble Master. And so the world, human society, the race, the individual—all in common—need a King.

Look at the picture of the true King:

1. "He is just." His justice will be the deepest source of satisfaction in our king. His absolute fairness to all. He is "victorious." No weak ruler, but having power over all—able to execute his will; mighty to save, strong to deliver; Lord of nature, conqueror of death and sin and the devil, and all the foes and perils of his people.

He is "unselfish." He has no pride or selfishness. His heart is set on his people's welfare, not his own. He cares wisely, tenderly, supremely for them.

Ah! such a king and such a reign!

What a vision of noble hope for human kind; who can right all the injustice of the world; who can straighten out all the confusions of earth; who can heal all the miseries of man; who can command peace among all interests; who will respect the dignity and guard the rights of every man; who inspires men with perfect, unselfish devotion to him and to their fellowmen; who can lead the race of men to realize its destined glory and blessedness. For such a king, ruling not by the sword, or craft, or the balancing of contending interests, but by love; not in outward state only, but in the devoted hearts of willing subjects; for such the world languishes and all true hearts hope and long, and pray. And Christ is exactly this king! W. M. Dame, Rector of Memorial Protestant Episcopal Church, Baltimore.—Baltimore.

Poetry.

The Morning Cometh.

Lo! from the Eastern heights sublime,
I hear the herald's joyous warning;
Day's glory deepens the upclimb
The rosy splendors of the morning;
See you triumphant steeds of light?
Chase the retreating hosts of night;
They're flying, the hosts rejoice,
And sounds shall once Creation move,
'Tis coming! Yes, 'tis coming!

'Tis coming! Yes, our night of tears
Shall fade before Immanuel's glory,
Which now, to gild our earth, appears,
Foretold in ancient song and story;
Foretold in Heaven's explanation,
With notes which hasten our world again,
For traveling through the broken years,
The Just, the Mighty One appears.
Behold! the Lord of glory

The Bereans Column.

[Under this heading the society of "Bereans" in Illinois, will supply the copy, and endeavor to fill the space one month.]

THE APOSTLE PETER.

In the Acts of the Apostles we have a full account of the calls of Peter, and his great labors. He preached in Europe, Italy and Asia. While he was in Rome he was imprisoned on account of the death of Simon Magus. While he was imprisoned at this time he wrote his letters to the converted Jews. Here the Lord ordered him to be crucified on a cross. He asked permission to suffer with his head downward, because he did not think himself worthy to be crucified as his Master had. This wish was granted. Thus he gave his life for his Master.

THERESA BAKER.

Dear Bereans:

Your columns in THE RESTITUTION for the past 16 months have been very interesting to me. It does me good to read of your faithful work. May God grant you strength and wisdom this year to spread the good news that many may heed, and search the Scriptures as is commanded. Seek ye out the Book of the Lord and read.

We find proofs of it in Psa. lxxvii. 6, My spirit made diligent search. 1 Pet. i. 10 we read, Of which salvation the prophets have enquired, and searched diligently, who prophesied of the grace that should come unto you. Eccl. vii. 25, I applied mine heart to know, and to search, and to seek out wisdom.

In conclusion, my prayer will be as recorded in Phil. i. 9-11, And this I pray, that our love may abound yet more and more in knowledge and in all judgment. That we may approve things that are excellent, that we may be sincere and without offense till the day of Christ. Being filled with the fruits of righteousness which are by Jesus Christ, unto the glory and praise of God.

Submitted in love by your Sister.

S. SAMUELS.

Another year has come, and Dear Bereans, are we using our lives properly in God's cause? How many moments are wasted. Would we be ready if our dear Savior should come, to meet him? Now at the beginning of the new year let us strive for the cause so our lives may shine so as to lead many more to Jesus. We are commanded to search the Scriptures that we may learn the way of righteousness, and grow more like Jesus each day.

Your Brother waiting for the soon coming of our King.

THE FAITH IN WHICH PAUL ESTABLISHED THE CHURCHES.

One of the most famous of Paul's sermons was the one delivered at Antioch in Pisidia. When he had finished this sermon the Gentiles were filled gladness, and many believed. But the Jews, on the other hand, were filled with envy, and raised persecution on Paul and Barnabas, and expelled them from their coasts.

In this sermon Paul tells the congregation before him how they can be saved, if they will. He first relates to them how the Jews persecuted Christ, although they had no cause for so doing. Yet God raised him from the dead.

He next tells them the glad tidings, of how God fulfilled the promise made unto the fathers, unto their children. This promise was, "In thee and thy Seed shall all nations of the earth be blessed." Who is Abraham's Seed? It is Christ. "Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, and to seeds, as of many; but as of one, and to thy seed, which is Christ." Gal. iii. 16.

This promise God fulfilled unto us, his children, by raising up Christ from the dead . . . he sent him up, he . . . [illegible] kingdom, the nations of the earth shall be blessed, by having righteous rulers, hence a righteous government also, by having peace, as wars will be done away with. The children of Abraham shall hold high positions in the kingdom such as priests and Kings, and shall rule with Christ a thousand years. This shall be their blessing.

Paul finishes his sermon by telling the people to beware, lest that come upon them which is spoken in the prophets.

What is the difference between the baptism of John the Baptist and that of Christ?

Both John and Christ preached the same identical gospel of the kingdom: their ministry was both confined to the Jews. John's baptism simply brought them back to favor in favor with God. It was a covenant that they should remain loyal to God and his covenants.

The baptism of John and of Jesus was in perfect agreement until wicked Jews crucified their King. Then came the change from the Jewish to the Christian dispensation. Baptism then takes on a broader and a more far-reaching significance. Paul finding certain disciples at Ephesus, said unto them: "Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed?" And they said unto him, "We have not so much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghost."

This question was asked in order to lead their way to a knowledge of their imperfect obedience. In addition to what the disciples at Ephesus had already learned, Paul taught them more. He did not have them still rely upon their former baptism, which was based upon an insufficient faith, but baptized them again, and with a sufficient faith as a basis of their obedience.

John's baptism did not make Christians of people, but the baptism of Christ does, for they are inducted into the all saving name of Christ; his name being placed upon them at that time, and sealed with his own precious blood.

The baptism of Jesus Christ is a symbol of the death, burial and resurrection of the Christ, and by this symbol the sinner is brought into covenant relation with God, is adopted into God's family, becomes one of God's household.

After the death of Jesus Christ the baptism of John became invalidated by virtue of the old covenant being done away, and supplanted by the new covenant of Christ. The baptism of John was for violations committed under the old covenant, therefore all persons who were baptized by John's baptism after the new covenant came in force, had to be rebaptized in compliance with the new covenant in Jesus the Christ.

Be Ready.

Yes, be ready always to defend the words of inspiration. God's Word is assailed on every hand. Not by professed enemies only, but by those who claim to believe and teach it. It is well to have some points drawn out with references, convenient to use at once. Be ready to meet objectors with the Word of truth.

Few seem to realize the importance of strict obedience. God does not permit men to substitute anything in place of his commands. When we do so, it is to our risk and peril. Salvation is a matter of too much importance to us to risk so hazardous an undertaking. Jesus suffered the painful and ignominious death on the cross, that we might be saved, and we should give all diligence to make our calling and election sure, and not risk any substitute in place of strict obedience.

I have drawn out several passages for quick reference by the readers of THE RESTITUTION in laying the foundation for the defense or discussion of Bible truths, which, I trust, will be found convenient.

Deut. iv. 2, "Ye shall not add unto the Word which I command you, neither shall ye diminish aught from it, that ye may keep the commandments of the Lord your God which I . . . [illegible] shall not add thereto, nor diminish from it."

Prov. xxx. 5, 6, "Every word of God is pure; he is a shield unto them that put their trust in him. Add thou not unto his words, lest he reprove thee, and thou be found a liar."

Rev. xxii. 18, 19, "For I testify unto every man that heareth the words of the prophecy of this book. If any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book. And if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy city, and from the things which are written in this book."

Matt. v 18, "For verily I say unto you, till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled." No, do not forget the jots and tittles of God's Word.

Matt. xxi 6, "And the disciples went, and did as Jesus commanded them." Would that all others would do as well.

2 Kings v., "Now Naaman, captain of the host of the king of Syria, was a great man with his master, and honorable, because by him the Lord had given deliverance unto Syria; he was also a mighty man in valor, but he was a leper."

Naaman was directed to go to Elisha, the prophet, and be healed. He went; and Elisha sent his servant to tell him to go and wash in Jordan seven times. Naaman was angry and would not go. He went away, saying, Are not Abana and Pharpar, rivers of Damascus, better than all the waters of Israel? may I not wash in them, and be clean? So he turned and went away in a rage." But he could not be healed without obeying the words of the prophet. Naaman's servants persuaded him, and he finally obeyed and was healed. Thus God requires implicit obedience. See Matt. xix. 6.

Matt. xxviii. 19, 20, "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you; and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world. Amen."

John viii. 31, "Then said Jesus to those Jews which believed on him, If ye continue in my Word, then are ye my disciples indeed." 32, "And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

John xv. 10, 14, "If ye keep my commandments, ye shall abide in my love; even as I have kept my Father's commandments, and abide in his love. Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you."

Heb. ix. 27, 28, "And as it is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment; so Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation."

Rom. vi. 1-4, "What shall we say then? Shall we continue in sin, that grace may abound? God forbid. How shall we, that are dead to sin, live any longer therein? Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death? Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death; that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life. For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection."

When one is buried or immersed in water, the breath of life is cut off, and unless he or she is raised from that watery grave he or she will not live and breathe again. "Jesus answered, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." John iii. 5. The believer thus lays down his life voluntarily. Jesus said, "I lay down my life, that I might take it again. No man taketh it from me, but I lay it down of myself." "I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again." John x. 17, 18.

To be out of Christ is death. He is our appointed refuge. Heb. vi. 18; 1 John ii. 28. "And now, little children, abide in him; that, when he shall appear, we may have confidence, and not be ashamed before him at his coming."

Noah could not have been saved out of the ark. Gen. vii. See the importance of a refuge. Num. xxxv. 13; Psa. ix. 9, xiv. 6; xlviii. 3; lvii. 1; lxii 7, 8; xci 2; Isa xxviii. 15, 17; Jer xvi. 19.

After all that the Lord has done to . . . [illegible]

it was not convenient for us to be buried with him by baptism into death? and so disobeyed him? "How shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation." Then hasten to obey, and put on Christ, then continue to abide in him.

My Apology for the Second Adventists.

It seems to be a law among civilized nations that the accused have the right to speak for themselves, and Christians cannot well afford to do less. Seeing that Second Adventists have been accused of believing that this earth will be burned up when the Lord comes to reign; and seeing that they resent the charge, and plead not guilty, I deem it but right and fair to let them speak for themselves touching those things whereof they are accused.

E. A. Stockman, formerly editor of the World's Crisis, and now dead, in his book entitled "Our Hope, or why we are Adventists," says, "The renewed race will spend their endless days in the land of their nativity; in the country given to Adam, lost in the transgression, promised to Abraham, predicted by 'all the holy prophets,' purchased and assured by Christ. But for confirmation of these views let us consult the Holy Oracles. In Gen. xvii. 8, we find the following sweeping promise made of God to Abraham: And I will give unto thee, and to thy seed after thee, the land of Canaan, for an everlasting possession." On page 127 he says, in commenting upon this Scripture, Maunasseh Ben Israel says: It is plain that Abram and the patriarchs did not possess the land; it follows therefore that they must be raised from the dead in order to enjoy the promised good." And Stephen declared concerning this very promise: And he gave him (Abraham) none inheritance in it, no, not so much as to set his foot on, yet he promised that he would give it to him for a possession when as yet he had no child." And this promise included all saints, for Paul said, And if ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed an l heirs according to the promise." Gal. iii 29.

This was a Magna Charta promise, and it must have a literal fulfillment. When will it be accomplished? We answer in the resti tution."

On page 134. And so the saints, when their redemption is completed, will regain the ancient homestead. And the ransomed of the Lord will spend their endless days in possession of the very earth and soil wherein they knelt and prayed, wept and suffered." . . . Here he will reign on this earth, in this land, under this sun.

H. Pollard, editor of Our Hope, says in Nov. 29, 1901: "So far as Our Hope is able to speak for the Advent Christian Churches, east and west, north and south, all hold, without exception, that God's covenant promise to Abraham, secured to him and to his 'seed,' Christ, Gal. iii. 16, the entire earth in fee simple as a joint inheritance, Rom. iv. 13, which inheritance Abraham has not yet received, Acts vii. 5, but will receive, upon his resurrection, at the coming of Christ."

This is enough. I am satisfied; are you my Brother? If they have changed their faith oh this, of late years, all right let us give them credit for it. Our impressions are much like our opinions very precarious at best; as our integrity is involved in this question we cannot afford to treat it with indifference. Let us remember that it is "human to err, and divine to forgive."

With kind regards to all.

T. E. ADAMS.

[Replying individually to Brother Adams' question, "I am satisfied; are you my Brother?" I can say, Not altogether. Quite a number of items still need clearing away. However we have no desire to carry this matter further, and if any one gets satisfaction from the words written or quoted by Brother Adams, we have no objection whatever. An incident will sometimes make a point clear. Some years ago a former publisher of this paper was at a gathering where some singing was in progress, as I in some of the selections the orthodox idea of going to heaven, etc., was expressed quite strongly. Our Brother sang right through it all, while others of our faith stopped, declining to sing what they did not believe. Afterward the occurrence being under discussion, our Brother justified his action by saying that in using the words with his idea of heaven as the Kingdom, . . . [illegible] quote the promises made to Abraham and his seed, with their ideas in mind; the Advent Christians do the same, keeping in mind their own understanding of them. Well, brethren, let us keep right on with our ideas drawn from a literal understanding of these same promises, and keep watch of self and of the times, for soon they will be realized.—ED.]

Israel in Egypt—How Long?

We ought to hail with joy every effort to throw light upon the difficult passages in the Bible.

Brothers Lindsay and Browning have made a commendable effort in this direction to show how long Israel was in Egypt. If it is true what Bro. Lindsay says that the 430 years of Gal. iii. 17, measures the time from the promise made to Abraham to the giving of the law, then it is plain that Israel was in Egypt just 215 years. When he left Haran Abraham was 75 years old Gen. xii. 5. Isaac was born when Abraham was 100 years old. Gen. xxi 5. Jacob was born when Isaac was 60 years old. Gen. xxv. 26. Jacob went into Egypt with his family when he was 130 years old. Gen. xlvii. 9.

Adding we have:—

From call to Isaac.....	25 years
From Isaac to Jacob	60 years
From Jacob to Egypt.....	130 years
Total from call to Egypt	215 years

Now if the whole sojourn in Egypt and Canaan was 430 years as given by the Septuagint, if we subtract the sojourn in Canaan 215 years from the total sojourn or 430 years, there will remain 215 years as the sojourn in Egypt.

But with this conclusion how shall we understand the 400 years of Gen. xv. 13, 14? "Thy seed shall be a stranger in a land that is not theirs, and shall afflict them 400 years, and also that nation whom they serve, will I judge, and afterward shall they come out with a very great substance."

1. This text cannot refer to the nations in Canaan, for it is in the singular, "that nation."

2. They are to come out after God judges that nation, which seems to refer to the judgments poured out upon Egypt to compel Pharoah to let Israel go.

3. "In the fourth generation they shall come hither again." This shows that the place of bondage was not in Canaan for they were to come to Canaan from the place of bondage See ver. 16.

4. Abraham's seed was never in bondage until they went down into Egypt. Abraham himself was a noted warrior and conquered four kings and rescued Lot. Gen. xiv. 14-16.

Isaac waxed rich and powerful so that the Philistines envied and feared him; and their king Abimelech made a covenant with him.

The nearest we come to any servitude before that of Egypt, was when Jacob served Laban for his two wives which was a voluntary and perhaps pleasant service.

This 400 years of bondage certainly cannot be crowded into 215 years; and we may suppose while Israel was ruled by Joseph they were not in bondage, for they were in the best of the land until another "king arose who knew not Joseph."

Again, on the other hand if we make the sojourn in Egypt 430 years, we are confronted with another difficulty, viz: the genealogy of Moses; for his ancestors died at an age where their sum is less than 430, as shown by Brother Browning in RESTITUTION of Feb. 11.

Again, by reference to Gen. xxi, it will be seen that Isaac was born in Canaan. If the call was 25 years before his birth as is shown, then it was 405 years of bondage in Egypt and Canaan, as 405 plus 25 equal 430.

It may be said that it is not enough at 405 years. No. God never makes a mistake. We are dealing with inspiration and five years is an error, and some how we are wrong in those figures.

The call of Abraham and the promise to him was before he left Ur. Upon the supposition that the 430 years began there, we have too much time, for Abraham was not 75 years old until he departed from Haran, and Isaac was born 25 years after. Gen. xii. 14; xxi. 5; Acts vii. 2-4.

Starting at Haran with 430 years we have five years too many for 400 years sojourn in Canaan and Egypt, for Isaac was born in Canaan.

Bro. Browning has Israel in Egypt 240 years. Taking 240 from 430 we have 220 as the . . . [illegible] to know where the 430 years of Gal. iii. 17 ends, viz: at the giving of the law;—to find their beginning is the problem. If 400 years spans the pilgrimage may not the 430 have begun about five years after leaving HARAN, when Abraham was in Canaan, when the covenant was "confirmed," after his return from Egypt; at the time narrated in Gen. xv? Who can give us the facts?

Yours asking for light.

THE FATHER GLORIFIED.

John xv. 8, "Herein is my Father glorified, that ye may bear much fruit." From this we learn that in order to glorify the Father, we must bear fruit, and to do this we must first abide in the true vine depicted in the preceding verses. After we have become a component part of this vine which is Christ, our first object should always be "The glory of God." As in other things let us take Jesus as our example now. His first object was always to do the Father's will. Look at him in the temple when but twelve years old. You all know the story and it will not be necessary for me to repeat it. But when the anxious mother said, "Son, why hast thou thus dealt with?" His answer was, "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" Here we see he was willing even at this age to do his Father's will, and all through his life, all that he said and did was to the honor and glory of God. We can do no better than to read his prayer just before his betrayal in the 17th of John as an example. Read the 17th of John. How closely Jesus was united to the Father and we must be united to Jesus before we can bear fruit.

Brothers and sisters, have we attained to this height of Christianity? The standard cannot be placed too high. I feel that I have come far short of it, but let us strive to attain to the standard that Jesus has left for us, that we may be one with him in all things, then we will glorify the Father and the Father will be glorified in us. We should not only cultivate the fruits of righteousness in ourselves but we should let our light shine that men may see our good works and glorify our Father which is in heaven. We should scatter the seed and strive if possible to show one the way of life. We are told that every branch that beareth not fruit he taketh away, and every branch that beareth fruit, he purgeth it that it may bring forth more fruit. Here we have the two classes. Although they are both in the vine, yet one bears no fruit and in time the sap or life leaves it; it withers up and is taken away that the others may not become polluted by it. On the other hand the Father purges or prunes all the branches that bear fruit. He takes away all obstacles that hinder their growth and fruitfulness. This to me is a beautiful thought. If the Father sees in us a willingness to do his will and a desire to bear fruit, he takes away any obstacle that may hinder us. What a loving Father we have and how we should strive to honor and glorify his name. Let us strive to reach the standard that the beloved Paul did, for he tells us in I Cor. x. 31; "Whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God." Brothers and sisters, let us make this a golden text and apply it to all that we do and say. I know it would help us all to walk closer in the footsteps of Jesus. It would help us when we are tempted to seek worldly pleasure and associations, or when we are tempted to form habits that are contrary to the teachings of Jesus and his apostles. If we would stop and ask ourselves if this would be to the glorifying of God, it would not take us long to decide the question. The way is very narrow. We cannot glorify God by trying once or twice a week to do his will. We must deny ourselves of everything that has a tendency to draw us away or keep us from the association of those that are striving to walk the narrow way and to glorify our Father in heaven. Do we feel that it is hard to deny ourselves of so many pleasures? But have we not enlisted to suffer? Do we learn of Jesus indulging in worldly pleasures? No. After teaching and preaching and days of weary travel, instead of a comfortable bed and refreshing sleep we see him spending all night in prayer, and this for us dear brothers and sisters. So cannot we crucify the flesh for a little while and strive to gain his approbation? What are all the pleasures of the world compared to . . . [illegible]

Philip Preached Christ.

Philip was one of seven chosen by the church at Jerusalem to proclaim the Word of the Lord. After the death of Stephen he went down into Samaria and preached the Word. Acts viii. 4. Is it not fair to suppose that he preached just what the apostles had been commanded to preach after Christ arose from the dead? The apostles were commanded to preach "the gospel to every creature," and those who should believe and be baptized should be saved. The word gospel as we have previously stated means good news. The gospel of the kingdom of God then must mean good news concerning the kingdom of God. If it does not contain this element it is another gospel. We are told by some that if we believe in any part of the Bible it is good news or gospel.

After that Christ arose from the dead he was forty days with them and "speaking of the things concerning the kingdom of God." Acts i. 3. Is there a word in this about a kingdom in the hearts of men or a church kingdom? Let us see. "When they were therefore come together, they asked him (Christ) saying, Lord, will thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?" Acts i. 4. Now who is speaking, to whom and what are they speaking about? Evidently the apostles are speaking to Christ, about the kingdom of Israel. What was the condition of this kingdom at this time? Ezek. xxi. 27. I will overturn, overturn, overturn it; and it shall be no more, until he comes whose right it is; and I give it him. Is it not true that the prophet is here speaking of that kingdom. It was the kingdom over which David ruled, also called the kingdom of God. It is asserted that the apostles did not know the nature of this kingdom. They thinking it to be a literal kingdom, but Christ taught that he came to establish a spiritual kingdom. Now if this be true Christ should have so stated when he answered their question "Wilt thou at this time restore," etc. But we hear him say, it is not for you to know the times or the seasons, which the Father hath put in his power. He does not reprove them for their ignorance as some suppose, but that it was not for them to know the times or the season of this very important event of the restoration of the kingdom to Israel. I cannot conceive how an intelligent person can so torture language as to give it this meaning. Not a word about sky kingdom or a church kingdom, but simply the kingdom of God or of Israel. Now to preach the restoration of the kingdom to Israel is to do what the angel said God would do for his Son, viz., give to him the throne of his father David. Luke i. 32. When Philip preached to the Samaritans, the record says he preached Christ. Can his message mean less than that preached by Christ to his apostles? We think not and yet we have those who say that Christ preached a gospel of promise, but his apostles after Pentecost preached a gospel of facts. Did Peter in his sermon on Pentecost state that this change was to take place? If so where may we find it? Did he not preach that God raised Christ from the dead to sit on David's throne? Acts ii. 30. We find no change made in the gospel. The preaching of today is to take a text and point out some thought or word, and emphasize it, applying the thought to each individual. I heard a preacher not long ago preach from the text, "Go ye therefore and teach all nations," etc. In his whole discourse there was not a word said about what they were to preach. He emphasized the thought "Go ye." This was not in a country church but a city of 8000 inhabitants. What a splendid opportunity is here afforded of preaching Christ as the heir to David's throne and kingdom and Abraham's seed who should bless all nations. When Philip preached to the Samaritans he preached the "things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ." Now the very same phraseology is found in Acts viii. 12 as found in Acts i. 3. If the apostles understood Christ to mean the restoring of the kingdom of Israel Philip must have meant the same. So we understand that he taught that Christ would one day rule over Israel and the whole earth. Then shall his dominion extend from sea to sea and from the river unto the ends of the earth. Psa. lxxii. 8. It is also stated that when they believed they were baptized both men and women. Would their immersion have been valid if they believed something else? First ... the gospel of the Kingdom or baptism is of no value. Just as well believe in a sky kingdom or a kingdom in the heart, as to believe in a church kingdom as taught by Campbell and others.

We may search the Scriptures through for any other gospel than that taught by Christ and his apostles and we shall find that our labor is in vain. We will also find that we have neglected that great salvation which at the first began to be spoken by the Lord and was confirmed unto us by them that heard him." Let us beware lest we let so great a gift slip from us by listening to a gospel that is not the gospel of Christ. Let us be as consistent as the merchantman seeking goodly pearls, who when he had found one pearl of great price, went and sold all he had, and bought it. One grain of truth is of more value than mountains of error. Ah, but the truth is unpopular. If we stand for the gospel of the kingdom we are at variance with all the religious world. When we occupy this position are we not following in his steps? Did not the apostles oppose the popular teaching of their day. The question of preaching today among the clergy is what does doctor so and so say about this Scripture. Depending largely for an exposition of the Scripture on the researches made by some learned man of the schools of today. May we not learn a lesson from the child Jesus disputing with doctors of the law and surprising them with his questions? In this day every church has its school of theology from which are sent young men, not to preach the gospel of Christ, but what they have learned in their school. To the Corinthians Paul said, For we are laborers together with God; ye are God's husbandry; ye are God's building. According to the grace of God which is given unto me as a wise master-builder, I have laid the foundation, and another buildeth thereon. But let every man take heed how he buildeth thereupon, for other foundations can no man lay than that is laid, which is Christ Jesus. 1 Cor. iii. 9, 10, 11. Did the apostles teach the Corinthians that any man has the right to lay a foundation and build thereupon? He says, "We are laborers together with God. Ye are God's husbandry, ye are God's building. God has but one structure built upon one foundation, which is Christ Jesus. Peter calls him the Christ, the Son of the living God. How beautifully Christ represents this thought in St. John xv., I am the true vine, and my Father is the husbandman. Every branch in me that beareth not fruit he taketh away; and every branch that beareth fruit he purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit. If Christ is the vine and his true followers the branches and God the husbandman, how can it be that so many different fruits appear in the religious world. No it can not be. "Now ye are clean through the Word which I have spoken unto you." May this Word ever dwell with us is the prayer of your brother.

IMPORTANT NOTICES.

All persons addressing us should give their name, postoffice, county and state, plainly and distinctly.

All letters should be addressed to "THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Marshall, Co., Ind."

Remittance should be sent by bank draft, postoffice money orders, or express orders. Money sent in either of the above ways is at our risk, money sent loose in letters is at the risk of the sender. It is folly to think that you can fold bills in a letter so that no one can tell it, for one who handles much mail matter can almost invariably tell a letter with money in it. Take warning and send safely.

All remittances should be made payable to the order of "THE RESTITUTION."

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

In ordering books or tracts get the latest copy of the paper you have and order only what you see advertised in that.

When desiring a change of address, give both your old and new address.

By complying strictly with the above you will save us much annoyance, and your order will be much more promptly attended.

Scriptures Opened.

A third edition of the above named work is just out, and ready for delivery. This book has been before our readers so long now that its worth is well known. The author is Robert Ashcroft. The price for this edition is put low so that the brethren and sisters can get it to lend to honest enquirers after truth. We hope there are a few who have not turned their ears from the truth to fables. The book will speak for itself in its unfoldings of the purposes and plans of Jehovah, regarding the near future of the earth and its inhabitants. All should be interested in these truths, and those who have never read this book will have a feast. Price 65 cents post paid. Send to this office for them, or orders can be sent to J. C. Woodruff, Elizabeth N. J.

Our Helping Fund.

We whose names are given herewith, believing that it is our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending THE RESTITUTION to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our names for the purpose of aiding the managers of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund to be applied as the donors request, (or when left to the publisher to decide) only for those who themselves state their circumstances and need, or whose case is presented by some one known to be trustworthy.

Popular Lectures by M. Joblin.

Brethren and Sisters, Have you loved ones who think sincerity will save them? Have you friends who think they worship acceptably while ignorant of God's promises? Have you acquaintances with false hopes of heaven, or who believe themselves immortal by nature, or who think their sins are forgiven, although they are ignorant of the Law of Pardon, or who have no use for a God who consigns sinners to Eternal Torment, and are ignorant of Jehovah's beneficent purpose to fill the earth with his glory and bestow Eternal Life upon believers of the Gospel, so they can enjoy it for ever? If so, send for Popular Lectures by Bro. Joblin, entitled:—"The Kingdom of God;" "Old Mother Earth to Be Born Again;" "Strangers from the Covenants of Promise;" "Vain Worship;" "No Immortality Out of Christ;" "Hope Begotten by the Resurrection of Christ;" "God's Love and Solicitude for Mankind;" and "What Shall We Do to be Saved?"

A Word of Appreciation.

Some time ago I asked the brotherhood through THE RESTITUTION how many copies of the pamphlet "The Reasons of My Withdrawal from the Evangelical Association," would be wanted. Letters came from all parts of the country, some containing money stating the number of copies desired, so that a second edition of 1000 was printed. I wish to state that this edition is nearly exhausted, there being only about 150 left. Those wishing copies better send their orders early, as they will soon be gone. I desire, by this means, to thank the brethren for their encouraging words and financial help. Trusting that the seed will fall in good soil and produce fruit unto eternal life. 25 pages, at 5 cents per copy. A. H. Zilmer, Plymouth, Ind.

Consolation.

Soul, why art thou lonely?
Jesus is thy Friend;
He will walk beside thee
To thy journey's end.

Do not be dismayed when Obstacles arise!
God can ever throw them;
He is great and wise.

Why art thou so fearful?
Jesus cares for thee;
He has sought thy welfare
As the best to be.

Soul, why art thou doubting?
Jesus' Word is sure;
Rest thee, calm and trusting—
God and Hope secure.

Be not then despondent!
All is going well:
Jesus truly loves thee,
More than thou canst tell.

Yield not to thy sorrow!
Make not sunshine cool!
Jesus' loyal children
Trust him and are glad

When Will Jesus Come?

Before Jesus was baptized and entered upon his ministry, John the Baptist came preaching in the wilderness, saying, "Repent ye for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." His converts were baptised unto repentance.

When did the Jewish or Mosaic dispensation close? When did the Christian era begin? Was it at the time that John the Baptist commenced to preach, or was it at the time Jesus commenced his ministry? John was the forerunner of Jesus. His proclamation was "Prepare ye the way of the Lord; make his paths straight." His followers were not required to keep the law, but they were required to repent, and be baptized for the remission of sins.

May we not conclude that the Jewish dispensation closed at the time John the Baptist commenced to preach? If the law had been in force during the time of his preaching, his disciples would have been required to have kept it.

I have said this much relative to the close of the Jewish dispensation and to the commencement of the Christian era for the purpose of leading up to the discussion of the closing of "Gentile times" and the commencement of the Millennium or next age.

Many judgments have been pronounced against Judah and Israel because of the rejection of the Messiah. Let us look into the prophecies which relate to these people, and ascertain what God has said relative to them. They were once the favored people of God. That was many hundreds of years ago. Our Heavenly Father has punished them most severely because of their great sin, but there is a better day coming for them, when they shall again be highly favored by Him who doeth all things well.

Israel and Judah must first acknowledge Christ as their Messiah as a condition precedent to being relieved from the judgments which have been pronounced against them, by reason of their rejection of him when he came the first time.

Blindness in part has happened to Israel until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in. Rom. ii. 25. The meaning is not that blindness has happened to part of Israel; but blindness as to part of the prophecies has happened to them. What was the blindness? They did not fully understand the prophecies that relate to Jesus, and therefore they rejected him. This blindness will not be taken away "until the fullness of the Gentiles be come in."

"Nevertheless when it (Israel) shall turn to the Lord, the vail shall be taken away." 2 Cor. iii. 16. When shall the vail be taken off? "When Israel shall turn to the Lord." When will Israel turn to the Lord? When the blindness is removed. When will that be done? After the close of "Gentile times."

Let me call attention to some very plain prophecies found in Ezek. xxxix. with reference to Israel. Ver. 22, "So the house of Israel shall know that I am the Lord their God from that day and forward." What day? Why the day that the Lord destroys the army of Gog on the mountains of Israel, after the great battle of Armageddon. This takes place before the second advent of the Lord.

Again Ezekiel says, "And the heathen shall know that the house of Israel went into captivity for their iniquity. . . . Therefore thus saith the Lord God, now will I bring again the captivity of Jacob, and have mercy upon the whole house of Israel, . . . when I have brought them again from the people, and gather them out of their enemies' land, and am sanctified in them in the sight of many nations. Then shall they know that I am the Lord their God, ... neither will I hide my face any more from them; for I have poured out my spirit upon the house of Israel, saith the Lord God." Ezek. xxxix 23. 25. 27-29.

Every Bible student knows that these prophecies have not yet been fulfilled. That being true, Jacob is still in captivity, and God has not yet exercised his "mercy upon the whole house of Israel."

The prophet says, "Then shall they know that I am the Lord their God." When will they know it? After they are brought back from their captivity and not before.

The prophet Isaiah says, "It shall come to pass in that day that the Lord shall set his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people, ... and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel." Isa. xi. 11.

"Behold I will take the children of Israel from among the heathen, . . . and bring them into their own land, and will make of them one nation." Ezek. xxxvii. 21. If the children of Israel are dispersed among the heathen they cannot be identical with the English speaking people, for the reason that these people constitute two distinct nations, viz: England and the United States, neither of which are heathen.

"Behold the days come, saith the Lord, when I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel and with the house of Judah." Heb. viii. 9-11. The eleventh verse shows that this takes place after the second advent of Christ. Will the Lord attempt to convert the Israelites until after he makes this new covenant with them?

"When the Lord shall bring back the captivity of his people, Jacob shall rejoice and Israel shall be glad." Ps. xiv. 7; liii. 6. This shows that Israel is in captivity.

"Thou hast brought back the captivity of Jacob." Ps. lxxxv. 1.

"The Lord hideth his face from the house of Jacob." Isa. viii. 17. Israel is not now the favored people, but they will be after they acknowledge Christ as their Messiah. But not before.

At a time when the nation of Israel was one of the most powerful nations in the world, Moses prophesied of them as follows, "Thou shalt become an astonishment, a proverb, and a by-word among all nations." Deut. xxviii 37. He further prophesied of them, "The Lord shall scatter thee among all people, from one end of the earth even unto the other; and there thou shalt serve other gods, which neither thou nor thy fathers have known, even wood and stone." Deut. xxviii. 64. What gods were these people to serve during their captivity? Wood and stone. This prophecy shows that they will not, during the time of their scattering, serve the true God. Does not this show that lost Israel must be looked for among the heathen nations who worship gods made of wood and stone? I think it does most conclusively.

"For the Lord shall have mercy on Jacob, and will yet choose Israel, and set them in their own land." Isa. xiv. 1. Notwithstanding the fact that the Israelites are now bowing down to wood and stone, God will in due time have mercy on them and restore them to their own land.

From the foregoing quotations we learn that Judah and Israel will not be restored until the close of "Gentile times." This brings me to the main question, Will Gentile times close before Jesus comes? I shall not do more than make some suggestions. The thought sometimes comes to me that we are very near, if we have not already reached the end of the Gentile times. The prophecies are so very positive that no interest will be awakened among the Jews until the close of Gentile times, that I am, at times, when I read of the great awakening among the Jews in many countries, and throughout many lands, strongly inclined to believe that Gentile times have come to an end.

Generally speaking Jesus comes at the close of Gentile times, and raises the dead saints, changes the living ones, is united in marriage with them and inaugurates the Millenial reign. We know that Jesus has not yet come, but may it not be as it was in the days of John the Baptist, when there was a short space of time intervening between the close of the Mosaic age and the inauguration of the Christian era. May there not also be a short space of time intervening between the end of Gentile times and the coming of the Lord.

The interest that is being manifest by the Jews, in nearly all parts of the world, is very much greater than we realize. The secular press, knowing very little of the prophecies relating to the Jews, takes little or no interest in the matter, and for that reason very little is heard of the matter. The fact is many periodicals are being published and circulated by Jews in which they acknowledge that Jesus is their Messiah, and that he will soon come the second time. The Zionist movement is also world-wide.

Without expressing any opinion, I leave these suggestions with the readers of THE RESTITUTION.

One thing is certain, if our chronology, which is only human, is correct, Gentile times have run out. Most Bible expositors agree that they ran out in 1897 or 1898. Certain it is that we are in the very last days of this dispensation. Jesus will come very soon to bless the world. The time for work is very short. What we do must be done quickly.

Come Lord Jesus, come quickly, is the prayer of your humble brother.

SPIRITUALLY MINDED.

When we heard of God's gracious love for us and that there was a way by which we could escape death (everlasting death) by a glorious resurrection, and when we decided to take upon ourselves the all saving name of Christ Jesus, there was a complete change in our minds, yes, the change was so complete it brought into play just the opposite from that we had been a victim to, an oft heard expression which is, The putting on the new man. Paul says in Eph. iv. 22, 23, 24, "That ye put off concerning the former conversation the old man, which is corrupt according to the deceitful lusts, and be renewed in the spirit of your mind, and that ye put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness." By this renewing or change we become spiritually minded. Our minds must be continually devoted to godly ideas, and in order to accomplish this must be dwelling on things above. In Paul's epistle to the Colossians he writes, "If ye then be risen with Christ seek those things which are above where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God." The spiritual mind finds nothing in this sinful world but sorrow, pain and trouble, and wonderful to relate it looks upon these as mere expectancies and with a light heart, and why? Because it has the blessed assurance, if we suffer with him we shall also reign with him. And how? In great glory, reign in peace and reign forever. One of the greatest privileges the spiritual mind embraces is, access to the throne of grace, where mercy may be obtained and where assistance in time of need can be found. Heb. iv. 16. Another privilege, the privilege of meeting around the Lord's table to keep in remembrance his dying love for us. Another: Of meeting together with those of like precious faith and partaking of the same spiritual food as the disciples did. To the spiritual minded these are indeed valuable and precious privileges. Did any of us ever stop to think what it was that enabled us to be continually in this frame of mind? The answer is found in Titus ii. 13 looking for that glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ. It is that blessed hope. All through this rough voyage this blessed hope is the lifeline to the spiritual minded, and if they hold firm they will surely escape death. My prayer is that, when the Master comes he will find us all spiritually minded, awaiting his glorious appearance.

HARRY POTT.

SPIRITUALLY MINDED.

For to be carnally minded is death, but to be spiritually minded is life and peace. Rom. viii. 6. Here it is distinctly shown that there is a vast difference between the carnal and spiritual mind—one being at enmity or against God, the other being in favor with God. The point emphasized here and which should be carefully noticed, and, in fact, which is taught throughout the entire book of God, is, that it is one or the other, for or against God, therefore it is certain that we cannot be both carnally and spiritually minded at the same time. We must be out and out with God or not at all. By turning to Matt. vi. 24, we read, No man can serve two masters, for either he will hate the one and love the other, or else he will hold to the one and despise the other. Ye cannot serve God and mammon. At one time we were all carnally minded, but by the grace of God we were allowed to see the light of the gospel as it is in Christ Jesus, and since have enjoyed the blessed privilege of being spiritually minded, if not we would not be here this, and each first day of the week drinking in these glorious truths. Isn't it a blessing to possess such a mind as this? It is certainly pleasing to God. Now brothers and sisters, we enlisted to work for Jesus, therefore we are to exercise our minds and reveal those truths to others, and show them by our works that they too may become co-heirs with Jesus and be partakers of endless life. But let no man beguile us from our reward. Watch and pray that ye enter not into temptation, the spirit indeed is willing but the flesh is weak. Matt. xxiv. 41. God is ever present with us and let us love him all the more as we see the day approaching, also endeavor to renew our minds and be more earnest in our daily life, so that when Jesus comes to gather his saints we will be among the chosen ones.

JESSIE NICHOLLS.

SPIRITUALLY MINDED.

As each Sunday rolls around and the approach of our Lord draws nearer how is it with us? Are we working for the Lord, heeding the injunction, not to forsake the assembling of ourselves together, but exhorting one another, and so much the more as ye see the day approaching. If we are God's children we bear the name of Jesus on our foreheads, we have left the world and are striving to grow up in the knowledge and favor of God, striving to be spiritually minded that we may have the reward, life and peace. To be ever thinking of ourselves and our desires and forgetting to be thankful for the blessings the gracious Lord has bestowed upon us, we will become carnally minded. It is very easy to drift into bad habits, easy to let the love of others things creep in when the love of God is not shed abroad in our hearts. We are made up of flesh and the flesh is weak, so if we do not guard our actions and our thoughts we will be carnally minded. But brothers and sisters, there must be a struggle for eternal life and only the fittest shall enter the kingdom of God. We must be permeated with kindness, patience and brotherly love. It does not do to let a single day go by without our spiritual food if we wish to be spiritually minded. Brethren, if we would study Jesus' life more, study to show ourselves approved unto God a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, we would grow in grace and favor with God, and more like our living head and pattern Jesus Christ. And it pays to give ourselves up to spiritual life, to be filled with that blessed hope; if we will draw closer together and take a firm hold on the divine arm we would work harder and grow more and be ready to say at any time with Paul, I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith, henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord the righteous Judge shall give me at that day, but not to me only, but to all them that love his appearing.

HATTIE PATE.

A choice has been granted to us in the 6th verse of the 8th chapter of Romans, a choice between life and death. "For to be carnally minded is death, but to be spiritually minded is life and peace." What has been our choice? Is it life or is it death? If we mind the things of the flesh, death will be our reward. "Because the carnal mind is enmity against God; for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be." If we dwell in the flesh, we cannot please God, a thing which should be our highest ambition, that of pleasing our Father. What higher position can we hold, brothers and sisters, than that of working for God, and doing things to please him? The carnal mind will not let us do it. We cannot expect God to place any confidence in us if his Spirit does not dwell in us. We cannot be of two minds for they will not act in harmony with each other. We must either be wholly carnally minded or wholly spiritually minded. What is it to be carnally minded? If our mind is occupied by the things of this world, that is, the pleasures and frivolities which it affords, and our time is taken up with them, then we are certainly minding the things of the flesh, and death stares us in the face. We cannot help but be spiritually minded when we come here every first day and partake of these emblems which represent the body and blood of our Savior, and drink in the blessed truths which are poured out to us from the desk and from the table. Our minds are certainly turned to God and to Jesus, but I hope that it is not only here that we dwell upon these truths but all the week until we meet together again. If we do this the spiritual mind will surely crowd out the carnal mind. If we are Christians we should let the Holy Spirit always work in us. "Quench not the Spirit" means that we should never hinder the Spirit's influence in our hearts, that we should let the light shine in us and the fire burn, and should give our lives up more and more to the Spirit, following his guidence. This will lead us to hold fast to all that is good, and reject every form of evil. "Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? Shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword?

As it is written, for thy sake we are killed all the day long, we are accounted as sheep for the slaughter.

Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors through him that loved us.

For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come.

Nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord." Rom. viii. 35-39.

I trust, brothers and sisters, that from now on we will all take this stand that nothing no matter how small or how great the circumstance may be shall separate us from the love of God. It is the love of God and of Christ that makes us spiritually minded. My prayer is that we may all dwell more and more on the things of the Spirit, and at last receive the great reward, life and peace forevermore.

BESSIE NICHOLLS.

SPIRITUALLY MINDED.

For to be carnally minded is death, but to be spiritually minded is life and peace. Rom. viii. 6. In Eph. v. 18 Paul tells us to be filled with the Spirit. In Psa. v. 10, David prays, "Create in me a clear heart, O God, and renew a right spirit within me." Is this our prayer this morning, brethren? Do we pray that we may be spiritually minded? We have the emblems of our Savior's broken body and shed blood before us, are we carried back in the Spirit and see the suffering of Jesus on the cross and his agony in the garden? And is his suffering our suffering, and are we carried forward in the Spirit to his second coming when he shall come in great honor and glory, and we shall receive our reward life and peace? Are our affections set on things above where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God? Are we sitting in heavenly places with Christ Jesus? If so, then we have a right Spirit renewed within us, we are spiritually minded. May it be said of us that we "walk with God," and our reward shall be life and peace.

GEORGE NEILL.

Obituary.

Death has claimed another victim from the little band of believers near Delta, Ohio, in the person of Brother Thomas Meridow. Brother M. died Feb. 19, 1903. He was born in England, and came to this country in 1885. He was married twice, his first companion dying in England. He leaves a widow and nine children. His age was a little more than 54 years.

After a great struggle with the truth he became a member of the Church. Of this body he was a respected member up to the time of his death. His death is a great loss, which will be felt keenly, not only by his family, but also by the Church. He was beloved by all for the sterling qualities of his character. His life was one of devotion and loyalty to Christ. One of his favorite themes was the second coming of Jesus Christ, and he had the wish that he might be permitted to live until this glorious event. This wish he could not realize. However, this will not prevent him from enjoying the benefits of "the glorious appearing of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ."

We laid him to rest on Saturday, Feb. 21, 1903, to await the summons that shall call God's sleeping ones from their resting places.

"We shall sleep, but not forever,
There will be a glorious dawn;
We shall meet to part, no never,
On the resurrection morn."

May this thought gladden the hearts of the sorrowing widow and children.

A. H. ZELMER.

Death has again entered our ranks and taken away one of our number. Mrs. Sarah Taylor died Feb. 20, 1903, at the age of 71 years, 5 months, and 26 days.

In sadness and in tears we gathered around the open grave and read the promises of God concerning the resurrection to comfort the bereaved, and we prayed "Come Lord Jesus, come quickly." Then we left her to rest until the voice of the Life Giver shall awake the dead.

Rest in hope. Sleep in peace.

Alive Forevermore.

A story is told of Lepaux, a member of the French Directory, that with much thought and study he had invented a new religion, to be called "Theophilanthropy," a kind of organized Rousseauism, and that being disappointed in its not being readily approved and adopted, he complained to Talleyrand of the difficulty he found in introducing it.

"I am not surprised," said Talleyrand, "at the difficulty you find in your effort. It is no easy matter to introduce a new religion. But there is one thing I would advise you to do, and then perhaps you might succeed."

"What is it? What is it?" asked the other, with eagerness.

"It is this," said Talleyrand; "go and be crucified, then be buried, and then, rise again the third day, and then go on working miracles, raising the dead, and healing all manner of diseases and casting out devils, and then it is possible that you might accomplish your end."

And the philosopher, crestfallen and confounded, went away silent.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Ill-regulated zeal judges without reflection, and acts without charity.

It is easier to do a great deal of mischief than to accomplish a little good.

"The rays of the sun soften wax, but harden clay. To some glad tidings of salvation are a savor of life unto life; to others a savor of death unto death."

Pope Leo XIII gave audience to 42 of his cardinals, March 1, and during the interview he "referred with emphasis to his approaching death." He is very feeble.

"A tomb is a house built for a skeleton—a dwelling of sculptured marble provided for dust and corruption; a monument set up to perpetuate the memory of—the forgotten."

"There is no better foundation for public or private usefulness than a meek, modest temper; gentle, and ready to yield as far as good conscience will allow—but yet standing firm and stable amid contradiction and opposition."

Time is the vehicle that carries every thing into nothing. We talk of spending our time, as if it were so much interest or perpetual annuity, whereas we are all living on our capital, and he who wastes a single day, throws away that which can never be recalled or recovered.

Those who imagine that self-denial intrenches upon our liberty, do not know that it is this only that can make us free indeed, giving us the liberty over ourselves, setting us free from the bondage of our corruption, enabling us to bear affliction, to foresee them without alarm, enlightening the mind, sanctifying the will and making as too slight those baubles which others contend for.

The following comes from St. Petersburg, under date of March 1—Some publicists are of the opinion that only the sternest language toward Turkey can prevent a war between Russia and Turkey in the spring. They believe that Turkey will pursue bands of Macedonian revolutionists across the Bulgarian frontier, and that public opinion will compel Russia to interfere. The Russians thoroughly understand that a war with Turkey will be a more severe one than that of 1878. Officers are quoted as saying that the Turkish army is the best in the world, owing to its German organization and armament. There is an inclination to anticipate German financial support for Turkey, and, in view of the situation, forebodings of a clash with Turkey are freely expressed in private, though they are carefully suppressed in the newspapers.

Mastery of Self.

The mastery of self is the end of true living, and this mastery is shown, not in the negative attitude, by the things we do not do, but by that mental power that compels the mind to the positive attitude—the forcing of the mind to do that against which it rebels. The man gains strength as he works. His ability comes through the doing. We are constantly met by the disagreeable fact that our happiness, and often our success, is defeated by the tyranny of trifles which, if they were met in the normal way, with healthy attitude of mind, would hardly be discovered to exist. To attach importance to trifles evinces a lack of perspective, and a loss of balance in life.

The Pope and the Bible.

We recently called attention to the changed attitude of the Papacy to the Bible, and remarked that the Pope must have been converted. Apropos of this, we today came upon the historic fact that he on Feb. 25, 1890 issued an "Apostolic constitution on the censure of books," the text of which is as follows:—

Section I. Since experience has proven that on account of man's boldness more evil than good arises if the sacred books are allowed to all without check in the vernacular tongue (that is the mother tongue) wherefore all versions in the vernacular, even though made by Catholics, are entirely forbidden, unless approved by the Holy See, or issued under the care of bishops, with notes taken from the Holy Fathers of the church, and from learned Catholic writers."

Section II. "Those who without the approbation of the Ordinary, print or cause to be printed the books of the sacred Scriptures, or notes or commentaries upon them, ipso facto, that is by the fact of printing them, under excommunication unreserved."

This shows plainly that hitherto the Bible has been kept from the people. But it is evident that a change of policy has taken place if nothing more."

Scientific Sidelights.

According to Marion's Popular Astronomy the earth at a few miles distant seems a dead world. When astronomers declare that the moon is uninhabited because they see nothing moving, they are singularly deceived in the value of telescopic testimony. At some miles high in a balloon, with a clear sky and beautiful sunshine, we distinguish with the naked eye, towns, woods, fields, meadows, rivers, roads; but we see nothing moving, and the impression felt directly is of silence, solitude, and the absence of life. Living beings are no longer visible, and if we did not know that there are harvest men in the field, flocks in the meadows, birds in the woods, fish in the waters, there is nothing to make us realize their existence. If, then, the earth seems like a dead world when seen from only a few miles distance, what is it but illusion to assert that the moon is truly a dead world, because we view it at 120000 miles or more? for it is only exceptionally that we can use the highest magnifying powers, and in general we do not apply to the observation of the moon powers exceeding a thousand. What, then, can we see of life at such a distance? Assuredly nothing, for forests, plants, cities, all would disappear.

Mandsley's lecture p. 44, says that idiocy is a manufactured article, and that intemperance is a fruitful cause of imbecility. The congenital idiot is deprived of his human birthright, for he is born with such a defect of brain that he can display only very feeble functions. From no fault of his own is he thus afflicted.....But it is not so clear that it is not from some fault of his parents. It is all too true that in many cases there has been a neglect or disregard of the laws which govern the ages. Idiocy is indeed a manufactured article; and although we are not always able to tell how it is manufactured, still, important causes are known and are within control. Many cases are distinctly traceable to parental intemperance and excess. Out of 300 idiots in Massachusetts, Dr. Howe found as many as 145 to be the offspring of intemperate parents; and there are numerous scattered observations which prove that chronic alcoholism in the parent may directly occasion idiocy in the child. [See Alcohol and Heredity]. I think, too that there is no reasonable question of the ill effects of marriages of consanguinity; that their tendency is to produce degeneracy of the race, and idiocy as the extremest form of such degeneracy."

In Judd's Volcanos, ch. 12, p. 360, it says: "It must be admitted that we do not at present appear to have the means for framing a complete and consistent theory of volcanic action, but we may hopefully look forward to the time when further observation and experiment shall have removed many of the existing difficulties which beset the question, and when by the light of such future researches, untenable hypothesises shall be eliminated, and the just ones improved and established."

How England is Saving the Land of the Pharaohs.

The opening of the now famous Assouan Dam on December 8, 1902, by the Duke of Connaught, marks an epoch-making event in the irrigation of Egypt proper, and the further transformation of that fascinating land. This colossal work, begun in 1899, is most creditable to the British engineers, who have finished the undertaking months before the contract time.

Running straight across the Nile at Assouan, five hundred and eighty miles from Cairo, the dam consists of a great wall a mile and a quarter long, blocking up the channels through which the river in time of flood has been wont to race amid the rocky islets in its bed. This solid wall of masonry is twenty-four feet wide at the top, sixty-two feet wide at the foundations, and about eighty feet high, forming a reservoir sixty feet deep. It appears that the granite used has come from the quarries of the Pharaohs, and upon the construction of the dam from ten to twenty thousand Egyptians have been employed night and day. Its total cost will exceed six million pounds sterling.

This wonderful dam is pierced with one hundred and eighty upper sluices in order that, when the Nile is rising, the water will freely flow through them. As soon as it begins to fall, these will be closed, and the dam will hold back a lake one hundred and forty-six miles long, and a mile or less in breadth. By letting this stored-up water escape gradually into the ancient irrigation channels during the dry season, the plains of middle and lower Egypt will, it is anticipated, enjoy perpetual fertility and prosperity. No longer will there be a rushing, wasteful flood at one season, and a bed as dry as ashes at another period. The result must be all the difference between desolation and teeming abundance.

More truly than five centuries before Christ is the saying of Herodotus, "the father of history," being realized, that Egypt is "the gift of the Nile." Without the Nile no Egypt. This historic river—the longest in Africa, if not the world—draws its chief sources from the Victoria and Albert Nyanzas, while receiving from the torrents of rain which fall on the rocks of Abyssinia the valuable chemical ingredients of the rocks and soil, carried down the Nile by Abyssinian tributaries. When the river overflows its banks it deposits on the lower levels a fine mud, producing the most fertile soil in the world.

It is lamentable to consider the waste of precious liquid for ages at flood heights, and to learn that out of the four hundred thousand square miles of Egyptian territory only one-twentieth is really habitable; that is, the part washed by the Nile, where it is possible to raise annually two, three, and even four crops. Henceforward, instead of the narrow strips of green verdure, the outcome of rich soil, hot sun, and light cultivation, confined between the Nile banks and the high water line of the river in flood, boundless and unbroken stretches of dreary desert beyond will be irrigated by refreshing waters, and become transformed into landscapes of beauties and fruitfulness.

Happily the waters in the Delta, in season of flood, have long been gathered and distributed through capacious channels, for the benefit of the humblest toiler on the land. By these irrigation works, known as the Barrage, abundant maize and cotton crops have been gathered, and the fellahen saved from famine and distress, —only too common, in bygone generations, in time of low flood. Similarly, by the gigantic reservoir constructed at Assouan, the expense will be repaid many times over in the transformation of desert into cultivated land, from the first cataract to the Delta.

It is almost universally acknowledged that British occupation in Egypt has wrought marvels, of which the latest is a crowning achievement. Since the deposition of Ismail in 1879, more has been done than Egypt's rulers accomplished during centuries to establish justice, to raise the fellaheen from hereditary bondage, and to develop the untilled resources of a land "where all things always seemed the same."

In view of the success of Assouan, it has lately been proposed to construct a dam at Lake Tsana in Abyssinia, to supply water both for Upper Egypt and the Soudan; to erect bunkers on the Upper Nile, in order to avoid waste in the swamps of the Bahr-el-Ghazal; and, lastly, to construct a storage reservoir at Lake Albert Nyanza large enough to provide for the wants of the Soudan above Khertoum. These achievements mean that far up the Nile banks, burning deserts and swamps will steadily disappear, as in the "Great Southwest" of America, and in their place innumerable areas of fertile soil and civilization will be seen on either bank of the life-giving Nile, from the great African lakes to the tideless waters of the Mediterranean Sea.—James Johnston in S. S. Times.

Reader, have you plunged into the fountain of cleansing, that when the Lord shall "rain snares" on the wicked, you shall be safe? There is need that those who are not in the fountain act quickly, for the "Great day of the Lord is near, it is near, and hasteth greatly."—Mrs. M. A. Dake.

The Best Things.

These are the days of the best things. The best machinery; the best methods in the schools; the best things in the medical world; the best and nothing but the best everywhere will do for this bustling, busy world. The German Emperor lately ordered the demolition of a system of fortifications, which half a century ago cost fifty million dollars to construct, because they were not the best, and were therefore, unfit to withstand modern siege methods. The junk piles in the yards of all our great manufacturing plants are piled high with rusting heaps of machinery which cost fabulous sums of money a few years ago, all thrown aside, because they were not the best. Nothing but the best efforts that a man can put forth will satisfy an employer today. The "hustler" who does his best is the man who succeeds.

In the gospel work of today this principle finds its fullest application. If we are to hold our ground and make headway against sin, and win souls for God, we need and must have the very best equipment that God has for us. We must remember, also, that the "best" things come high, and if we would have the "best" we must be willing to pay the price. The Old Testament, which is the kindergarten of the gospel school, gives very rich illustrations of this thought.

THE ANOINTING.

When Aaron and his family were called to the priesthood, God said to him: "Thou shalt have no inheritance in their land, neither shalt thou have any part among them. I am thy part and thine inheritance." Aaron and his sons were to be God's ministers in the holy place, and in the holiest of all, and for the glory of this position they were called upon to forfeit all rights to property and lands. Poor Aaron! Poor? No, indeed! Is not God more than lands? is not the privilege of living in his very presence more than flocks and herds? "By reason of the anointing" to this service, that is to say, because Aaron and his sons had been anointed to the priestly office, there was given to them the most wonderful provision for their subsistence. They were to have "the most holy things," and "all the hallowed things," and "every devoted thing," and "whatever is first ripe in the land," and "all the best of the oil," and "all the best of the wine and the wheat," even "all the best" of everything which was hallowed to the Lord.

All his sons and daughters, "by a statute forever," were to have these things. The only condition exacted was, that they be "clean."

In the gospel and in Christian experience these things have their spiritual fulfillment. Paul tells us in Hebrews —according to the Revised Version— of a "great priest." Like Aaron, he had no part in the world, and like Aaron he received from God the "best" things. As all of Aaron's family had share in God's gifts to him, so also, all the family of our high priest are made partakers with Jesus. Be sure you have the best.

This provision gives the very best weapons for the minister, with which to fight for God. President Roosevelt in a late speech insisted on smokeless powder for the entire army, because the old black powder was not the best. It had too much smoke, and too little carrying power. Don't be satisfied, my brother, with smoke and noise, but pay the full price and get the best.

Seven years after crossing the Jordan seven of the twelve tribes had not gotten possession of their inheritance. Joshua called the heads of the families together and said to them: "How long will ye be slack to go to possess the land which the Lord God of your fathers hath given you?" That is the trouble. We are too slack. Get the best.—D. T. Cull, in Crisis.

If some one could preach a crusade of honesty or honor, calling upon all Christians to be just as honest with God as with their fellowmen, the question of missionary finances might soon solve itself.—Baptist Missionary Review.

The famous portrait painter, Von Leubach, had more medals and emblems of recognition, including that of knighthood, than any living artist, says a writer in the March Cosmopolitan, but he rose to that station where he counted them but little. To quote his own words on success in life:—Every one has something in him that no one else has. If he treats his special talent, so to say, as a beautiful pearl, he can stand side by side with the best. Every one should write over his own door in golden letters, "What can I do that no one else can do?"

Extraordinary Biblical Find.

In describing an extraordinary Biblical "find," a cable dispatch from Cairo to the St. Louis Globe Democrat says: It is a manuscript of four books of the Pentateuch, written in Samaritan characters on parchment. The manuscript contains 255 folios in excellent state of preservation with the exception of the first page, which has been restored. The folios are 38 centimetres long, containing twenty-four lines to a page. A page containing the date 116 Moslem era, which is equivalent to A. D. 735, is well preserved. The manuscript is the oldest of any of the Hebrew manuscripts of the Bible yet discovered. Its owner is reported as already negotiating the sale of it to Mr. Ayer of the Chicago museum. Comparing the present Hebrew Bible with this manuscript, the Globe-Democrat man found several notable differences. Immediately after the decalogue there is a passage of some fifteen lines not in the actual version. Your correspondent had these lines translated in English. They are as follows: "It shall come to pass when the Lord, your God, shall bring into the land of Canaan, whither ye are journeying and which ye are to inherit, that ye shall set up for yourselves large stones, built together with lime, and shall write upon these stones all the words of this book, and it shall come to pass that after the passage of the River Jordan, ye shall also set up the same memorial as I have already commanded you on the Mount Gerizim, and ye shall build there to the Lord your God an altar of stones rough hewn and not touched with iron tools." The word blank is blurred and looks like Gilgal. George Zeldan, a member of the Royal Asiatic Society, a noted author and historian, is temporary custodian of the manuscript, which belongs to Khale et Sabra. Pending its final disposition Biblical scholars are offered all opportunity to study it.

Ministry.

There is no anodyne for heart-sorrow like ministry to others. If your life is woven with the dark shades of sorrow, do not sit down to deplore your hapless lot, but arise to seek out those who are more miserable than you are, bearing them balm for their wounds and love for their heartbreaks. And if you give much practical help, you may largely help the children of bitterness by listening to their dreams of foreboding. The burdened heart longs to pour out its tale in a sympathetic ear. There is immense relief in the telling out of pain. But it cannot be hurried; it needs plenty of time. If you can do nothing else, listen well, and comfort wherewith you yourself have been comforted by God. And as you listen and comfort and wipe away the falling tear, you will discover that your load is lighter, and that a branch or a twig of the true tree—the tree of the cross —has fallen into the bitter wastes of your own life, making the Marah Naomi, and the marshes of salt tears will have been healed.

A Decaying Church.

An artist was asked to paint a picture of a decaying church. To the astonishment of many, instead of putting on the canvas an old tottering ruin, he painted a stately edifice of modern grandeur. Back of the open portals could be seen the richly carved pulpit, the magnificent organ, and the beautiful stained glass windows.

Just inside the grand entrance, guarded on either side by a "pillar of the church," in spotless apparel and glittering jewelry, was an "offering plate" of goodly workmanship, for the offerings of the fashionable worshipers. Directly above the "offering plate" there hung a very simply painted square box, bearing the legend, "Collection for foreign Missions." But right over the slot, through which contributions ought to have gone, he painted a huge cobweb.

Slander.

If one slanderous viper is death to all comfort, what must be the venom of the whole brood? What the ear does not hear, the heart does not rue. In David's case the accusing voices were loud enough to break in upon his quiet; and foul mouths had grown so bold that they poured forth their falsehoods in the presence of their victim. Shemei was but one of a class, and his cry of "go up, thou bloody man," was but the common speech of the sons of Belial. All Beelzebub's pack of hounds may be in full cry against a man, and yet he may be the Lord's anointed.—Spurgeon.

"Keep Your Lantern by You."

The words were somewhat sharply spoken by the conductor of an evening train. "Keep your lantern by you. If any thing should happen, you may be at one end of the car and your lantern at the other." The brakeman was a new hand, who had just come on duty. The conductor met him at the rear end of the last car, and the above words were spoken. We glanced forward as the brakeman passed toward the front end; there, to our surprise, we saw his lantern hung up in a corner. While he was taking it down and suspending it from his arm instead of from the hook in the corner, we began to think. We thought of others besides inexperienced brakemen who sometimes put their lamps where they would be of little use in an emergency.

There are people who make a profession of religion who seem like shining lights in the church, but who do not take their religion with them in their daily life. They have the lantern hung up somewhere where it can do them little good in a special hour. There are young people who go to places where they cannot take their religion with them. And then, how shall they be prepared to help others who are in danger? How shall they give them light to guide them or help them out of trouble, if their light is away in some other place when the emergency arises?

"Ye are the light of the world," Jesus said to his disciples; but they who are to give light to the world must bear their light about with them. "Let your light so shine before men," again said the Savior, "that they, seeing your good works, may glorify your Father which is in heaven."

Do not forget that if we neglect to let our lights shine brightly they are in danger of being put out entirely, and other light bearers put into our places.—Northern Advocate.

The Young Man—How to Reach Him.

This is one of the burning questions of the Christian Church today. Upon its successful solution depends the vigor of the future Church and the moral health of the State. The young men are at the front in action. They make things go. They are the builders and pushers of colossal enterprises, they furnish the enthusiasm of new ideas. To them all doors of opportunity open. At forty, these doors already begin to close. And there are about 20,000,000 of these young giants in our population. Goethe wrote: "The destiny of any nation at any given time depends on the opinions of the young men who are under twenty-five years of age." Geikie, a student of history, goes so far as to say that "the world in all its affairs is mainly what young men have made it."

Brother Underwood:

I have been studying our statement of faith in the upper right hand corner of the first page of The Restitution. I believe it sets forth briefly the plan of salvation as revealed in God's Word. I heartily accept it. I can take any person by the hand who accepts this in obedience and call him brother, but I want him to accept it all. It is my observation that in too many cases our examination of others who seek fellowship with us rests almost entirely upon all of the items of faith except that found in the last clause, "And a Holy Life as essential for final salvation." Do we really recognize how important is a Holy Life to a final salvation? Some of our brethren would refuse to "brother" any one who declared himself skeptical on any one of the doctrinal points enumerated. Would they refuse to "brother" any one who is strong on the doctrinal points but weak to the extent of drunkenness in point of holiness? To be a "Peculiar People," does not require us to be "peculiar" so much in faith, in my judgment, as it requires us to be peculiarly honest, dealing righteously with all, and reflecting the Christ life in our own lives. Are we persecuted for righteousness sake?

Poetry.

The Other Side.

"For broad is the way that leadeth to destruction"

If "Jordan's a rough road to travel,"
Is the broad way of sin always bright?
And, do you who journey upon it,
Carry hearts ever cheerful and light?

Are there no stony places, no brambles,
To be found in the highway of sin?
As you go on your way ever downward,
Is there always gladness within?

Is't ere never a heartache, a sorrow?
Is there never a grief nor a pain?
Does your pleasantest hope for tomorrow,
Never prove a hope that is vain?

Does the pathway get smoother and brighter,
The further you journey along?
And does your heart grow ever lighter,
Is it always inspired with song?

Are you glad that the time's never nearer,
When you will have ended your race?
Do you feel a sweet Presence within you,
To help you meet Death's cold embrace?

Figurative Language of the Bible.

Figures of speech do not include the symbols of prophecy. These like the types of the law must be considered under another head. They are to be explained, if explained at all, in accordance with the laws of symbolization. These laws are deduced from divinely interpreted symbols of which there are quite a number of examples. Some expositors confuse things by not discriminating between figures and symbols. A good brother minister, now deceased, more than once said there were symbols in the Lord's great prophecy delivered on the Mount of Olives. There are figures of speech in it, but not symbols. The latter the great Teacher never employed in making his revelations in public discourse, or private interviews. These abound in figures of speech, especially the parable or allegory.

FIGURES OF SPEECH.

There are nine kinds of figures used in communicating our thoughts to others: They abound alike in the conversation of the illiterate and in the ornate oration of the orator, in the rude speech of the savage, and in the polished diction of the charming writer. Indeed the savage with his poverty of language is more inclined to embellish and illustrate his discourse with figures than are the highly educated. One of the charms of poetry consists in the profusion of its figures of speech and of thought. In fact there would be no poetry in the absence of these. And prose composition would be unbearably dull and monotonous without the embellishment of figures. All the different kinds of figures used in uninspired discourse and written composition to embellish, illustrate and enliven the language, are used by the Holy Spirit in communicating God's thoughts to man. Following are the figures used: the comparison, the metaphor, the metonymy, the synecdoche the hyperbole, the hyponoetasis the apostrophe, the personification, and the allegory, or parable. These imposing names are applied by rhetoricians to distinguish the different kinds of figures. The figures were all used before any one thought of naming them and are in use today in all the various tongues of earth by countless millions of people; by whole nations too rude and illiterate to give them names, or distinguish the difference between them and classify them. Of these figures as employed in the Scriptures the comparison is met with most frequently. As so and like, or some other term denoting resemblance are used in this figure. The names of the things compared are used in their literal sense. Thus in the similes, "The manna was like coriander seed, white; the staff of his spear was like a weaver's beam; the wicked are like the troubled sea"—the terms manna, staff of his spear, and the wicked, on the one hand are used in their literal sense. It is manna, spear, staff, and the wicked, not any thing else, that are said to be like the objects with which they are compared; and on the other it is coriander seed, a weaver's beam and a troubled sea, and not any thing else which they are severally said to resemble; and so of all other comparisons. If the names were not used literally there would be no means of determining what the things are that are compared. This characteristic is of great moment, as it results from it that when comparisons are employed in predictions and promises, the things promised and foreshown in the comparison are the identical things named, and not others of a like kind. Thus in the announcement (Matt. xxiv. 27) "For as the lightning cometh out of the east, and shineth even unto the west, so shall the coming of the Son of Man be." Here his visible coming which is compared to the shining of the lightning flash is his literal personal coming, not something else as the coming of the Roman army to execute swift vengeance upon God's rebellious people. Many expositors take this view of Christ's prophecy on the Mount of Olives. The figure of comparison employed here refutes this view. To unfold all the characteristics of the several kinds of figures and show their use, and what they teach, and what they do not teach, would require more space than can be spared to a topic of this kind, which is more in the line of school education than that of Bible study. So let this suffice.

The Second Coming of Christ.

This theme has been talked about a great deal. I do not think that it can be thought of and talked about too much, if done in the right spirit. According to his promise we are looking for him to come and give immortality to all that love his appearing. Now, if we do not love his appearing and are not watching for him, we cannot expect to get eternal life through his resurrection. He tells us in his Word, Brethren, ye are not in darkness that that day should overtake you as a thief. Therefore let us watch and be sober for he will come, and every eye shall see him; and those that pierced him shall look on him. But I would not have you ignorant brethren, concerning them which are asleep; that ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus, will God bring with him. For this we say unto you by the Word of the Lord that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord, shall not prevent them which are asleep. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, and with the voice of the archangel and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first. Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord. Wherefore comfort one another with these words. It certainly is a great comfort to those who are watching for their Savior, to know that he will come and redeem his people, who have been trying through all their troubles and afflictions of this life to do their Master's will. If they hold out faithful, he will give them eternal life in his kingdom, where the inhabitants will never say, I am sick. No sorrow, no pain, nor death will enter there.

Dear friends, we ought to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard, lest at any time we let them slip. How shall we escape if we neglect so great a salvation, when he tells us so plain that he will come again. O blessed thought of seeing our Savior, and being made immortal so we cannot die any more. In all things let us show ourselves a pattern of good works, setting such an example before the world, that we would not be sorry to see them follow it. Then let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and run the race with patience that is set before us. That we walk worthy of God, who hath called us unto his kingdom and glory. If ye be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God. For ye are dead and your life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ who is our life shall appear, then shall we appear with him in glory. Knowing that of the Lord ye shall receive the reward of the inheritance. And whatsoever ye do, do it heartily unto the Lord, and not unto men. Above all things put on charity; and let the peace of God rule in your hearts. And to you who are troubled rest with us, when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God and do not obey the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. Who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power. When he shall come to be glorified in his saints, and to be admired in all them that believe in that day." Oh, let us be ready when the Judge shall come, for he says, he will judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and kingdom. Then let us be watching for that blessed hope and the glorious appearing of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. He says, Behold I come quickly and my reward is with me to give to every man according as his works shall be. "For yet a little while and he that shall come, will come and will not tarry. Even so, come Lord Jesus."

Christ in the Revelation. No. 2.

The Alpha and Omega of verse 8 is God the Father, as may be seen by the similarity of the language to that in verse 4, of which there is no question, because in verse 5 we have the words, "And from Jesus Christ." Also the term Almighty belongs only to the Father. But in verse 11, the "Alpha and Omega" would be seen to apply to Jesus Christ, because when John "turned to see the voice that spake to him," among other things, he saw, "one like unto the Son of Man," or as it reads in the Diaglott, "A Son of Man." If the one seen was like the Son of Man, it could not be the Son of Man. Therefore the proper reading is, "like a Son of Man." The Father having in verse 8 said, "I am Alpha and Omega," would not be likely to repeat the same in verse 11. In what sense then should the "Alpha and Omega" be understood as applying to Jesus Christ; evidently as applying to the new creation, as said to the church of Laodicea, "These things saith the Amen, the faithful and true witness, the beginning of the creation of God." iii. 14. And as said in Rom. viii. 29, "For whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son, that he might be the first born among many brethren." I will here give the interlinery, word for word of the Diaglott, of Col i. 16-18, "Because in him were created the things all, the things in the heavens and the things on the earth, the things seen and the things unseen, whether thrones, or lordships, or governments, or authorities, the things all on account of him and for him have been created; and he is in advance of all, and the things all in him have been placed together, and he is the head of the body, of the congregation, who is a beginning; first born out of the dead ones, so that he might become among all himself pre-eminent." The foregoing Scriptures establish Christ's right to be called the Alpha, and on the authority of him "Who quickeneth the dead, and calleth those things that be not as though they were," he will be the Omega. Because he with whom the past, the present, and the future, is ever present, hath decreed, "That of his kingdom there shall be no end." Just as sure as the sun, and moon, and the stars, hold their position in the heavens." Jer. xxxi. 36. Ver. 13, "Clothed with a garment down to the foot, and girt about the paps with a golden girdle." The long flowing garment is such as is worn by kings and priests; and the girdle is a symbol of purity, encircling his breast. Ver. 13. The white head and hairs white as snow, indicate royal glory. See Prov. xvi. 31. The hoary head is a crown of glory, if found in the way of righteousness. "Eyes as a flame of fire" indicates perfect discernment, they penetrate the inmost recesses of the mind; as he says, "I know thy works." "And his feet like unto fine brass, as if they burned in a furnace." Symbolic of perfect purity, as when the molten metal is separated from all dross in the furnace. "And his voice as the sound of many waters," indicates power and universality, power to raise the dead, and to extend to the earth's remotest bounds. The seven stars in his right hand indicates that he has control of the angels or messengers of the seven churches; and that he recognizes their appointment as officials of the churches. "The sword out of his mouth" is the Sword of the Spirit, the Word of God. "And his countenance as the sun shineth in his strength." What a countenance compared to the orb of day shining in his noonday splendor without a cloud to obstruct its rays; the vision is similar in some respects to that of the transfiguration on the Mount.

Disobedience and its Results.

I believe with the Apostle Paul that all Scriptures are profitable, but they are only so when faith and obedience is placed in them. Disobedience and its results are the opposite of obedience and its results, and we may learn a great deal of the one by the study of the other. They are held up in great contrast, the one to the other, so that we may learn to love obedience and to hate disobedience. The Bible is full from beginning to end of cases of disobedience and its results, and is placed there so that these examples may be profitable to us.

Unbelief and disobedience go hand in hand together, which you will see as we proceed with this subject. The first example we have is recorded in Genesis. Gen. xv. 17. God gave a command what should be eaten, and what should not, and stated most emphatically what would be the result of disobeying him. It was to be death. The 3rd chapter contains an account of their disobedience and the passing of the sentence of death upon them. Chapter v. 5 states that Adam died; so we learn from this that God spoke the truth and the serpent told a lie. Paul in writing to the church at Rome speaks of this matter very fully. Chapter 4, that he not only brought death on himself, but on all his posterity. Adam stood as the representative head of all those in him, and are born under the same condemnation. We all die in Adam, so we see that death was the result of disobedience. They believed the serpent's lie, and they disbelieved and disobeyed God, who told them the truth. The results of disobedience are always the same, though there are different ways of bringing it about. In those days it was the serpent who told the lie, saying, You shall not surely die. At this present day we have this same lie being taught the people. It was believed then, it is believed now. The belief of it then brought death—the belief of it now is the same. In Lev. x. 1-2 we recorded a sad example of disobedience, when Nadab and Alihu, the sons of Aaron offered strange fire before the Lord, which he commanded them not, and there went out fire from the Lord and consumed them. Death was the result of disobedience. In Kings i. 13; xi. 1-24, we have another instance of unbelief and disobedience, and death its results. Also the case of Lot's wife who was turned into a pillar of salt for disobedience. God has commanded all men every where to repent. Acts xvii. 30, if we do not obey this command, we are children of disobedience, and the wrath of God cometh on the children of disobedience. Col. iii. 3 The gospel has been preached and made known to all nations for the obedience of faith. Rom. xvi. 25, 26. And without faith it is impossible to please God. The Apostle Paul in writing to his Thessalonian brethren, 2 Thes i. 7-10, who were suffering persecutions and tribulations for their faith, to you who are troubled, rest with us, when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and from the glory of his power, when he shall come to be glorified in his saints, and to be admired in all them that believe in that day. Rom. ii. speaks of two classes of people—the obedient and the disobedient and its results. God will give the obedient ones immortality, but to the disobedient tribulation and anguish, indignation and wrath.

Israel in Egypt—How Long?

In THE RESTITUTION of Dec. 24th, Bro. S. J. Lindsay enquires: "How has the notion that they were in Egypt 430 years arisen?" I answer, "The Samaritan Pentateuch, in all its manuscripts and printed copies reads: Now the sojourning of the children of Israel, and their fathers, which they sojourned in the land of Egypt, was 430 years." The same sum is given by St. Paul, Gal. iii. 17, who reckons from the promise made to Abraham, when God commanded him to go to Canaan, to the giving of the Law, which soon followed the departure from Egypt, and this chronology of the apostle is concordant with the Samaritan Pentateuch, which by preserving the two passages, they and their fathers, and in the land of Canaan which are lost out of the present copies of the Hebrew text, has rescued this passage from all obscurity and contradiction. It may be necessary to observe that the Alexandrian copy of the Septuagint has the same reading as the Samaritan. The Samaritan Pentateuch is allowed by many learned men to exhibit the most correct copy of the five books of Moses, and the Alexandrian copy of the Septuagint must also be allowed to be one of the most authentic, as well as most ancient copies of this version which we possess. As to St. Paul, no man will dispute the authenticity of his statement, and thus in the mouth of these three most respectable witnesses, the whole account is indubitably established. That these three witnesses have the truth, the chronology itself proves; for from Abraham's entrance into Canaan to the birth of Isaac, was 25 years. Gen. xii. 4, 17. Isaac was 60 years old at the birth of Jacob, Gen. xxv. 26, and Jacob was 130 at his going down into Egypt, Gen. xlvii. 9, which three sums make 215 years, and then Jacob and his children having continued in Egypt 215 years more, the whole sum of 430 years is regularly completed.

FRED MIGHLER.

Dear Restitution:

I read the articles written by Bro. Lindsay and others with much interest, as it is a subject I have been looking up; so come let us reason together.

Let us notice Gal. iii. 16, "Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made," as we find in Gen. xii. 1-4, when Abraham was 75 years old. He was 100 years old when Isaac was born, Gen. xxi. 5. Isaac was 60 years old when Jacob was born. Gen. xxv. 26. Jacob was 130 years old when he went down into Egypt, making 215 years, since the promise was given to Abraham.

Now let us notice Gal. iii. 17, "And this I say, that the covenant that was confirmed before of God in Christ, the law, which was 430 years after, cannot disannul, that it should make the promise of none effect." Let us remember that the words "given" and "confirmed" are two different words. Psa. cv. 9, 10, says, Which covenant he made with Abraham and his oath unto Isaac; and confirmed the same unto Jacob for a law, and to Israel for an everlasting covenant. God confirmed it unto Jacob when he went down into Egypt. Gen. xlvi 1-3, please read. Then it was confirmed unto Jacob 215 years after it was given to Abraham.

We read in Gen. xv. 13, And he said unto Abram, know of a surety that thy seed shall be a stranger in a land that is not theirs, and shall serve them; and they shall afflict them 400 years. And we read in Ex. xii. 40, that they were in Egypt 430 years. Do not lose sight of the fact that they lived there a while before they were made to serve the Egyptians. Jacob lived in Egypt 17 years, and died. Gen. xlvii. 28. Then Joseph lived the rest of his life there, and after Joseph died there arose a king which knew not Joseph, Ex. i. 8, which if the whole narrative is studied you will see that it must have been about 30 years from the time that Jacob went down into Egypt before they went into bondage.

Now let us sum up the whole matter: The promise was given to Abraham 215 years before it was confirmed unto Jacob, and it was confirmed to Jacob 430 years before the law was given.

Submitted in love.

Temperance.

HE COULD, BUT CAN NOT.

He was one of the fellows
That could drink or leave it alone;
With a flat, high scorn for common men,
Who were born with no backbone.
"And why," said he, "should a man of strength
Deny to himself the use
Of the pleasant gift of the warm, red wine,
Because of its weak abuse?"

He could quote at a banquet,
With a manner half divine,
Full fifty things the poets say
About the rosy wine;
And he could sing a spirited song
About the lips of a lass,
And drink a toast to her fair, young worth,
In a sparkling, generous glass.

And since this lordly fellow
Could drink or leave it alone,
He chose to drink at his own sweet will,
Till his will was overthrown.
And the lips of his lass are pale with grief,
And his children shiver and shrink,
For the man who once could leave it alone,
Is the pitiful slave of drink.

REASON FOR CONSECRATION.

Cardinal Manning was once engaged in conversation with a laborer on one of the London docks, and in the course of the talk said to the latter, with paternal counsel, "Take the total abstinence pledge; you need it." "And have you taken it yourself?" asked the laborer. Why do you not need it too, as well as I?" Quickly the cardinal responded, "I do need it and I will take it." "Then I will also take it," said the man. Later on, explaining his words the cardinal said, "I needed the pledge, strong as I might have thought myself against temptation, in order to speak convincing words to the poor and weak."

NOT AWARE OF DANGER.

In the channel off Nantucket some eight or nine years ago, there was a steamship caught in a low fog. Its top masts could be seen distinctly over the fog, plainly in sight from the shore, but the fog hid the hull of the vessel.

Those on shore tried to communicate with the steamship. They fired guns, which the people on the boat heard, but they were too sure they were on the right way to need them. The captain thought he knew the coast; he had thrown out his lead; he had ascertained the depth of the channel; he had been there many times in the fog; he had "no need" of warning; he went on in his wrong course.

The people could see that the boat was going directly for the headland. In less than half an hour they would be on those rocks and be destroyed. The excitement was so intense that they say the whole town came to the shore. They fired again and again, and sent up rockets to see if they could in some way attract the attention of that steamer and save her from destruction. They were not successful; the boat went on the rocks amid the breakers; the vessel was lost and the sea was filled with the bodies of the dead. It was the most hideous wreck of all the recent years.

They thought they had no need.—Counsell.

A FABLE.

The rats once assembled in a large cellar to devise some means of safely getting the bait from a steel trap that lay near, having seen many of their friends snatched from them by its merciless jaws. After many long speeches and the proposal of many elaborate plans, a happy wit, standing erect, said: "It is my opinion that, if with one paw we can keep down the spring, we can safely take the food from the trap with the other."

All the rats heartily squealed assent then were much startled by a faint voice, and a poor rat with only three legs, limping into the ring, stood up to speak. "My friends, I have tried the method you propose, and you see the result. Now let me suggest a plan—Let it alone!"—Minnie D. Cone.

DRINKING IN LONDON.

I was surprised at the drunkenness of the crowd, and especially at the number of intoxicated women. I have seen every great city of the world, but nowhere have I seen women drinking publicly in the saloons as they do in London. On the peace night I saw drunken girls of 15, and some who seemed younger, although there were signs on the saloon windows saying that children under 14 would not be served.

There were scores of women with babies in their arms shouting and dancing, their breath reeking of gin and whiskey. Some of the babies were no more than two weeks old, but the mothers bundled them up to their breasts and sang and danced with the rest.

The saloons along the Strand were filled with half drunken people of both sexes. I looked into saloon after saloon and did not find one in which there were not women drinking. Many of the women were gray-haired, and even these were drunk.

This drinking prevails throughout London. The women patronize the saloons almost as much as the men, and you cannot drive through the poorer sections of a daturday evening without seeing drunken women dancing, shouting and quarreling.—Frank G. Carpenter.

FROM A KNIGHT OF LABOR.

Had I 10,000,000 tongues, and a throat for each tongue, I would say to every man, woman, and child here tonight, "Throw strong drink aside as you would an ounce of liquid hell; it sears the conscience; it destroys everything it touches. It reaches into the family circle and takes the wife you have sworn to protect, and drags her down from her purity into that home from which no decent woman ever goes alive. It induces the father to take the furniture from his home, exchange it for money at the pawnshop, and spend the proceeds for rum. It damns everything it touches. I have seen it in every city east of the Mississippi River, and I know that the most damning curse to the laborer is that which gurgles from the neck of the bottle. I had rather be at the head of an organization having one hundred thousand temperate, honest, earnest men, than at the head of an organization of twelve million drinkers, whether moderate or any other kind. Every cent spent in the rum-shop furnishes a paving stone for hell."—T. V. Powderly.

LETTERS.

Dear Brother Underwood:

Enclosed please find my subscription to the dear, old paper. I cannot think of doing without it. This is my 87th successive year, and I am not conscious that one-half dozen of the numbers have been destroyed in that time; but have scattered them to the four winds. I want to say that I am still fighting in the army of the Lord, and if it is my lot to fall in battle before the victory is won I hope to be facing the enemy. I endorse all on the right hand corner of the paper, and I am under the law of Christ and not the law of Moses, and that Christ is the Son of the living God, and not the Sou of Joseph.

Yours, in the soon coming of our blessed Lord and Master.

G. W. Smith.

Oregon.

Brother Underwood:

I will write a few lines for the paper, mostly to the isolated brothers and sisters, who are battling for the Master, and standing faithful against the wiles of the wicked one. As to myself I have hardly been able to be around for the last three years, but am now quite well. I have been highly interested in reading the love feast letters from the scattered ones who have no organization, and cannot assemble themselves together and enjoy the privileges of those more favorably situated. To all such I will say, hold fast till the Savior comes and he will give you a crown of life. Rev. ii. 10: for it is evident that those who are battling against the world by themselves are sincere, they show their faith by their works, while those who are surrounded with the influence of a congregation and hear preaching every Sunday may be sincere and they may be like those spoken of in Rev. ii. 2, 9; for it is much easier to walk in a crowd than to walk alone. I will say to the isolated ones in the north part of Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska and Iowa, I am expecting, if my health continues, to make a trip through these states this fall, and will be pleased to call and spend a few days with those who are not too far from the route I shall travel, if they so desire. They may drop me a card, giving their locality any time between now and the 1st day of August at Waynesville, Ill.

C. P. Graham.

Illinois.

Brothers and sisters:

We are pleased to see your letters in our lovel paper, all telling of the same blessed faith and hope; but only a few of those whom we met at the conferences in November have written. Brother Wagoner, how much we would like to see a letter from your pen. We need your encouragement. One who can write as you do should not let their pen lie idle so long. Do write for the household of faith. Bro. Zilmer was with us two weeks beginning with the fourth Sunday in January, and considering the inclement weather we had a very good attendance, and through Brother Zilmer's kind but plain, forcible and convincing way of presenting God's truth, six willing souls put on Christ by baptism, and we are now pleased to introduce to the household of faith, Brother and Sister Benton Huffer, Sister Wyeno Barnut, Sister Wm. Jenkins, Leona and Linnie, daughters of Brother and Sister Oliver Weaver, who have been, quite recently visited by a great sorrow, the enemy death having robbed them of their daughter Mae. This was the first death in the family of eight children, the most of whom are grown. It was Mae's talk during her sickness that if her life was spared she would be baptized, and urged her brothers and sisters to do so, and not put it off. Brother and Sister Weaver can rejoice amid their sorrow, knowing that two of their children have put on Christ by baptism. Sister Ellen Truby of Sheridan attended the meeting and enjoyed it very much until a severe cold caused her to return to her home before the meeting was concluded. We think seed has been sown that will produce harvest ere long and held to our hand here at Hillsburg, Ind. To God be all the praise.

Your Brother and Sister waiting the return of the Nobleman.

Alex & Azorah Simmons.

Editor Restitution:

To those of like precious faith I would say, as I have been taking comfort reading the many letters and words of consolation and cheer from so many of you, I have been troubled in mind considerable, to think that I have been so negligent in speaking a word to cheer as have been many; yet my hope remains strong, and I rejoice to think that we have a blessed hope that reaches beyond to the resurrection, as one dear sister said in her letter, Who is there among us that has not some loved one that we wish to meet on the resurrection morning? Yes, I can say that I have many loved ones that I hope to meet, and when I read of so many of our faith that are being cut down by the enemy death, I cannot help but say, Come Lord Jesus, and come quickly. Then there will be no more death. Rev. xxi. 4, reads "And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes, and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain; for the former things are passed away." It is hard to have our friends taken from us; but if they are prepared, they have only gone to rest, until the trump of God shall wake them on the resurrection morn. Rev. xx. 6, says, "Blessed and holy is he that has part in the first resurrection, for on such the second death hath no power; but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years." Oh, what a blessed hope is the Christian's hope, how it cheers us up in hours of trial and affliction, and causes us to rejoice, knowing that our redemption draweth nigh. Then, dear brothers and sisters let us ever be striving to be ready with our lamps trimmed and burning, that when the Savior comes, we can hear him say, Well done good and faithful servant, enter into the joy of thy Lord. I would just say that our little company here at Cheatdeer, Cal., rejoice that we have had the pleasure of a visit with Brother and Sister McIrvin of Portland, Oregon, and Brother and Sister Charles Brooks of Scholls, Oregon, this winter, and now we are rejoicing to have Brother and Sister Prosser and their daughter locate here, where they can meet with us every first day, to search the Scripture and partake of the emblems. Should any of the brethren be coming this way we would be pleased to have them stop and see us. We have preaching once a month by Brother Edwin Grout of Grangeville, Cal.

A Sister in Christ.

Mrs. M. A. Calder.

California.

Brother Underwood:

I would just state, briefly, that we enjoyed a visit lately from Brother Crowe. He was with us about two weeks and I think his discourses were generally appreciated by the friends here. The congregations were as large as they usually are on such occasions. Like many other places there are only a few here who really believe and love the truth. The mass have turned away from the truth to fables as Paul said it would be in the last days. I would also state that we are expecting a visit soon from Bro. Wilson, of Chicago, and hope that we may have an enjoyable time. May God bless and prosper his own truth, and may it accomplish that whereunto he has sent it. Paul may plant, and Apollos may water; but God gives the increase. O that some poor souls may be led to see the importance of receiving the gospel, by which they can obtain eternal life in the kingdom of God.

Your brother in Christ.

P. H. Burk.

Canada.

Dear brothers and sisters:

I love to call God's children by the endearing name of Brother and Sister. I am glad that I am a member of the strongest organization on earth, one that will pass through the perilous times upon which we are just entering. Strongest, because God is on our side. The Lord is the saving strength of his anointed. Be of good courage, dear ones, and he shall strengthen your heart, all ye that hope in the Lord.

Your brother in hope of eternal life.

IMPORTANT NOTICES.

All persons addressing us should give their name, postoffice, county and state, plainly and distinctly.

All letters should be addressed to "The Restitution, Plymouth, Marshall, co., Ind."

Remittance should be sent by bank draft, postoffice money orders, or express orders. Money sent in either of the above ways is at our risk, money so chosen in letters is at the risk of the sender. It is folly to think that you can hold bills in a letter so that no one can tell it for one who handles much mail matter can almost invariably tell a letter with money in it. Take warning and send safely.

All remittances should be made payable to the order of "The Restitution."

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

In ordering books or tracts get the latest copy of the paper you have and order only what you see advertized in that.

When desiring a change of address, give both your old and new address.

By complying strictly with the above you will save us much annoyance, and your order will be much more promptly attended.

Scriptures Opened.

A third edition of the above named work is just out, and ready for delivery. This book has been before our readers so long now that its worth is well known. The author is Robert Ashcroft. The price for this edition is put low so that the brethren and sisters can get it to lend to honest enquirers after truth. We hope there are a few who have not turned their ears from the truth to fables. The book will speak for itself in its unfoldings of the purposes and plans of Jehovah, regarding the near future of the earth and its inhabitants. All should be interested in these truths, and those who have never read this book will have a feast. Price 65 cents post paid. Send to this office for them, or orders can be sent to J. O. Woodruff, Elizabeth N. J.

Our Helping Fund.

We whose names are given herewith, believing that it is our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending The Restitution to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our names for the purpose of aiding the managers of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund to be applied as the donor request, (or when left to the publisher to decide) only for those who themselves state their circumstances and need, or whose case is presented by some one known to be trustworthy.

Brethren and Sisters, Have you loved ones who think sincerity will save them? Have you friends who think they worship acceptably while ignorant of God's promises? Have you acquaintances with false hopes of heaven, or who believe themselves immortal by nature, or who think their sins are forgiven, although they are ignorant of the Law of Pardon, or who have no use for a God who consigns sinners to Eternal Torment, and are ignorant of Jehovah's beneficent purpose to fill the earth with his glory and bestow Eternal Life upon believers of the Gospel, so they can enjoy it for ever? If so, send for Popular Lectures by Bro. Joblin, entitled:—"The Kingdom of God;" "Old Mother Earth to Be Born Again;" "Strangers from the Covenants of Promise" "Vain Worship;" "No Immortality Out of Christ;", "Hope Begotten by the Resurrection of Christ;" "God's Love and Solicitude for Mankind;" and "What Shall We Do to be Saved?"

A Word of Appreciation.

Some time ago I asked the brotherhood through The Restitution how many copies of the pamphlet "The Reasons of My Withdrawal from the Evangelical Association," would be wanted. Letters came from all parts of the country, some even mine money stating the number of copies desired, so that a second edition of 1000 was printed. I wish to state that this edition is nearly exhausted, there being only about 150 left. Those wishing copies better send their orders early, as they will soon be gone. I desire, by this means, to thank the brethren for their encouraging words and financial help. Trusting that the seed will fall in good soil and produce fruit unto eternal life. 25 pages, at 5 cents per copy. A. H. Zilmer, Plymouth, Ind.

Judge Not.

Judge not that ye be not judged. Mat. vii. 1.

Judge not: the working of his brain
And of his heart thou canst not see;
What looks to thy dim eyes a stain,
In God's pure light may only be
A scar, brought from some well-fought field
Where thou wouldst only rant and yield.

The look, the act that dots thy sight,
May be a token sent in love
The soul has closed in deadly fight
With some dark power from above.
Whose gloom we would not wish thy strong grace
And quiet thee should rise on thy face.

How to Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ.

"Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." Acts xvi 31.

The above Scripture is a true and correct answer to the jailor's question, "Sirs, what must I do to be saved?" And today the same answer is almost invariably given to seekers after salvation, and yet the seekers are not saved. Why so? Because they fail to follow the example of Paul and Silas.

1. "And they spake unto him the Word of the Lord, and to all that were in his house."

2. "And he took them the same hour of the night, and washed their stripes; and was baptized, he and all his, straight way."

"This is life eternal, (or salvation) that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent." John xviii. 3.

There is no salvation vouchsafed to sinners by simply repeating the phrase like a parrot, "I believe," and at the same time know not the true God, and Jesus Christ whom he has sent. How can any person know Jesus Christ, before being instructed? It is not possible to either know or believe on Jesus Christ prior to being instructed concerning him.

To illustrate: During the last presidential campaign, two men offered themselves as candidates for the office of President of the United States, viz: William McKinley, and William J. Bryan. Each of these men had a message, in which a principle was involved, which differed one from the other. Some believed McKinley's message, while others embraced the Bryan message. Those who accepted the McKinley message, said they believed in Wm. McKinley, while others embraced the Bryan message, and affirmed that they believed in Wm. J. Bryan. Now the believers in Bryan were disbelievers in McKinley. It was either the belief or the disbelief of the message or teachings of these men, which constituted them believers or disbelievers. It is even so religiously, some call themselves Mahomm dans, because they believe in the teachings and message of Mahomet, and likewise believer in Jesus Christ are those who know and believe in the teachings or message of Jesus Christ. No one could either believe or disbelieve the message, or teachings of Jesus Christ, unless they are first made acquainted with that message.

Those who know Jesus only as an historical character, are not believers in Jesus; if such were the case, then to know Mahomet as an historical character would make you a Mahommedon.

Many who say they believe in Jesus Christ, regard the phrase, Lord Jesus Christ only as a personal name, like Mr. John Jones, and that is the extent of their knowledge as to what is involved in that phrase. Such cannot believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, unless they shall first become better informed.

Jesus is his personal name. "Call his name Jesus; for he shall save his people from their sins." As to the phrase, Lord and Christ, see Acts ii. 36: "Therefore let all the house of Israel know assuredly, that God hath made that same Jesus, whom ye have crucified both Lord and Christ."

God made Jesus, both Lord and Christ like the people made Wm. McKinley President of the United States.

Now, when Peter, on the day of Pentecost convinced the Jews that God had really made Jesus Lord and Christ, they became believers in the Lord Christ, and like the jailor, cried out, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" and like the jailor were told to be baptized for the remission of sins.

"The angel said unto them (the shepherds) fear not, for, behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Savior, (Jesus) which is Christ the Lord." These distinctions drawn by the Word of the Lord, the average seeker for salvation in revival meetings knows nothing about, and it is a lamentable fact, their instructors are as blind as they are, and being ignorant of these things they are not in fact believers in the Lord Jesus Christ.

When the wise men in the East observed the Star of Bethlehem, they journeyed to Jerusalem. Did they ask, where is he that is born "Christ the Lord?" Why no, but they used a phrase which signified just the same, "Where is he that is born King of the Jews?" Now, "When Herod the King heard these things (that some one was born King of the Jews), he was troubled, and all Jerusalem with him. And when he had gathered all the chief priests and scribes of the people together, he demanded of them where Christ (the King of the Jews) should be born?" Matt. ii. 3, 4. Note the answer, "And they said unto him in Bethlehem of Judea: for thus it is written by the prophet, And thou Bethlehem, in the land of Judah, art not the least among the princes of Judah, for out of thee shall come a Governor, that shall rule my people Israel." He asked "Where Christ should be born?" and in answer they told him where the "Governor who shall rule my people Israel," should be born, that is an answer to the question, "Where is he that is born King of the Jews?"

See John i. 41-47, "Philip findeth Nathaniel, and saith unto him, we have found the Messias, which is being interpreted the Christ." When Nathaniel met him, he believed that he really was the Christ, and said "Rabbi, thou art the King of Israel" —the Christ.

See also Acts xvii. 1-7: "Paul as his manner was, went into the synagogue, and said, "that this Jesus whom I preach unto you is Christ." What do these converts who confess that they believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, know about Paul's preaching, "that this Jesus whom I preach unto you is Christ." In order to do so, they must comprehend what is meant by the phrase, "That God hath made that same Jesus whom ye have crucified both Lord and Christ."

See Luke xxiii. 1-3, and you will learn that the Jews understood the word Christ to mean a king. They brought Jesus to Pilate, and said, "We have found this fellow perverting the nation, and forbidding to give tribute to Cæsar, saying that he himself, is Christ a king. And Pilate asked him, saying, Art thou the King of the Jews? And he answered him, and said, thou sayest it."

In Mark xv. 31, the Jews said, "Let Christ the King of Israel descend now from the cross." Now, no one can possibly believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, unless he comprehends what it means to preach Jesus as the Christ. It is a very serious thing to deny that Jesus is the Christ. See 1 John ii. 22: "Who is a liar but he that denies that Jesus is the Christ." No liar is in a saved condition. As there is condemnation in denying that Jesus is the Christ, there is likewise salvation in intelligently confessing Jesus as the Christ. See 1 John v. 1: "Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ, is born (begotten) of God." No one can believe unless evidence is first placed before the mind as a basis of faith.

"This is eternal life (or salvation) that they might know thee the only true God, (not a triune God) and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent." John xvii. 3. I submit that no one can know a thing, and still be in ignorance of the evidence concerning the thing said to be known.

The Restitution.

"The Restitution of all things Which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets."

VOLUME LII. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, MARCH 11, 1903. NUMBER 10.

Gospel of the Kingdom of God Endangered in Scotland.

No. 6.

"We ought to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard, lest at any time we should let them slip." Heb. ii. "With one mind striving together for the faith of the gospel." Paul.

The state of matters described in the preceding papers suggested the issue of a small tract for circulation among whom it might concern as a testimony for the gospel. This print might help to elucidate the subject which had been brought into question, as well as to afford instruction to some readers of THE RESTITUTION. It is therefore, with the editor's permission, proposed to be printed as part of the present series of papers.

The reader will observe that the tract is extremely elementary. It is strictly confined to statements and facts concerning the gospel and its obedience as proclaimed by our Lord and his Apostles. Theological questions are avoided, such as atonement, etc., as connected with the name of Jesus Christ. Such phrases as "the gospel of the grace of God" are left out. Such are easily explained. "The gospel of the kingdom of God" is of pure grace or favor. As such it is worthy of its divine Author, and of him whom he sent to preach it. The Apostle Paul who uses the term "gospel of the grace of God," shows in his address that this was simply his own way of describing the gospel of the kingdom. See Acts xx. 24, 25.

WHO ARE BAPTIZED BELIEVERS?

1. What, according to the New Testament, are 'Baptized Believers?' We read of some in Samaria in the first century: 'When they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women.' Acts viii. 12.

2. Was it not obligatory on all who professed to make known the gospel to preach substantially as we find Philip preaching at Samaria? Yes. Paul: 'I am debtor both to the Greeks and to the barbarians.....as much as in me is to preach the gospel.' Rom. i. 14, 15. 'Though I preach the gospel, I have nothing to glory of, for necessity is laid upon me; yea, woe is unto me if I preach not the gospel.' 1 Cor. ix. 16. And even our Lord himself said: 'I must preach the kingdom of God to other cities also, for therefore am I sent.' Luke iv. 43.

3. Philip 'preached the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ.' Can there be any doubt that 'the name of Jesus Christ' had become a constant element of gospel preaching on and after Pentecost; and, although sometimes not expressed by the sacred writers, is always to be understood?—There can be no doubt of this.

4. Have we any reason to doubt that the gospel spoken of by Paul in the above was the gospel of the kingdom? Certainly not; for in several of the reported accounts of Paul's labors, the kingdom of God is expressly mentioned as the subject of his preaching. 'He went into the synagogue, and spake boldly for the space of three months, disputing and persuading the things concerning the kingdom of God.....I know that ye all, among whom I have gone preaching the kingdom of God, shall see my face no more .....Paul dwelt two whole years in his own hired house, and received all that came in unto him, preaching the kingdom of God, and those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ.' Acts xix. 8: xx. 25; xxviii. 30, 31.

5. Is preaching the kingdom of God equivalent to preaching the gospel? Yes. Before he suffered, Jesus sent his twelve apostles and seventy others throughout the land 'to preach the kingdom God.' In recording their obedience to his command, Luke says: 'They went through the towns preaching the gospel.' Luke ix. 2, 6; so that it is clear, that to preach the kingdom is to preach the gospel, and to preach the gospel is to preach the kingdom of God.

6. Our Lord, his twelve apostles, and seventy disciples preached the kingdom of God for several years in Judea and Galilee. Did he predict that the same gospel should continue to be preached beyond these limits? Yes. 'This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness.' Matt. xxiv. 14.

7. This prediction was uttered a few days before our Lord gave his commission to his apostles: 'Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned.' Mark xvi. 15, 16. Would the apostles be at any loss to connect the terms of the commission with those of the prediction, the phrase 'all the world' occurring in both, and the term 'the gospel' coinciding with 'this gospel of the kingdom?' They could not be at any loss.

8. Is there any clue to indicate the chief purpose of this preaching? Yes. It was 'the obedience of faith.' Rom. xvi. 25, 26. 'According to my gospel .....according to the revelation of the mystery.....made known to all nations for the obedience of faith.'

9. Was the prediction of our Lord in process of fulfilment in the first century? Yes. Peter preached that 'the Christ had been raised up (from the dead) to sit on David's throne.' Acts ii. 30. This, to the three thousand Jews assembled on that occasion, was just a concrete mode of preaching the kingdom.' The restoration of this kingdom again to Israel was the object of their hope as that of the apostles. Acts viii. 12; xix. 8; xx. 25; xxviii. 31, already quoted.

10. Is there any doubt that the kingdom of God preached by our Lord and his apostles was that kingdom which had been established by Jehovah over the twelve tribes of Israel in the Holy Land, and which he has purposed to restore again at the second appearing of his Son? Certainly not.

11. Paul exhorted the Philippians to strive together for the faith of the gospel; and Jude exhorted to contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints. Was this 'striving' and 'contending' for any other object than the faith of the gospel of the kingdom? There is no record from which any other conclusion can be drawn.

12. Is there any authority for preaching the gospel now without making the kingdom an indispensable element of the preaching? There is no record of such authority.

13. Can baptism following on any belief which does not embrace the gospel of the kingdom be considered 'the obedience of faith,' or can such persons be recognized as 'Baptized Believers' in the Bible sense? There is no record of any authority for such.

14. If anything be preached as the gospel which falls short of 'the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ,' is it not near akin to what Paul calls 'another gospel,' and a 'perverting of the gospel of Christ?' Gal. i. 6, 7. It really does so seem.

The foregoing statements are respectfully and affectionately submitted to all whom it may concern, for their earnest consideration, by some baptized believers who desire to 'hold fast the form of sound words' which originated with the Master himself, and to which there is much need to give heed in these perilous times, when some 'have erred from the faith,' and 'the Judge standeth before the door.'

At the Communion Table.

The carnal and the spiritual mind. This subject chosen for discussion this morning is an old one, but it is very important and one we cannot study and discuss too often. To be carnally minded is death. There is no promise of future life in the natural mind. Corrupt nature is derived from Adam to all his posterity. All who have not become spiritually minded do mind the things of the flesh, and therefore have no claim to immortal life. The fleshly minded delight in the things of the flesh. They seek their happiness in riches, honors, pleasures and vanities of this world or age. These things perish with the using, and, brothers and sisters, if we continue to use them to amuse and entertain the flesh we also shall perish. Our time should not be given to seeking riches, honors and pleasures. Our ability and talents should not be given to these things. This is a solemn warning and if we do not take heed unto it and walk after the Spirit our end will be everlasting death.

We are by nature the children of wrath, but if through obedience we are the children of God, happy are we, for the end of such is everlasting life. Our ability and talents belong to the Lord. He wants the best that we can give, and while it is called today, let us give him our hearts, our hands and our voices that we may have an abundant entrance into his kingdom.

It says in the latter part of the verse under discussion, that to be spiritually minded is life and peace. It gives eternal life, for there is now therefore no condemnation to those which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit. It also gives peace, peace with God. The carnal mind is at enmity with God and to be at enmity with God means death, eternal death.

In order to have a spiritual mind the Spirit of God must dwell in us, we must learn the Word, and keep it in remembrance and our conduct must be governed by it. The Spirit will war against the flesh but if we are overcomers the end will be glorious. Let us strive to be overcomers. Amen.

Table Talk.

CHRIST IN US.

But ye are not in the flesh, but in the Spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you. Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his. What is it to have the Spirit or mind of Christ? It is to follow after his example, which was godliness, faith, love, patience and meekness. If we can reach this standard, we will have Christ in us. Christ says, Abide in me, and I in you. As the branch cannot bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine; no more can ye, except ye abide in me. I am the vine, ye are the branches. He that abideth in me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit; for without me ye can do nothing. And if Christ be in you, the body is dead because of sin, but the Spirit is life because of righteousness. But if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead, shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwells in you. Then let us keep near to Christ, and have his Spirit dwelling in us richly. Christ and the Father are one, and Christ and the church are one. He is in them and they in him. There is no church except in Christ. They are joint heirs with him to all he inherits—glory, honor and immortality. His deliverance will be our deliverance, for he was the first fruits of them that slept. Be ware that no man deceive you through philosophy and vain deceit, after the tradition of men, after the rudiments of the world, and not after Christ. For in him dwelleth all the fullness of the godhead bodily. And ye are complete in him, which is the head of all principality and power. As ye have therefore received Christ Jesus the Lord, so walk ye in him. Rooted and built up in him, and stablished in the faith, as ye have been taught, abounding therein with thanksgiving. Paul preached, taught and warned every man in all wisdom, that they might be presented every man perfect in Christ Jesus, and Christ in us the hope of glory. Christ is in us and we in him by adoption, by being obedient to his commands, and the requirements of his law, and being built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets. Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone, in whom all the building fitly framed together groweth unto an holy temple in the Lord. That he would grant you, according to the riches of his glory, to be strengthened with might by his Spirit in the inner man. That Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith, that ye being rooted and grounded in love, may walk worthy of the vocation where with ye are called. Endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. There is one body, and one spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling. One Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all. Unto him be glory in the church by Jesus Christ throughout all ages, world without end. Amen.

MARY KNOWLES.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to the end the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Obituary.

John W. Appleyard died at Wymore, Neb. on Feb. 25, 1903, of heart disease and stomach trouble.

He was born Aug. 24, 1844, at Halifax, England. Came to Chicago with his parents in 1849. Was married to May F. Page, in Ogle Co. Ill. Apr. 22, 1871. Their children, three in number, are all grown. Etta is married to G. H. Loudenslager and they live at Hallock, Minn. Alena teaches in the schools at Wymore, while Theron, Eldredge, lives at Cherokee, Ia.

Brother Appleyard was baptized in 1860 by his uncle Richard Appleyard, and has been a faithful, earnest, consecrated man. Ever since the organization of the Iowa State Conference he has been an active member in that organization, and part of the time its treasurer. He was firm in the faith of the gospel, and looked forward with hope to the coming of Christ and the redemption of the world.

The Iowa Conference has indeed lost much in the death of such a noble example of Christian character, and one whose place is not easily filled by another.

Funeral services were held in the home at Wymore, Neb., then he was taken to Wall Lake, Iowa, and a funeral sermon given by the writer in the Presbyterian Church on Sunday, Mar. 1st, after which he was taken to the Odebolt cemetery for his interment, where he will sleep until the resurrection.

We turned away with sad hearts and tearful eyes, wondering why this is thus. But so it is. Death reigns—but we are promised a time some where in the future when there will be no more death. O, when will that time come!

A. J. EYCHANER.

Eva Mabel Burch, daughter of Warren J. and Zola M. Burch, was born near Tyner, Ind., Dec. 29, 1885, and died after a lingering illness of some ten months, on Feb. 22, 1903, aged 17 years, 1 month and 23 days, loved and held in high esteem by all who knew her.

About the first of February she made a confession of Christ's power to save, and was immersed at her home. She was conscious to the very last and talked in a calm and interested manner about her departure to all who came to see her. She made all arrangements for her funeral, and her wishes were carried out.

She leaves her parents, two brothers Chester and Lawrence, and a host of other friends to mourn her early departure.

Funeral services were conducted by Bro. F. L. Austin. The floral offerings were bounteous. The large audience showed the respect in which the deceased was held.

Died of consumption at her home Topeka, Kan. Feb. 17, 1903, Mattie Herron, daughter of John and Louisa Herron, aged 22 years.

She was a good girl, loved and respected by those who knew her. When she saw that death was coming, and was determined, she became resigned and prayed fervently for all her friends to meet her in that better world to come.

The writer talked a while to aid the living, and tried to point out the cause of all this sorrow—that an enemy had done this,—and advised them to remember their Creator in the days of their youth, before the evil days come. To seek through Christ for a crown of life, to be given when he shall come to awake and raise the sleeping dead to life, and to reward all his servants. After which she was committed to the Lord, and to mother earth, to rest and wait until her change shall come.

Plymouth, Indiana, Mar. 11, 1903.

Dispatches from Naples say that Vesuvius is again active.

The insurrections in China are assuming alarming proportions, and unless speedily checked will cause much trouble.

Russia has just received another set back in the Far East by the refusal of Corea to grant her a concession for a railway from Seoul to Wiju.

The British naval estimate for the year 1903-4, just issued, calls for $179,184,205, an increase of $16,010,000. This contemplates 39 new warships, and a consequent increase of men and officers.

The English and Russian governments are striving to arrive at an understanding regarding each others rights in Persia, which it is hoped will settle for the present the impending clash in that direction. Thus the war between these two powers goes on, if not with soldier, then with the statesman.

In order to show the enormous cost of the Siberian Railway we give the following from the official report of the Russian officials: The Siberian railway commission on the occasion of its recent session on the tenth anniversary of the beginning of the work at Vladivostok, held under the presidency of the czar, published figures concerning the cost to date. The transsiberian railway, with a length of 5,028 versts (about 3,700 miles), cost $192,800,000, including the first order of rolling stock, though not including an appropriation of $47,100,000 to reinforce its means of transport. The commission has likewise appropriated $5,100,000 for river and harbor improvements, etc., $15,320,000 for colonization purposes, and about $2,500,000 for gold mine surveys, churches, medical relief, etc.

Since the Emperor of Germany set forth his ideas of the Bible and its teaching a short time since, there has been much criticism of his course, and it has had a tendency to cause the Bible to be the subject of considerable newspaper comment of late. A London dispatch of March 7 says: The Bible seems to be the chief topic of public interest at the present moment, both in Britain and Germany, and the public press in both countries devotes more space to this than to any other subject. London has witnessed the Jewish lord mayor presiding at the celebration of the hundredth year of the British and Foreign Bible society, whereat Premier Balfour was the principal speaker. The Germans are still warmly discussing the emperor's pronunciamento on the same subject, to which even such men as Max Nordau and Edwin Arnold are contributing popular polemics. The religious world has also taken up Wallace's remarkable theory of the universe in a sympathetic spirit. In fact, the temporal affairs of the men and nations seem to have given place in public consideration to the broadest problems of origin and destiny of the race. The most significant phase of the matter seems to be the sudden birth of tolerance and the absence of sectarianism, which is significantly indicated by the lord mayor's address to the great Christian audience at the Mansionhouse, where he declared that toleration bred toleration and that it was pride and satisfaction for him to preside at a meeting of the Bible society, whose work he wished every success. Some stupendous figures are quoted in regard to the work of the society in the last century. The Bible is now circulated in 400 languages and dialects, and 180,000,000 copies have been distributed. There remain, however, the president declared, 450,000,000 persons who never have had an opportunity to read any part of the Scriptures in a tongue in which it can be understood.

Anything that concerns the "Eastern question" will be of interest to our readers, and so we give the following item clipped from a late paper: The little incursion by unarmed torpedo boat destroyers from the Mediterranean into the Black sea, through the Bosporus and the Dardanelles, was a little test of international opinion. Now have succeeded the troubles in the Balkans, and while the Sultan has shown his usual obsequiousness in the matter of promise, no one expects him to keep them. Had not Christian powers interfered to rob Russia of the fruits of her victory over the Turk, the present question would not have arisen in its present form, and when the Mohammedan tyrant butchered Christians he would have had to give a heavy accounting. But politics were stronger than religion, and so this great empire is still denied an outlet to the world's great highway, according to the views of the Transcript. But conditions in the southwest are explosive and may at any time force an upheaval which will be the empire's opportunity, and when it comes she will probably not wait for it to knock twice. Hence the amazing candor of Mr. Balfour's statement that "the Indian frontier is the only part of the empire adjacent to a first class military power, and in the improbable and unhappy event of a war with Russia we should require not only all the available forces in India but all the forces that Mr. Brodrick's scheme places at the disposal of the crown." Meanwhile the Muscovite bides his time, taking a piece when it comes his way and putting himself in a position to be ready for the next move.

Spurgeon, in a sermon before twenty thousand people at the Crystal Palace, Sydenham, near London, England, said if had to sum up the whole gospel in one word, that one word would be substitution; and added that Christ "took the cup in both hands, and with one tremendous draught of love, drank damnation dry." And yet for many years after that he painted the awfulest word-pictures of the tortures of the damned it has been our misfortune to see. We shudder at such blasphemies, although we could hardly expect any thing else from the serpent's seed.

But when we see those who have some rays of divine light, and are supposed to have exercised their senses by reason of use, so as to discern both good and evil (Heb. v. 14) yes; when we see such building theories upon that baseless, God-dishonoring, gospel-nullifying doctrine,—"substitution," our vocabulary is too limited to enable us to express our grief and sickness of heart. These remarks grow out of the fact that under the specious caption of

THE ATONEMENT

The Restitution contained an article that completely subverts the gospel, and should not have appeared in its columns. We have therefore resolved, that by the help of God, we will in a series of articles endeavor to show that God's ways are equal, that substitution has no place in his redemptive scheme,—but subverts it; and also set forth the truth in regard to the atonement as we understand it.

There are two question which should be answered for the benefit of our readers before entering into the subject proper, the first is: In what does the salvation which is in Christ Jesus, consist?

Ans. in brief: In redemption from death into the life in Christ Jesus. Second,

What means are employed to bring about this result?

Answer (a) God begins the process by begetting us with the Word of truth, James i. 18, and 1 Peter i. 23. The interested reader will look up the proof; (b) God working in us that which is well pleasing in his sight, through Jesus Christ, to whom be glory for ever and ever, Heb. xiii. 21; and Phil. ii. 13, 15. 16; and (c) by our co operating with him, by being blameless and harmless the sons of God without rebuke; working out our salvation with fear and trembling, and holding forth the Word of life to others. This brief statement pre-supposes that our constituents admit the conditions of faith, repentance and baptism, and hence they are omitted. The next question of moment is:—

TO WHOM WERE WE IN BONDAGE?

The language of Paul in Acts xvii. 29 shows the original owner was God.

How did we become the property of another?

Ans. "Elijah said to Ahab, ye have sold yourself to evil work in the sight of the Lord." 1 Kings xxi. 20.

"And thou saith Jehovah, thou hast sold thyself for nought, but thou shalt be redeemed without money." Isa. lii. 3.

In Rom vii. 14 we read: "I am carnal, sold under sin;" but release from bondage by another is shown to result in a change of ownership. When liberated from the bondage of sin we are bond-servants to our Redeemer; we are not absolutely free.

Personal freedom is within the bonds of law; and we are restrained by law. By what law? Why, Christ having rescued us from the thraldom of sin, we are at once under law to him. See 1 Cor. ix. 21. By right of purchase we belong to him. We owe him our service. We have to obey whatsoever he has commanded. Matt. xxviii. 20.

We are Jesus' friends only by doing whatsoever he commands. John xv. 14.

"He that saith I know him and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him." 1 Jno. ii. 3.

There can be no mistake about this, because by believing the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ, and complying with the advertized conditions, we became parties to the transaction,—that is, the transfer of ourselves to another owner; our obedience to the terms as stated, proves we desired the change.

The great commission of the Lord Jesus to his apostles has never been repealed, and therefore as clearly now as then shows who would be redeemed from one hard master, and transferred to another, whose yoke is easy.

"Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be condemned." Does that dispose of these two classes, or does it not? Are the saved ones for ever saved, or only for a given period? Is there any possibility of their needing to be saved again, some time?

And what of the condemned ones? Are they finally disposed of, or are they not? If not, where may we find the next chapter of their history? Is there anything of this sort in the book which is so able to make us wise unto salvation, that the plagues written therein are threatened to those who add to it, or take from it? Or, has the great Head of the church changed his purpose and projected a broader, or more liberal way?

We know that a messenger was dispatched direct from heaven a number of years after the servants of the Lord had been working under the commission, telling them to hold fast to what they had, and that in order to be overcomers and be given power over the nations when he comes, they must keep up his works to the end, without any hint of widening their sphere of labor. Rev. ii. 25-27. He knew that he had laid out for them all they could faithfully do.

The history of the doings of the apostles as recorded by Luke in the Acts, proves that they worked faithfully under the commission and never speculated about anything beyond; and although miraculously endowed, they presumed on no enlargement.

Let us be wise and remember that what is revealed belongs to us, and our children, and what is not revealed belongs to God.

This much by way of introduction; we now look into the matter of

SUBSTITUTION.

A substitute means one who takes the place of another person. In the case in hand Christ is said to have died as the substitute for all mankind. We deny the truth of this; we go further, and deny that he was the substitute of any one,

I. Because God is holy, just and good; and as we are commanded to be followers of God as dear children, it would not be right for us to inflict the punishment due to a wicked, disobedient child upon one we knew to be innocent. The instincts of our nature would revolt at this. It would be absolutely wicked to do so. It would be unjust to do so. And before we can believe that God has done that, we call upon those who say he has, to harmonize that statement with the line of conduct he has marked out for us. He revealed himself to us as excellent in power and in judgment, and in plenty of justice. Job xvii. 23.

If God punished the innocent instead of the wicked, and we are to follow him as dear children, is it possible to obey the command of Jesus to do to others as we would they should do to us?

If we are to love our enemies and do good to them who despitefully use us, is it not wrong to punish the innocent instead of the guilty?

CAN GUILT BE TRANSFERRED TO AN INNOCENT PERSON, if not, is it not UNJUST to punish such?

In the nature of things IT IS IMPOSSIBLE to pardon sin in an innocent substitute. And under such circumstances, how is justice satified, and how is it administered?

As it is positively revealed that every man is to be rewarded according to his works, where is there any need of a substitute? There is need of a sacrifice on account of sin, need of a mediator, need of means for the remission of sin, need of a Redeemer from the power of death,—but no need of a substitute. Every one who is responsible will have to render his own account.

II. Because Eph. ii. 5 distinctly states that it is by grace we are saved through faith. We are constantly hearing about Jesus paying it all; if that so, is not salvation due to all for whom the debt has been paid? Is there any room for the manifestation of God's grace or favor? Would it be just in God to collect accounts twice? When we read, "By grace ye are saved," we have proof before us that God was under obligation to save no one. He could not justly save any unless they were justified. In order that he be just to himself, and at the same time justify men, he had to provide a means of justification that would meet that condition of things.

Take notice that justification does not come direct from God to the individual, but, as we read in Rom. iii. 24, "Being justified freely by his grace through the REDEMPTION which is in Christ Jesus."

The whole race has been condemned to death; all die in the federal head of the race. The sentence went forth, "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return;" that law is in force today. More than 6000 people died in Cleveland the past year. We know from this that the words, "I change not," are also as true as when first spoken. So, it is redemption from death we need.

We are told that Christ has died as our substitute,—died instead of us; but how can that be, when men and women continue to die as if he had not died? Why do some shut their eyes to the every-day proof that if Christ died instead of us, it was a failure?

Will adherents of the substitution theory let the apostle Paul show them that they hug a grand delusion? We beg of them to consult him for once, and meditate upon what he says in Rom. iii. 24 regarding the redemption in Christ Jesus, through which we can be justified, and from thence go to 1 Cor. xv. 12 to 18 and obtain infallible evidence that the redemption spoken of in Rom. iii. 24 is redemption from death.

Having reached that point, take another, viz. there was salvation for NO ONE without the resurrection of Christ. That even those who had fallen asleep in Christ would have perished, if he had not been raised. Then take time to consider matters. Seeing it is held that the death, or the shedding of the blood, was instead of every man, or the full price paid for the resurrection of all, what becomes of that theory, now we have the Spirit's Word for it that his death alone would not even save those who had fallen asleep in him? Can it not be seen there's an awful mistake somewhere? May we suggest what the mistake is? It is the mistake of expecting to be saved without a Savior!

There was still no Savior after Christ had died. His death did not constitute him a Savior! Does some one enquire why? We answer because no one can be saved without justification; and the Word of the Spirit for it, —he "was raised again for our justification." Rom. iv. 5. How much is the doctrine of substitution, or that Christ died instead of us, worth, in view of the last declaration of the Spirit? If it were true, that he died instead of us, that was all that could be required of him, we would get all the benefit of his death whether he were raised or not. But no! The whole race would have remained in the congregation of the dead, had he not been raised 1 Cor. xv. 12, 13.

Are we asked how we can be justified through his resurrection? The answer is, by faith By faith? Yes. It must be remembered that the redemption from death we have been considering is IN Christ Jesus. Rom. iii. 24. "There is no condemnation to them which are IN Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit." Rom. viii. 1. Coupling that with the Spirit's declaration in Rom. v. 1, "Therefore, being justified by faith we have through our Lord Jesus Christ." We at once see what it means when it says, Acts xvi. 31, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved,"—namely, that he in whom all God's promises centre, and around whom all his purposes revolve, and who is the way and the truth and the life, is set before us as the object of faith,—and our faith in him in all his offices and work is imputed to us for righteousness or justification. A dead Savior is a misnomer. No one could have been justified had he not been raised.

What about being IN him? Why, the Lord in the commission commands that believers of the gospel of the kingdom should be baptized into his name; and the Spirit in Peter explains that this is for the remission of sins, justification from all sin; and in Rom. vi. 3, 4, it says, "As many of us as were baptized into his death; i. e., receive the benefit of his death; are reckoned just as if we had actually died by sin as he did, Diaglott; see Rom. vi. 10.

From the above testimony it is seen to be a matter of awful importance to be IN Christ; out of him there is no redemption. But the 5th verse of Rom. vi. gives the grand assurance that if we have been "planted together in the likeness of his death we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection." And when to this is added the testimony of Paul that he suffered the loss of all things in order to obtain a resurrection out from the dead, it must be conceded that that eclectic resurrection is not easily attained.

In Touch with Jesus.

"In touch" is to be very near. If you know Christ you will gladly listen to his instruction. He has words for you which are much needed at this time when almost any advice except his is readily received. He says, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

Oh, how many are weary today, longing for the rest he offers, yet have not made his acquaintance. "Now is the accepted time, now is the day of salvation" or day to accept life and with it peace, joy, and confidence such as you never knew before. He is willing and able to carry all your burdens.

Fretfulness, pride and fear will all vanish, if you are in touch with him. He will take possession of your entire being, and control that greatest enemy of yours—the tongue. James says: "The tongue can no man tame." It is easy, however, for Jesus to do it for you. To be in touch with Jesus means no gossiping, no false impressions given concerning your neighbor; for he has said, "Love your neighbor as yourself." If you are in touch with him you can do all this through him. I know this from my experience with him; "for the fruit of righteousness is sown in peace of them that make peace." It is better to say nothing than to say too much—something you will afterwards regret.

Christ will be your guide not only through life, but through death—the grave—to incorruptibility; for he brought life and incorruptibility to light. We would never receive either, only through his great love for humanity; for while we were yet sinners (yes, enemies), Christ died for us. Then he is so generous! He says: "Whosoever [how broad!] will, let him take the water of life freely." His blood will cleanse from all unrighteousness.

To keep in touch with Jesus means, in this life, peace, gentleness, meekness, patience, love; and at his coming, eternal life.—C. M. Sherman, Herald of Life.

Come Just as You Are.

An artist was painting a great picture, and wanted a man to serve as a model for the prodigal son. He looked long for his ideal before he found one, but one day he met a poor beggar that he thought would answer his purpose. He found the beggar quite ready to sit for his portrait and so made an appointment on the spot, offering good pay and fixing the hour.

When the day came, there came a man, but artist did not recognize him. He claimed the artist had made an appointment for him at that hour. "No," said the artist, "I never saw you before." "You are mistaken, you did see me and made an appointment with me." "No; it must be some other artist. I have an appointment to meet a beggar here at this hour." "Well," says the beggar, "I am the man." "You the man?" "Yes." "What have you been doing?" "Well, I thought I would get a new suit of clothes before I got painted." "Well," says the artist, "I don't want you." He would not have him then.

If you are coming to God, come just as you are. Do not go out and put on some reformation of yours, and think the Lord will accept you because you have some good thoughts and desires.

"God does not say he loves an open handed, liberal, munificent giver, but a cheerful giver."

Divine Love.

After a fire, in which a barn was almost completely destroyed, the owner, walking over the ruins, came upon an old black hen. He wondered that she did not move her head to look at him as he came near her, but he thought she must be asleep. He poked her with his cane, and to his surprise the wing which he touched fell into ashes. Then he knew that she had been burnt to death. But out from under her came a faint little peep, and pushing her aside with his cane, the man found ten live, yellow chickens. The hen had sacrificed her own life to save them.

This was the love of a hen for her chickens. But he who made all living things and planted a portion of his own affection in every one of them, yet feels a deeper love than they can for the creatures he has made. And yet how many despise his goodness and reject his love. Thus of old the Jews rejected the Savior of mankind, while he wept over their folly and said, "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how oft would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathered her chickens under her wings, and ye would not! Behold your house is left unto you desolate. For I say unto you, ye shall not see me henceforth, till ye shall say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord." Matt. xxiii. 37-40.—The Christian.

A Humble Man's Trust.

A learned minister, attending an aged Christian in humble life, when in his last illness, remarked that the passage in Heb. xiii. 5, "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee," was much more emphatic in the original language than in our translation, inasmuch as it contained no fewer than five negatives in proof of the validity of the divine promise, and not merely two, as it appears in the English version; intending by this remark, to convey to him that, in consequence of the number of negatives, the promise was expressed with much greater force in the original language than in the English.

The man's reply was very simple and striking: "I have no doubt, sir, that you are quite right, but I can assure you that if God had only spoken once, I should have believed him just the same."

Items.

There is no knowledge like that of a man who knows he is saved.

We should possess a a divine impatience for the salvation of our fellow man.

A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches, and loving favor rather than silver and gold.

What a man put's first in his life tells where he stands. We know his character by the things he loves.

True hope is based on energy of character. A strong mind always hopes, knowing as it does how slight a circumstance may change the course of events.

God adapts the burden to the shoulder, or the shoulder to the burden. He perfects the drill before he tests the skill. We must reach the place before we get the grace.

You may be as quick as you please in saying words of kindness and sympathy. It is only when the heart is full of bitterness that it is necessary to think hard and count before speaking it.

A rich mind will cast over the humblest home a radiance of beauty and wholesomeness which an upholsterer or a decorator can never equal. Emerson says, "There is no beautifier of complexion, form or behavior like the wish to scatter joy, and not pain around us."

A man is not bad because a viper bites him. Excellent persons are liable to be assailed by malicious slanderers, who, because of their serpent nature, take delight in attacking the good. An apostle once had a viper fasten on his hand, but he shook it off into the fire, and so it did him no harm.

Poetry.

We Thank Thee, Lord.

Now therefore, our God, we thank thee and praise thy glorious name. 1 Chron. xxix. 13.

For the manifold gifts and graces
That have fallen to our share,
For the cheer of fun lar faces
As we tread life's thoroughfare:
For the friendships that are unbroken
The fonds that have passed away,
While thy praise by the band is spoken,
We thank thee, Lord, today.

For the boon of life and duties,
Each day with its dawning brings;
For the ken of the hidden beauties
Which dwell in the lowliest things;
For that sense of ourselves that humbles
And checks the condemning word,
By our side when a brother stumbles,
We give thee thanks, O Lord.

For the need of toil and labor—
The gifts of thy graciousness;
For that view which discerns a neighbor
In each creature in distress;
For the joys of love and laughter
That banish our cares away,
And for faith in the hereafter,
We give thee thanks today.

Christian Kindness.

"Be ye kind one to another, tender hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you. Be ye therefore followers of God as dear children. Eph. iv. 32; v. 1.

Here we have the root and the fruit. A Christian brother was speaking of a certain minister, who was counselling young men not to make a profession of religion, but to be good, and honest, and temperate, and all that sort of thing. Heathen morality, in fact, and nothing else. The heathen teachers taught all that, and taught it as well as some modern teachers do. The worst of it is, that if things have no root, they will not grow. You cannot manage to get foliage or fruit where there is no root. And if you attempt to put on these moralities, and call them the fruits of Christianity, you fail. They are not so. But if you take the Divine plan, and work from the heart outward toward the circumference, you will get fruit, and foliage, and flowers, and all that is good and beautiful.

Now, how shall we know them? See Mat. vii. 15: Beware of false prophets which come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves. Verse 16. Ye shall know them by their fruits. "Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles?"

Brother Foore, the reason your people have such poor success, you have too many so-called Christians in your denomination, that will not pay their honest debts; are only in your church to make money, the same as they did when they belonged to other churches. He remarks, I could name a few of them. They go in debt at the store, slip out and not pay, collect money for other parties, shove the money in their own pockets, leave the brethren there, and move off to other parts to work the same scheme over. Thus driving people away from Christ. Now Bro. Foore, is there no way to remedy such work as this? Signed C. H.

Now brother, listen: That is what Divine grace within us does. It gives the fruits of the spirit. We read here also what are the fruits of the flesh. The Apostle says: Let all bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamor, and evil speaking, be put away from you, with all malice. Then he goes on to say "And be ye kind one to another, tender hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you."

That is the reason. God forgives men; and then it follows: Be ye followers of God as beloved children.

There is no difficulty whatever in a man who is in Christ being all that virtue requires, and all that morality requires. He is in Christ, and he becomes Christlike. The fruits of the spirit are bourne by him—love, peace, joy, uprightness, rectitude, temperance, purity.

These things are in such a man, because the man is in Christ. He will not defraud his brethren, keep back the money he collects, defraud his creditors, buy goods under false pretense, and leave the bills unpaid. He will owe no man anything, but love. He will do unto other men as he would that other men should do to him.

You will never succeed in accomplishing an external reformation, except you begin in the heart. You know all that, my dear brethren, but I bring it before you just now as occurring in connection with my subject.

First then, observe what it is that God calls Christians: Dear children, beloved children, is the expression that is used. God's beloved children; his family, in his Son—having the Father's Spirit within them, admiring the Father's character; exulting in their father. So he condescends to call us his "beloved children," and says to us in effect, Now be like your Father. I have done this for you; I have forgiven you; there is no charge against you; all charges are blotted out; there is no condemnation to those who are in Christ Jesus. You are safe, and will be safe forever. Who shall lay anything to your charge? God has justified, and Christ appears in heaven as your intercessor, so no charge lies against you. But having done all this for you, I want you to be like me, my dear children, not only be glad and gratified, and delighted, that you have such a Father, but try and copy him.

Now, how delightful a thing it is to hear people say of you: Why, this man, these people, are Christlike; they have Godlike principles about them. They are men to be trusted; they are thorough men, for the Spirit of the Lord has been at work within them, and shines out through them in consequence.

Such are truthful men, men who pay their honest debts, and will not rob anyone. No, Divine things have found lodgement in their hearts, and Divine practices are the result, as shown in their every day life and dealings with their fellow beings. They have been to God's school, as dear children. They have cost him a great deal, if we use the word deal in the sense of the price that was paid for them. The Son of God laid down his life for us. Just think of it, my friends, the amazing sacrifice, the astonishing surrender! He gave himself for mankind. God so loved us as to give his Son. His Son so loved us as to give himself. Otherwise there could have been no virtue in the gift. If the Redeemer's death had been forced upon him, our redemption thereby would have been impossible.

But do you not see where this logically lends you? It leads to this, that the being was more than a mere man. It would be sinful in any one of us to give ourselves up to die, for our lives are not our own. The Lord Jesus Christ, on the contrary, gave himself up; and therefore the Father hath highly exalted him, and given him a name which is above every name, that in the name of Jesus—for that is the word—all worship should be rendered to God. See how the Father honors the self-surrender of Christ by making him the medium of homage to the eternal throne forever, and see how he hath rewarded him by making all who thus come to him his beloved children in Christ.

We believers are his dear children, not only because of the price he paid, the redemption price by which we have been purchased, brought back, saved, emancipated, redeemed from captivity; but he has given to us his Holy Spirit. The Holy Spirit, you will remember, came down on the day of Pentecost; and the disciples were then baptized for their great work and mission, baptized into the body of Christ, which is the work of the Holy Spirit; and that Spirit has been continued—that is, the Spirit of Christ—in the body of Christ or the Church. There are, no doubt, numbers of persons who are professing Christians, who have not the Spirit of Christ. I know it is so, but I say that every member of the Church, truly so-called has the Spirit of Christ. You cannot be a member of the Church except you have the Spirit of Christ; for "if any man have not the Spirit of Christ he is none of his." He may call himself a saint, but he is only so in name.

Our God has given to his apostles his Holy Spirit, and thus he has proved that we are his beloved children, his dear children. The fruits of this Spirit are produced in all those whom he thus adopts into his family. All that is the mere doctrine of the matter, but this is its practice: "Be ye followers of God as dear children, and walk in love; as Christ also hath loved us, and hath given himself for us, an offering and a sacrifice to God for a sweet smelling savor."

Be ye therefore followers, copies, imitators of God. In the case supposed of a brother offending, forgive him. In the case of a brother saying anything which hurts another, he is to forgive. Be kind to one another, tender hearted, for that is the spring of kindness; and kindness is but a modification of love, and kindness of action springs from tenderness of heart. If this be so, then we are copying God, imitating him, and doing what he does. His tender heart forgave all our sins and transgressions, and he says to us, Now just copy me, that is all you have to do, do as I have done.

We ought to consider that we are members one of another; and if one member suffers, all the members suffer, and that if one member is honored all are honored. If Christians would thus imitate the Divine Father in the Christ, what a commentary it would make on the side of the truth of Christianity.

We write many books about the evidences of Christianity, and the truth of revealed religion. But if Christians would but imitate their Heavenly Father, we should not need such books. The best kind of book on the evidence of Christianity is the living book. Let every man see and read those epistles which the apostle Paul says, are written in our hearts. Who can read our hearts? You say.

Well, you are manifestly declared to be the epistles of Christ, written not with pen and ink, but by the Spirit of the living God. It is in the heart, and it comes out in the life. You see that man or that woman has been with Christ; you see they are Christians, Christlike, gentle, loving, kind, firm as a rock where principle is concerned, and gentle as a summer zephyr where conduct is exhibited. Nay, the very kindness of the genuine Christian will spring from firmness of the principles of Christianity which he has in his heart. He gives place to subjection—no, not for an hour where error exists. Why? That the liberty of the gospel may remain; that kindness of heart may be cultivated, that "Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith;" that ye might be filled with all the fullness of God.

So the apostle acknowledges the kindness of the Ephesians to him, and in effect says, I feel your kindness exceedingly. It was love to Christ that led you to love me thus. But I am quite prepared to die for the name of Jesus. These things he says with the same breath. Well now, let us get a man of this kind. You may not talk to him about honesty, or integrity, or morality. Trust the man who is alive to God in Christ Jesus. You need not be afraid of him that he will cheat you out of what is justly due you. You need not continually spy or dodge his steps, to see how he behaves himself. He is a Son of God by adoption, his dear child, and as such he will pass through life bearing its burdens, and discharging its duties zealously, and all the time feeling that he is nothing whatever except for the great and glorious fact that he is "accepted in the beloved," the Child of God, in Jesus Christ.

Now, there is another point. It is supposed in these words that the eyes of the world are looking on. Be ye therefore followers of God, as dear children. Walk in love. People will see. You will thereby be witnesses for God. Walk in the ways of God. Follow God, in Christ's footsteps, imitate the Lord God. This is simply a modification of what is said already. You will be living epistles, known and read of all men.

What I wish to say more on this subject is, that it is an exceedingly easy thing to be a Christian. Yes, if you are a child of God, it is easy to imitate him; the genuine Christian has no difficulty whatever about it. That is, if he keeps himself unspotted from the world.

The hypocrite has the difficulty. It is the pretender that cannot succeed. It is the love and craze for money that causes the poor weak one to fall. The child who knows its own home loves father and mother, and walks in love. It is when you are tempted to put on Christianity without Christ in the heart, that you encounter the difficulty. I am such an ardent lover of liberty that I would not be a hypocrite for all the world. To put on a mask, pretending that you are a Christian when you are not, that is unendurable. That is what kills the church, that is what makes infidels. So, contrary to the advice about the small moralities, I say, Be Christians, and then you will have all these lovely things, these graces, these fruits coming out in life, and you will find it easy. But it is not easy to put on Christianity if it is not in the heart. When in Christ it is easy for us to go to the throne of grace with a smile on the face, to speak to our Heavenly Father, and to lift up the voice of song and praise from hearts filled with thankfulness, and to produce fruits of righteousness, which are the glory of God by Jesus Christ.

You are then in the garden, by faith, and the fruits of the garden are bourne by you, and God is glorified. Be ye therefore followers of God, as children beloved. Walk in love. He who walks in the love of Christ will not go far wrong in the doctrines of Christ. As a man is in his heart, so will he be in his life and conduct.

You have now had a glance of the doctrine and precept of these verses.

May the grace of our Lord Jesus the Christ, the love of God our Father, and the fellowship of the Holy Spirit, be with you all.

JOHN FOORE.

Report of Labor.

Saturday morning, Jan. 24th, we left Dutton, Michigan, for Mecosta Co., to do some work for the cause of truth. We began at Decker school house, and held a two weeks meeting, four making the good confession. From here we went to East Millbrook, about two miles from the first point of meetings. Through the courtesy of friends we held our meetings in a Congregational church. It had not been used for several years, and needed to have its walls echo with the sound of the gospel. We were there the two weeks of the coldest weather of the winter—10 degrees below zero several days. We had some opposition here from the Methodist minister, whose church and parsonage was just across the way. We closed after two weeks, with the promise of returning as soon as the weather permitted. We left them much interested in the truth, it being entirely new to the most of them. We were gone from home 34 days, lost 3 days through stormy weather, preached 31 discourses. Reached home in time for our regular monthly meeting. A goodly audience awaited us, and it did seem good to get home with friends, who seemed to appreciate our home-coming. One gets almost discouraged sometimes, even in this blessed gospel work. After leaving the comfortable little home to work hard; sleepless nights, while thinking, thinking, thinking how we can reach the hearts of unconverted, the indifferent, the careless, and almost to reconvert the ones who have made a profession of loving the truth, and seeing so little real fruit for all the talking and work. And then the growing tendency to evade the strong points of the truth, and give something in its place, just as near like the skin of the old serpent as possible, with just a few of his spots knocked off. After all these years to gain a foothold for truth, these things are sickening, disgusting, discouraging. What shall we do, brethren? Stop contending for the faith, and let them have the dish-water gospel? Or like Paul exhort, stand fast, quit you like men, be strong. As far as B. W. Woodward is concerned he will soon stop preaching, or move to a warmer clime, but as long as we are able, we expect to keep fighting the good fight of faith. We must expect the criticisms, fault-findings, scoldings. Yes! from those too, who pretend to love us for the truth's sake, forgetting the years of sacrifice, hard work, weariness and discouragements. They deem it their duty at the least provocation to severely chastise with their tongues, in order to keep the good will of some one, perhaps as far removed from truth as the Equator from the poles. But the promise is sure, he that endureth to the end shall be saved, so fellow laborers, let us be faithful, patient, and receive the reward when Jesus comes.

M. A. WOODWARD.

Common-place Minds.

"The dreariness of intercourse with common-place minds." This is a terrible sentence. We do not know who wrote it, but the moment we saw it we recognized an apt description of a very common experience. "Common-place" is indeed a dreary word, and common-place people, with common-place feelings and common-place thoughts, speaking such very common-place words and moved by common-place motives are so dull! Ditch water is effervescence in comparison with them. Association with such a people is like crossing in a palanquin the four or five miles of sand that forms the bed of an Indian river in the dry season. What a relief it is to come at last to the stream itself, clear, cool, moving on, a thing of life, so fresh and with such suggestion of the mountains whence it came, and of the sea to which it is going, besides the beautiful world of cloud and rainbow and dew-drop that is evolved from its depths. So, too, when we can get away from common-place minds and come near some one whose thoughts sparkle like the river's ripple in the moonlight, whose feeling lifts us up and carries us along like the current of the stream, whose words or it may be moments of sympathetic silence satisfy us like drafts from the stream, we are rested, and wonder why everyone is not thus inspiring and helpful.

But it cannot be. The majority of mankind are very common-place. Nature hides a few gems here and there in great mountains of common material. But common-place things and events and ideas and words, are most common of all things in this common-place world. And it is not strange that some weary soul, pressed beyond endurance by these things, spoke of the "dreariness of intercourse with common-place minds."

Yet there are alleviations. Currents of electricity passing through masses of common place material leaves veins of precious metal. And common-place minds when greatly moved by tragic circumstances or by love, or by sacrifice, are no longer altogether common-place, and we may find them doing deeds of heroism, living for a time it may be on the heights where nothing is common place. The common-place man who is burdened with the consciousness that he himself is fearfully common-place may do something to redeem himself from the desert of his own life. Whatever makes him oblivious of himself and colors his life with the crimson of altruism will do him this service. A common-place parent making great sacrifices for a very common-place child is no longer uninteresting. Selfishness is always common-place, and whatever removes one from its power measurably relieves him from the stigma of the common-place.

But the great refuge of the common-place, whether in one's self or in others, is in God. He dwells in the heights, and the dullest mind and coldest heart are measurably exalted by coming into his presence. Men of rare sensibility can be filled with a tempest of feeling and exalted completely out of themselves by some trifling incident that is but a common-place event to a common-place mind. Thousands of common-place Scotchmen have plowed up the nest of a field mouse without being touched by it. But when Robert Burns' plowshare destroyed the home of the little creature his heart was stirred with deep poetic feeling. A common place mind gets no such honey from the wayside flowers; but even the common place is capable of coming into the presence of the king, and there nothing can long remain common-place. In the Taj Mahal the visitor feels himself in the presence of royalty; the world's poverty is forgotten; nothing common is to be seen. Polished marble is the plainest, cheapest material to be seen. Whatever is not marble is something better than marble. An atmosphere of royalty, of unlimited wealth and boundless resources and superior dignity pervades the place; while in the midst of it the visitor feels himself lifted above the common-place. And when the worshiping, waiting soul, though of coarse fibre and small capacity, comes into the presence of its glory the spark of divinity that is in the most common-place soul is touched and responds and is transfigured and thrilled with sentiments akin to those that inspire the song of the mightiest angel before the throne. Heaven will not be common-place. It cannot be.

A Clean Sweep.

The prodigal son when he started for home, left his herd of swine and all that belonged to his old occupation behind. How offensive it would have been to his honored father, an orthodox Jew, had he brought along a few little "pet pigs"—relics of his former life, to be reared and trained at home. How much more obnoxious to God when one seeking his face tries to hold on to a few cherished sins—an old black pipe, or cigar, the theater and dance, the social glass, card playing, secret lodge, novel reading, and jesting and foolishness and doubtful and worldly amusements and associations that draw men's hearts from God. These things are more foreign to the household of God, and more abhorent in his sight than the rearing of swine to a pious ancient Jew. Whoso confesseth and forsaketh his sins shall have mercy.

False Piety.

When professors of religion are suddenly found wanting in common integrity, or in personal virtue, no other supposition is admitted by the world than that the delinquent was always a hypocrite; and this supposition is, no doubt, sometimes not erroneous. But much more often his fall has surprised himself not less than others; and is, in fact, nothing more than the natural issue of a fictitious piety, which, though it might hold itself entire under ordinary circumstances gave way necessarily in the hour of unusual trial. An artificial religion not only fails to impart to the mind the vigor and consistency of true virtue, but withdraws attention from those common principles of honor and integrity which carry worldly men through difficult occasions. The enthusiast is, therefore, of all men, the one who is worst prepared to withstand peculiar seductions. He possesses neither the heavenly armor of virtue nor the earthly.

In the Crypt.

A few years ago I visited Canterbury Cathedral. After I had wandered through the edifice, the verger asked me whether I would not like to see the crypt, and I readily assented. But I soon regretted that I had done so, for as he opened the doorway that led to the dark recesses of the vaults, there met me a cold, chill atmosphere, heavily laden with the moldy smell of corruption and death. I was ashamed to show any reluctance after having asked to see the burial places of the nation's great men, and proceeded to descend a winding staircase.

The darkness was so dense that I could not see a foot in front of me, but the verger called to me that I would find an iron railing at hand, and by following that I would be guided safely to the crypt. I descended, then, into the darkness of the tombs.

On reaching the bottom I was surrounded on all sides by black vaults, but in the distance I could discern a light, on approaching which I found that the crypt really opened upon the cloister gardens of the whole cathedral. There the glorious sunshine was bringing flowers into bloom, and in the midst of the garden there was a beautiful fountain playing, and I then realized how through darkness I had come to the bright glory of the spring sunshine.

And thus it was that Christ upon the cross, after descending step by step in his humility, passed into the gloom and darkness. I can imagine that as he reached out his hand in the darkness it rested upon the will of God; and as he descended into his grave his soul cried out, "Thou wilt not leave my soul in hell; neither wilt thou suffer thine holy One to see corruption. Thou wilt show me the path of life; in thy presence is fulness of joy; at thy right hand there are pleasures forevermore." Thus, through the darkness of the grave, Christ came into the light of the resurrection morning.—F. B. Meyer.

What Will People Say?

What will the people say? This question can poison our existence and shorten our life.

To thousands who have accustomed themselves to listen to the opinion of others more than upon their own peace of mind, does this question become a curse.

What are the people who today live, and tomorrow may be dead? Shall my welfare lay in the hands of such who are as chaff? Shall I, in order to please them, offer up my happiness of life? Will those people, upon whom we bestow such attention, stand by us when we are the most miserable? Our misery to them is as pleasing as our happiness; both furnish topics of conversation.

A missionary once related the following: A king's son was a prisoner, who, after several years, was released upon the condition that he permit himself to be led at the hour of noon through the city.

"Oh," said he, "how will the people look?"

"You do not yet know how you will be led," answered the king.

When the hour arrived, he gave him a vessel filled to the brim with milk in his hands.

"As soon as you spill a drop you must die," said he.

Close behind the young man walked the executioner with dagger in hand, to stab him as soon as a drop fell to the earth.

From far the people had come together to see the king's son upon his perilous journey; head by head the crowd stood upon the streets. All the windows were crowded and some even climbed upon the roofs. When the youth had passed through the terrible ordeal, the king stepped to him and said:

"Well, what kind of faces did the people make?"

"O, king," said the youth, "I saw not one. I only saw my life in my hand and death behind me."

Let us be like this youth; let us not look around, but take care of ourselves, for we carry the happiness of lives ever with us; and it is only by walking very carefully and heeding the Divine voice that says, "This is the way, walk ye in it," that we can safely reach the goal which is eternal life.

Communicated.

An Exhortation.

Therefore we ought to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard, lest at any time we should let them slip. For if the Word spoken by angels was steadfast and every transgression and disobedience received a just recompense of reward. How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation." Heb. ii. 1-3.

After speaking words of truth and comfort to the many different churches the apostle now comes to the Hebrew brethren with the same bountiful exhortation and instructs and admonishes them as he did the brethren before them, to hold fast all the truth they had learned, and especially to give the more earnest heed to the things they had heard, lest not keeping in remembrance of these things, they should forget and fall from the truth.

Oh, how many there are today who have once tasted of that precious heavenly gift, but because of some unconceiveable doubt they have drifted away from the faith, quite forgetting that they together with us have been exhorted to stand fast in one Spirit, with one mind striving together for the faith of the gospel. It embraces all his truth relating to salvation. The warnings, counsel, invitations, promises, precepts, prophecies or whatever the Lord would have the people hear—the gospel embraces them all. In the days of Noah the gospel included faith, repentance, obedience with the promise of grace and mercy. It also included the warning of the impending judgment. And the only way to escape that judgment was through the gospel. But brethren, may we not be accounted so unworthy as were those idolators. For we read the people sat down to eat and drink, and rose up to play. How fully were we this same occurrence demonstrated in our very midst in this Christian age, because iniquity shall abound the love of many shall wax cold. It is evident that both the abounding of iniquity, and the waxing cold of the love of many, are fulfilled in the professed church of Jesus Christ; and the iniquity here mentioned is in the very heart of the professed church, diffusing its chilling influence through the whole body. As the result the love of many has grown cold. With this agree the words of the apostle, "This know also that in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce-breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God, having a form of godliness but denying the power thereof." We find this catalogue of sins resting upon men and women professing to be followers of Jesus Christ. But the apostle concludes by saying, "From such turn away." Do we find this class of people among us today? Do we? I will leave the question with you, dear readers. Know ye not that they which run in a race run all, but one receiveth the prize. So run that ye may obtain, and we ought therefore fear, lest a promise being left us of entering into his rest, any of you should seem to come short of it. Seeing then that we have a great high priest that is passed into the heavens, Jesus the Son of God, let us hold fast our profession. Heb. iv. 14. The Master said, take heed, watch and pray; for ye know not when the time is, for the Son of Man is as a man taking a far journey who left his house and gave authority to his servants and to every man his work, and commanded the porter to watch. Watch ye therefore, for ye know not when the Master of the house cometh, at even, or at midnight, or at the cock crowing, or in the morning. Lest coming suddenly he find you sleeping. Have we any sleeping ones in our little band? If so wake up, brethren and sisters, and work while it is called today, for we realize that the night of death cometh wherein no man can work. And to the little band of the household of faith, in conclusion, I will say: Let us lay aside every weight and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race set before us, looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith.

Yours in the blessed hope.

Israel in Egypt—How Long?

I am surprised sometimes to see how little some of our leading teachers know. If they would humble themselves, and come to the Lord as James directs in chapter i. 5, instead of studying how they can please the people they would get more wisdom. I read in God's Word many years ago just how he has dealt with his people, and set some of it down in my note book. But one having a stammering tongue like Moses does not like to step to the front, and try to teach those who have a ready flow of words and a smooth oily way of uttering them. But Bro. Eychaner asks, Who can give us the truth? If I am allowed to do so I will copy a few notes from my note book. Abraham was a 100 years old when his son Isaac was born. Gen. xxi. 5. Isaac was 60 years old when Jacob was born. Gen. xxv. 26. Jacob was 130 years old when he went down into Egypt, and died when he was 147 years old. Gen. xlvii. 9, 28. God told Abram that his seed should be strangers in a land that is not theirs,..... and that Israel should be afflicted 400 years. Gen. xv. 13. The Lord said by Moses that the sojourn of Israel who dwelt in Egypt was 430 years. Ex. xii. 40. And we read in Gal. iii. 17, that the covenant that was confirmed before, was 430 years before the law. The promises or covenant was made with Abraham and renewed unto Isaac by oath, and confirmed unto Jacob. 1 Chron. xvi. 16, 17; Psa. cv. 9, 10. By these Scriptures we see that the covenant was confirmed unto Jacob, likely about 13 years before Jacob went down into Egypt, and about the time Joseph was taken into Egypt. And the 430 years of Ex. xii. 40, likely commenced to count from the time Joseph went into Egypt, and the 430 years of Gal. iii. 17, commenced to count from the time the covenant was confirmed unto Jacob about 13 years before he went down into Egypt, and the 17 years Jacob lived in Egypt make the 30 years. With these few notes before the reader, I trust that he can settle this much mooted question. In conclusion I will say, believe God as Abraham did, that it may be counted to you for righteousness.

In hope and love.

J. B. CRATON.

[The few texts that tell all there is in the Bible concerning this question, have now been gone over quite thoroughly, and unless some brother has "new evidence" to introduce we think it well to draw this matter to a close. Of course if any brother has something that has not been brought out—that will be in the nature of "further light"—we will be glad to give it, but if it is but repetition of what has been given, we think writings on some other subjects will be more instructive and profitable.—ED.]

A Good Tree Bringeth Forth Good Fruit.

It is the fruit that is the real test of the worth of the tree. Go out along the country roads, and you may see a beautiful vine, with leaves dark and glistening, yet no one cultivates it, or gives it place in their vineyard. Why? Because the fruit which it bears in rich, purple clusters is harmful rather than otherwise. All the other admirable qualities of the vine cannot make up for this fact. The question with the husbandman is, Will the vine bring forth fruit which will compensate me for my time and labor? If the answer is in the negative, he will not give the vine a place. A man does not have to possess eloquence, or great learning or position, in order to be approved of God; he may have all these, and be of little worth. It is necessary, however, that he be interested in his own salvation and in the salvation of others. Sometimes we judge men by their showy qualities, and lose sight of the fact that God does not look with approval upon the life which does not bear the fruits of the Spirit.

IMPORTANT NOTICES.

All persons addressing us should give their name, postoffice, county and state, plainly and distinctly.

All letters should be addressed to "THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Marshall, Co., Ind."

Remittance should be sent by bank draft, postoffice money orders, or express orders. Money sent in either of the above ways is at our risk, money sent loose in letters is at the risk of the sender. It is folly to think that you can fold bills in a letter so that no one can tell it, for one who handles much mail matter can almost invariably tell a letter with money in it. Take warning and send safely.

All remittances should be made payable to the order of "THE RESTITUTION."

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

In ordering books or tracts get the latest copy of the paper you have and order only what you see advertised in that.

When desiring a change of address, give both your old and new address.

By complying strictly with the above you will save us much annoyance, and your order will be much more promptly attended.

Scriptures Opened.

A third edition of the above named work is just out, and ready for delivery. This book has been before our readers so long now that its worth is well known. The author is Robert Ashcroft. The price for this edition is put low so that the brethren and sisters can get it to lend to honest enquirers after truth. We hope there are a few who have not turned their ears from the truth to fables. The book will speak for itself in its unfoldings of the purposes and plans of Jehovah, regarding the near future of the earth and its inhabitants. All should be interested in these truths, and those who have never read this book will have a feast. Price 65 cents post paid. Send to this office for them, or orders can be sent to J. C. Woodruff, Elizabeth N. J.

Our Helping Fund.

We whose names are given herewith, believing that it is our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending THE RESTITUTION to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our names for the purpose of aiding the managers of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund to be applied as the doners request, (or when left to the publisher to decide) only for those who themselves state their circumstances and need, or whose case is presented by some one known to be trustworthy.

Popular Lectures by M. Joblin.

Brethren and Sisters, Have you loved ones who think sincerity will save them? Have you friends who think they worship acceptably while ignorant of God's promises? Have you acquaintances with false hopes of heaven, or who believe themselves immortal by nature, or who think their sins are forgiven, although they are ignorant of the Law of Pardon, or who have no use for a God who consigns sinners to Eternal Torment, and are ignorant of Jehovah's beneficent purpose to fill the earth with his glory and bestow Eternal Life upon believers of the Gospel, so they can enjoy it for ever? If so, send for Popular Lectures by Bro. Joblin, entitled:—"The Kingdom of God;" "Old Mother Earth to Be Born Again;" "Strangers from the Covenants of Promise;" "Vain Worship;" "No Immortality Out of Christ;" "Hope Begotten by the Resurrection of Christ;" "God's Love and Solicitude for Mankind;" and "What Shall We Do to be Saved?"

A Word of Appreciation.

Some time ago I asked the brotherhood through THE RESTITUTION how many copies of the pamphlet "The Reasons of My Withdrawal from the Evangelical Association," would be wanted. Letters came from all parts of the country, some containing money stating the number of copies desired, so that a second edition of 1000 was printed. I wish to state that this edition is nearly exhausted, there being only about 150 left. Those wishing copies better send their orders early, as they will soon be gone. I desire, by this means, to thank the brethren for their encouraging words and financial help. Trusting that the seed will fall in good soil and produce fruit unto eternal life. 25 pages, at 5 cents per copy. A. H. Zilmer, Plymouth, Ind.

TRUST.

"What time I am afraid, I will trust in thee." Psa. lvi. 3.

When deep trouble would o'erwhelm us
Like a wave, do not despair.
God knows best—be this our comfort,
He will give us strength to bear.
All life's trials; for he bids us
Cast on Him out every care.

He will guide us, he will shield us
Keep us, ever by his side;
Let us trust him fully, wholly,
Make him all our strength and stay;
Living thus will not be cheerless,
Light will beam upon our way.

Confess the Lord Jesus Christ.

In Rom. x. 9, 10, Paul uses the following language, "That if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved. For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness; and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation." We hear a great deal in these days about confessing Christ. I was in an audience where a young miss of 13 years was received into full membership after a probation of 6 months. The preacher in charge read a number of questions from the Discipline in which the answers were, I do, or I will. The question was asked by the preacher and the answer given. I do or I will. One question was, Do you believe in the doctrine of the Holy Trinity? The answer is, I do. So said the miss of 13 years. Now I submit this in all candor. Is it confessing Christ? What did that young miss know about the doctrine of the Holy Trinity? Nothing in fact. Then the preacher caused her to falsify. In fact their preachers accept it as a great mystery.

Again we are told that Christ is confessed by making a public confession, and asking the prayers of the church. Others say, if you confess or say yes to the question, Do you believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God? This is confessing Christ. Without one word about the fact that Abraham's seed and David's son is God's heir to all things. There is to my mind a Babel of voices. One thing is called for and another is given. They are daubing with untempered mortar. "Say to those which daub with untempered mortar, it shall fall." Ezek. xiii. 11. Paul says to Timothy that Christ witnessed a good confession before Pontius Pilate. Now, my dear readers, what was that good confession? See St. John xviii. 36, "My kingdom is not of this world (cosmos, political arrangement), if it were of this world (cosmos), then would my servants fight that I should not be delivered to the Jews; but now my kingdom is not from hence. Christ was the nobleman who was going into a far country to receive for himself a kingdom and return. This good confession was that Christ's kingdom was of a different arrangement, and that he was to go to a far country (heaven) to receive it and return. He has gone there to be invested with kingly authority.

If we confess the Christ of God we must make this confession, and believe also that our Nobleman will return and exercise that kingly authority by occupying the throne of his father David. We may confess with the mouth and believe with the heart some falsehood and it availeth nothing toward our salvation. A good confession is answering a good conscience toward God. To me our actions have much to do in making a good confession. Peter said Acts ii. 38, "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins." They believed, as they asked, What shall we do? Then came the apostle's answer that [illegible] have already given. They evid[illegible] made a good confession in be[illegible] what Peter preached and su[illegible] to baptism. In this se[illegible] tle declares that G[illegible] from the dead to sit [illegible] throne. Our acts must conform to our faith we have believed with the heart and we must confess in our acts. So we must be baptized into his death if we are baptized into Christ. We must be planted together in the likeness of his death that we may be in the likeness of his resurrection. If we fail in this very important point we fail in all. In immersion we confess by our acts that Christ was put to death, was buried and rose again according to the Scriptures. To those who believe that sprinkling is baptism I ask them to define their form or mold of doctrine which Paul says we have obeyed from the heart. Rom. vi. The terms burial and planting imply more than sprinkling a few drops of water. By the act of immersion in water I understand we take upon ourselves the image of the second Adam, the old Adam having been put to death. For Paul says, as we have borne the image of the earthly we shall bear the image of the heavenly, the first Adam Christ. This image is reflected and when Christ who is our life shall appear we shall appear with him.

Permit me to illustrate. We go to a photographer to have a negative taken for some photographs. The photographer prepares the sensitized plate and places it in the camera and then places us in a position that our image may be reflected on the plate. But just as the plate is exposed to the light we dodge. Do we get an impression on the plate? No reasonable person would claim that we would. We may even believe with our heart and confess with our mouth, and fail in conforming to Christ's death, burial and resurrection, we fail in all. Then what will be the result if we do not believe that Christ was raised to sit on David's throne? Will our baptism be valid? If we substitute something for the gospel a[illegible] to obey from the heart that m[illegible] doctrine which will be the end? Paul answers this question in Gal. i. 8, 9. Will our ignorance in this grand truth screen us in that day. "Not every one that saith unto me Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father who art in heaven. Whosoever heareth these sayings of mine and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man who built his house upon a rock. Whosoever heareth these sayings of mine and doeth them not shall be likened unto a foolish man who built his house on the sand. One will stand because built wisely. The other will fall because of its foundation of sand. Dare we disregard these plain sayings and the result in each and expect life when the Master comes? I answer, we dare not. If we confess the Lord Jesus Christ we must do it intelligently, and according to his Word. Believe the gospel of the kingdom of God, repent of our sins and be baptized into the name of the Lord Jesus. Then add the Christian graces spoken of in 2 Pet. i. 5, 7. If these things be in you and abound, they will make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. Therefore an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. The crown is promised to him who runs the race faithfully and endures unto the end. May these things (the Christian graces) be not only in us but abound, which means that they will force every thing else out. Brethren, let us strive for the masteries and in the end we will reap if we faint not.

Christ in the Revelation. No. 3.

Chapter one having revealed the object of the Revelation, and the source of the knowledge revealed therein, goes on to picture to our view the exaltation and glory of Jesus Christ our Lord; holding in his right hand the messengers of the seven churches and walking in their midst. To the church [illegible]esus, he says, "I know thy [illegible]thy labor, and thy pa[illegible]thou canst not bear [illegible]ll; and thou hast [illegible] they are apos[illegible]nd hast found them liars." Having received of his Father seven fold wisdom and power, symbolized by seven eyes and seven horns, he is well qualified to perceive their every act and to know their inward thoughts; their labor, their patience, and their hatred of them which are evil, as to their credit, and shows a healthy condition in their Christian life. They also gave heed unto doctrine by trying those false apostles. The most important item for us to learn is, what was the false doctrine taught by those whom the church of Ephesus found to be liars? And if we keep in mind the directions given by John in his first epistle iv. 1-3, and compare the same with the history of the early Christians in relation to false teachers, we shall be able to detect the false teaching referred to here and for the rejection of which the church of Ephesus is commended by the faithful and true witness. In the epistle referred to John says, "Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God; because many false prophets are gone out into the world. Hereby know ye the Spirit of God; every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is of God; and every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is not of God: and this is that spirit of antichrist whereof ye have heard that it should come; and even now already is it in the world." 1 John iv. 1-3. These directions given by the beloved apostle, are as plain as words could make them, and serve as a touch stone whereby to discern the spurious from the genuine in doctrine; and we have a right to conclude that the church of Ephesus tried those apostles that they found to be liars, by the rule here given by John. The beloved to whom John wrote his epistle had heard that antichrist would come, and now already is it in the world.

Now, how did Christ come, in the flesh or not in the flesh? The answer to this question indicates our position in the distance between the truth of God, and the erroneous teaching of the antichrist. The brethren of Christ who are all taught of God, will answer that he came in the flesh in fulfillment of the Word of God, which said that the seed of the woman should bruise the serpent's head. Gen. iii. 15. And that he should be a prophet like Moses, and of their brethren; and as Paul says in Gal. iv. 4, "But when the fulness of the time was come, God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law." And again he says, "Remember that Jesus Christ of the seed of David was raised from the dead, according to my gospel." The fact that he was raised from the dead, proves that he was dead, and the fact that he was dead, proves that he was mortal. This truth that Christ came in the flesh of our common humanity was of such importance that the Spirit by John says, "If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed, for he that biddeth him God speed is partaker of his evil deeds." 2 John x. 11. The Spirit foreknowing what the teaching of the antichrist would be on the nature of the Christ, has been careful to instruct the brethren of Christ, so that there need be no difficulty to detect the truth from the error on this important point. The historian Mosheim, and Gibbon gives us the account of the heretics in the last days of the apostles. Gibbon after speaking of the fleeting shadows of the Docetus, says, "A more substantial, though less simple, hypothesis was contrived by Cerinthus of Asia, who dared to oppose the last of the apostles. Placed on the confines of the Jewish and Gentile world, he labored to reconcile the gnostic with the Ebionite, by confessing in the Messiah the supernatural union of a man and a God; and this mystic doctrine was adopted with many fanciful improvements by Carpocrates, Basilides, and Valentine, the heretics of the Egyptian school. In their eyes Jesus of Nazareth was a mere mortal, the legitimate son of Joseph and Mary; but he was the best and wisest of the human race, selected as the worthy instrument to restore upon earth the worship of the true and supreme Deity. When he was baptized in the Jordan, the Christ, the first of the aeons, the Son of God himself, descended on Jesus in the form of a dove, to inhabit his mind, and direct his actions during the allotted period of his ministry. When the Messiah was delivered into the hands of the Jews, the Christ, an immortal and impassible being, forsook his earthly tabernacle, flew back to the pleroma or world of spirits, and left the solitary Jesus to suffer, to complain, and to expire." Gibbon Vol. IV. pp. 494-495. Here we find the truth, like its exponent, crucified between two thieves; on the one hand the Josephite—Christ a mere man—the son of Joseph; and on the other hand the God theory which led to the doctrine of the Trinity. It is strange that Cerinthus, in the first century was called a heretic, because he taught the double nature of Christ, and those that teach the same now are called orthodox. Who are right, those Christians of the first century who had John with them, or those of the 19th and 20th century who have with them the Pope of Rome? Brethren of the one faith, who believe there is one body, one spirit, one hope, one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God, Father of all; judge ye. Ver. 4, "Nevertheless I have somewhat against thee because thou hast left thy first love." According to the history of the Christians of the first century of the Christian era, they were not wanting in love to him who died for them; their love to God on account of the good things promised, that they were to receive on account of the death and resurrection of Jesus Christ, and their obedience to his commandments; which good things they hoped to receive when he should return according to his promise, when he should establish his kingdom on the earth with them should reign with him [illegible] called by, and he did not return, their fervent love cooled somewhat. Therefore the reproof, and the council to return to their first love, the proof would be by doing their first works in obedience to his command to love one another; and as he said, If ye love me keep my commandments. It is said that with the early Christians, nothing was too much for one to do for another when in trouble by persecution, traveling a hundred miles on foot to minister to the wants of one in trouble, and to speak a word of encouragement was not uncommon. The importance of love is seen by what Paul says, "Now abideth faith, hope and love, but the greatest of these is love." They are commended for hating the deeds of the Nicolaitans—a sect, the particulars of whose belief and practice we know but little. Ver. 7, "He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches." A common saying of the Master, as "He that hath ears, let him hear." "To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God." The promises by Jesus Christ to the overcomers of the seven churches, contain the concentrated riches that the saints are heirs to through the goodness of God made known to them in the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. The promise to the church of Ephesus directs the mind to the garden of Eden, in the midst of which was the tree of life; and also the tree of knowledge of good and evil. Adam had free access to eat of all the trees of the garden except the tree of knowledge of good and evil. When in the state of obedience man had access to the tree of life; but when in disobedience he was debarred from it. What a lesson all the way down through the ages; Abraham by obedience received the promise, that in his seed all the nations of the earth should be blessed; his descendants, the nation of Israel, when obedient, rode upon the high places of the earth, but when disobedient received the curses of Mount Ebal, as it is today. Jesus of the seed of Abraham by obedience is appointed heir of the world, and the dispenser of the rich blessings promised to the seven churches. Man by disobedience has by experience become acquainted with trouble, disease and death, from which he is unable to save himself; therefore the necessity of a Savior to give him that which was symbolized by the "tree of life."

KINDNESS.

Every stream of kindness flowing,
Strive some feet that sinward roam;
Ever act of kindness showing,
Guides some boy, to save home.

And to those whose strength is given
To the shielding of the weak,
Storms are stilled, the clouds are riven;
Zephyrs chant and sunbeams speak.

Some how these words continue to whisper in my ear of such love, such care, and an unceasing flow of interest we owe to those whom God sends in our pathways, for us to speak comfort to and to bless. Every little act of kindness we show to those about us, are streams of God's love that he has given to us to stay their feet that sinward roam. We must let our works manifest the love for them, and the love we show, and the kindness we share with them are manifestations of the love we have for God, in guiding and leading some mother's child from the cold evil influence of the world to a home within your heart, and a step nearer the Edenic home.

The little lambs outside need to be led by the cool refreshing stream that flows from the fountain of life by the hand that continues to beckon—This way, are the fields of God's love.

"To those to whom strength is given," their living duty ever shines out before them in shielding of the weak. Every home should be the habitation of the Good Samaritan. The boys and girls oft meet far more evil than the man that fell among thieves. The priests, preachers and so-called Christians pass them by on either side, and no word is spoken, no interest shown; but on, that Good Samaritan may be poor, his home a hovel, strength most gone, yet he is [illegible] to God's love, and puts his trust in him and hath said "I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee." He says to the [illegible]outh, "Come." The commanded help is given, the angels rejoice, and the tender plant that knows not where to go, is entrusted to your care, has found a refuge where the storm clouds and the breakers of evil cannot overwhelm.

If every home of those of the faith were homes of refuge for the young, there would be fewer blighted lives. "More diamonds for your crown," "a thousand blossoms flourish, pressing in the track of one."

How often we have seen the clouds of sin, and the influence of the wicked thrown around the lives of the pure, "and heard the ceaseless, ceaseless calling of the dear ones trampled down," and we have, with hurried and unfaltering steps gone to their rescue, and saw the innocent upturned eyes in thankfulness, and felt the grasp of their trembling touch, and heard their words in sobs, "I'm glad to know you had an interest in me." Oh, who can say that God was not there.

"Do unto others as ye would have them do to you." How forcible this seems. Do I? and it now doubt comes to many other hearts—Do I? No doubt there boys far from your hearth stone today that need the counsel and care to lead them from the paths of evil, and how much you would give if you but knew even in distant lands, there were loving hearts trying to guide them in the paths of right. Oh, that debt of kindness you think you ne'er could pay, and your prayers would ascend to God's throne to bless the giver.

But you can repay the debt. There are boys as near and as dear to others as yours are to you. Be their Good Samaritan. Take them to your home in love, bind up the wounds they received among thieves, and pour oil of comfort into the smarting places, and tell about the coming King and his glory, and then "the storms are stilled the clouds are riven, zephyrs chant and sunbeams speak."

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

"Gladly Received His Word."

"Then they that gladly received his Word were baptized; and the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls." Acts ii. 41. There was something preached unto the great multitude. Who was the preacher? By reading the 2nd chapter in Acts we find it was on the day of Pentecost and Peter was the preacher, he was full of the Holy Spirit so we may expect to hear the plain truth, for God was the author of the truths spoken. After Peter told the people that they had killed the Prince of life, and they had become convinced of the fact, they were pricked in their hearts and said unto Peter and the rest of the apostles, Men and brethren, what shall we do? Then Peter said unto them, Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of your sins. Question, Why use the name of Jesus Christ and no other name? Answer, read Acts iii. 1-16; also iv. 10-12. Be it known unto all, and to all the people of Israel, that by the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, whom ye crucified, even by him doth this man stand before you whole. This is the stone which was set at naught by you builders, which is become the head of the corner, neither is there salvation in any other, for there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved. Now we find there were three thousand souls added to the church on the day of Pentecost. Would it be proper to ask what kind of souls they were? If all were Bible students it would not be necessary. They were mortal souls that heard the Word, were pricked in their hearts and were baptized, thereby adding themselves to the church. We find in Acts ii. 43, this language, "And fear came upon every soul; and many wonders and signs were done by the apostles." So we have glad souls and fearful souls all in the same great gathering of the people at Jerusalem on the day of Pentecost. The souls that hear the gospel in this life and obey that form of doctrine, and live a devoted life to God and his cause, will be resurrected and have an abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom of God's dear Son, but fearful souls and sinful souls shall die. The same as it was in the days of Noah, eight souls were saved by water, all other souls were drowned.

My dear brethren and sisters in Christ, I am so anxious that we should all read the second, third and fourth chapters of the Acts of the apostles, so that we can all come to a unity of the faith. Christ Jesus or Jesus Christ, it is used both ways in Acts, also in the name of the Lord, in baptizing candidates into the one body. Christ is our life, our advocate, our resurrection, our Judge, our law-giver, our King, and our faithful High Priest. Paul in Acts xvi. 31 says, "He (God) hath appointed a day, in the which he will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom he hath ordained, whereof he hath given assurance unto all men in that he hath raised him from the dead. John says, "The Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment unto his Son." And David in the 19th Psalm says, "The judgments of the Lord are true and righteous altogether." So God did judge the old world; he judged the Sodomites and Korahites, and destroyed them. It is certain we are nearing the end of this wicked age; we are near James' day, where he speaks of the rich howling. We are near the time spoken of by Ezek. vii. 19, when the rich will cast their gold into the streets. Also Zeph. i. 11-18, he says, Howl ye inhabitants of Maktesh, for all the merchants' people are cast down. 18 verse, Neither their silver nor their gold will be able to deliver them in the Lord's wrath. Brother of like precious faith, can we not tell where we are on the great chart of time? We are nearing the shore, soon if we are faithful we will cast anchor within the great harbor of eternal rest.

Yours in the love of the truth.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, MAR. 18, 1903.

A CENSUS of China has just been taken, and it is found to have a population of 426,447,000.

"As new-born babes, desire the sincere milk of the Word that ye may grow thereby." 1 Peter ii. 2.

"This Book of the law shall not depart out of thy mouth; but thou shalt meditate therein day and night, that thou mayest observe to do according to all that is written therein; for then shalt thou have good success, and shalt make thy way prosperous." Josh. i. 8.

WE lose much by not committing to memory portions of God's Word daily, both from the Old and the New Testament,—meditating thereon day and night, lying down, rising up, going out, and coming in, by the wayside, i. e. the field, and the workshop! While our hands are employed in domestic and other duties, every moment may be profitably and richly occupied, in turning over in our thoughts some precious passage of God's Word.

THERE are blessed promises of God in his book that have been made to suit our situations in life and the various frames of mind which seem to be inseparable from this life, if it is our privilege to call him Father. If faith is weak and devotion a duty, the love of God in Christ should be dwelt upon till the things that still remain be revived. Things will go from bad to worse if you depend upon yourself for reformation. Search the Scriptures—watch and pray.

FOR the past two or three years there has been more or less talk of trouble between Norway and Sweden, and it was thought a conflict was near. It is now given out that such reports were a mere blind to enable each country to increase its armament and preparations for war, that they might thus be prepared jointly to combat their common foe—Russia. It is stated that the preparations are now so complete that they come right out boldly and defy Russia to do her worst.

THE war on ritualism in England is up again, and the House of Commons has passed a bill providing for the punishment by civil courts of clergymen who violate the law by following ultra-ritualistic formules that are not sanctioned by the thirty-nine articles. Heretofore it has been the duty of the bishops to secure the obedience of the clergy, and the charge is made of negligence in this particular, hence the effort to take away this power, and place it with the civil courts, where charges can be brought by laymen. Disestablishment is nearer than ever before, and is the remedy favored by a strong class.

LAST week the Czar issued a manifesto granting religious toleration for all sects throughout the empire, besides reforms in local government to rural communities. Inasmuch as the Czar "reigns but does not rule" in Russia, the world will have to wait and suspend judgment until we see the workings of the reforms decreed. There is such a strong wall of officialism, composed of groups of nobles, who are able to so obscure and cover up the misdeeds of their hirelings, that it is indeed hard for the Czar to have his decrees carried out effectively if these men do not want to accomplish the same ends. This shows, at any rate, that the head of the Russian empire knows that there is injustice in his realm, and need for reforms, so this is one point in his favor. It is to be hoped he can do something to relieve the oppressed people.

The fact that it is God's views, God's objects, God's intentions, God's principles in the manifestation of himself in the woman's Seed, and Abraham's Seed and David's Seed; and because Isaiah testifies for the Spirit that God's ways are not as our ways; that as the heaven is high above the earth, so are his ways higher than our ways, make our subject a difficult one to handle.

Only those who have received the Spirit which is of God in place of the Spirit of the world can rightly enter into the divine method of working, and think with God. Fleshly minds cannot comprehend spiritual things. But we shall aim to express all cardinal points by words which the Holy Spirit teacheth, and not by words which man's wisdom teacheth, and according to the light we have.

We have discovered that Jehovah's rule in working out his plans for earth and man, was, first, that which is natural, (God did not manifest himself in the first Adam). Secondly, that which is spiritual.—the Lord Jesus Christ, the second Adam.

Being still anxious to show that substitution has no place in the divine plan for saving men,—we will now endevor to expose the fallacy of the claim that Christ came to satisfy the demands of the law.

It appears from the record that the Law-giver attached a penalty to the law. And that the Judge pronounced the sentence of death upon the man who violated it.

In all earnestness we ask what claims the law had against the man, after it is said of him that he lived nine hundred and thirty years, and he died? We have no doubt but he returned unto the ground from whence he was taken, as the Judge in sentencing him said he should, and which is the Judge's own meaning of death.

Is it not surprising to hear men talk as if God by some inadvertance or other attached a penalty to his law that he later became dissatisfied with, and without notification added to the penalty what would fully satisfy it?

We hold, then, that Adam fully satisfied the demands of the law upon him, unless Gen. v. 5 be untrue, and Adam be alive somewhere to this day. To us this appears to do God great injustice when the law has been exacting full justice for near 6000 years; and is still exacting it all about us, and the living know that they shall die sooner or later.

It is taught, perhaps not so much as formerly, but still taught, that Christ died to make God placable or merciful, or to awaken kindness in his heart toward man the sinner, or to appease his wrath, or pay the debt of sinners to his inflexible justice. Sufficient has been said in reference to justice. But all the other expressions also teach very derogatory views of God's character. They give the impression that the death of Christ produces a change in the mind of God toward men; and in this its chief efficacy consists.

No error seems to us more injurious. We can endure no shade over the pure goodness of God. We hold that Jesus, instead of calling forth in any way or degree the mercy of God the Father, he was actually sent by or through the mercy of the Father to provide a way to save us so as that the law may be kept inviolate.

We hold that Jesus is nothing but what he is by God's appointment. That he communicates nothing but what God empowers him to bestow. That the Father in heaven is originally, essentially and eternally placable and disposed to forgive; and that this unborrowed, underived, and unchangeable love is the only fountain of what flows to us through the Son.

We hold that Jesus is dishonored, not glorified, by ascribing to him an influence which beclouds the splendor of the Father's benevolence and love.

We reject the fundamental principle of substitution, that man by sinning against an infinite being has contracted infinite guilt. How could a finite being commit an infinite sin? In the nature of things the guilt of a person must be in proportion to his nature, and powers. If a finite being could do one infinite thing, what is to hinder him from doing other infinite things?

We stoutly deny that which grows out of the above, viz. that the sin of man demanded an infinite substitute. Death being the penalty, how could an infinite person pay it?

Popular religionists believe that Jesus was God as well as man; but there are not many who will say as Henry Ward Beecher once did, that God died as man dies. But how can they account for the cancelling of the debt on their own hypothesis?

It is through this idea, doubtless, that eternal torment finds expression. But how shocking the thought that God who has accepted a substitute, does not forgive to all eternity!!

It may be well to state here, that in the Scriptures justification, reconciliation, and righteousness are often used interchangeably. A justified person is one who has been reconciled to God, and has a righteous standing before him. Heb. xi. 6.

It is in view of our corruptibility that justification is granted. Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God. It makes the subjects of it heirs of a glorious inheritance,—that of immortality,—freedom from sin and death, and is to be enjoyed in the long promised kingdom of God on earth.

But this heirship comes of Sonship; and sonship is the result of justification, and this is by faith. All are strangers and foreigners till they are reconciled to the Father through the Son,—and then they are fellow citizens with the household of faith, a present relationship, a present blessing and honor,—honor of sonship,—"Now are we the sons of God,"—but of course the sonship is not perfected.

The reader will please note well, that all there is to be done, in order to reconciliation, has to be done by man; the reason being, as we have shown, God needs no reconciliation to man. The fact that he has provided the means, and pointed out the way for us to be reconciled to himself, is a most convincing proof of this.

The absence of substitution here is a conspicuous feature. Every condition laid down for our compliance is proof positive that no substitute has been accepted in our stead; we have to work out our own salvation with fear and trembling. The conditions given when complied with nominate us, so to speak, or make us candidates for "God's kingdom and glory;" and it remains for us to make our calling and election sure. Every intelligent and honest mind should see that substitution would throw all the divine arrangements out of joint.

What need of a substitute is there when things are exactly as they were when Philip went down to Samaria and preached Christ unto them. He preached no substitution for their faith to take hold of, as the 12th ver. of Acts viii. proves. It says: "But when they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women."

We are afraid there are many who read explicit statements of the Spirit without considering what they mean. In Rom. iii. 24 we read that "Being justified freely by his grace, through the redemption which is IN Christ Jesus." There is one redemption, and that is IN Christ Jesus, nowhere else. There is no redemption out of Christ Jesus. There would be no need of these ar[illegible] were heartily believed.

If we have been saved by a SUBSTITUTE, how, in the name of truth, can we be saved FREELY by his FAVOR? Certainly two opposite statements cannot be true. Certainly substitution has no place in the divine scheme.

A striking confirmation of this is found in Heb. ix. 12 wherewe are told, that Christ by his own blood entered in once into the Holy Place. Look at this carefully. If this be the Word of God he was deeply interested in his own blood. It was a matter of tremendous importance to him. By his own blood he entered in once into the Holy Place, having obtained eternal redemption, i. e., from death. This is infallible proof that he needed redemption and obtained redemption HIMSELF,—sinless as he was,—spotless as he was, personally.

The Jewish high priest entered the typical holy place by the blood of an animal. He could not enter without it; and Christ could not have entered the antitypical Holy place but for his own blood.

But HOW did his blood enable him to enter the holy place? An important question, surely. God made a covenant with Abraham and his seed; and Paul in Gal. iii. 16 says that Christ is that Seed. Abraham and Christ, then are the two legatees under that covenant. It covenanted everlasting blessings, and this involved everlasting life to enjoy them.

This covenant was typically ratified by the blood of animals at the time. The real or antitypical confirmation, or ratification of that bundle of exceeding great and precious promises had to be by the blood of a sinless member of the human family, before it could raise any one up to everlasting life.

Romans xv. 8 will be exceedingly helpful here. It says that Jesus Christ was a minister (servant) of the circumcision (Jews) for the truth of God, to confirm the promises unto the Fathers." That was one object, but there is another given, viz., that the Gentiles might glorify God for his mercy, as it is written, for this cause will I confess to thee among the Gentiles and sing unto thy name. Again he saith, "Rejoice ye Gentiles, with his people, (the Jews) and laud him all ye people."

On turning to Luke xxii. 20 we learn that at the institution of the Memorial Supper on the night of the betrayal, Jesus said, "This cup is the New Covenant in my blood, which is shed for you."

Remember Paul has told us that the covenant from Sinai was added (to the covenant to Abraham) because of transgressions till the seed should come to whom the promises were made. Well, at that writing of Paul the seed had come. The time of the old covenant had run out. The new one had been brought into force.

The old covenant shut out the Gentiles; but the blood of the new covenant being shed, the old was nailed to the cross of Christ, and, as elsewhere stated, the wall of partition between Jews and Gentiles was thus removed; and that is the reason we can thank and praise God, as it is stated we should in Rom. xv.

Every true believer can witness to this effect of the confirmation of the new covenant and no power on earth can stop him from glorifying God for his mercy. He cannot help praising him, for Christ is in him the hope of glory.

As the ratified covenant has done that much for him, he can trust it to raise him up from the dead. It would be ungrateful indeed, not to, after the Spirit in 2 Peter i. 4 has informed us that it is by "these exceeding great and precious promises he is to be made a partaker of divine nature."

As we think we have at least done serious, if not irreparable damage to the out-works of substitution, if the Lord will, we will attack its very citadel in our next.

LIFE.

What is it? Some one has said—"Life is a volume with no table of contents." Yes; but each chapter means so much for each of us. Some lesson to be learned by the hero or heroine. The self, that is making the interesting part of that chapter.

At last the "Finis" comes, as though it was the finale. What we put into each chapter makes the finale; or wears the beautiful waiting crown of glory, with the golden words written above it "Eternal life." How we must fill up every chapter with life records if we wish the crown. We stop so often by the way to write a chapter on Self, our griefs, our fears, our wrongs, our hardships, disappointments. O, what a chapter that is all on self. What an enemy he proves to be to every one. We forget the words "Present your bodies a living sacrifice." We count the days of sorrow and toil, and sacrifice, as though they ought not to come to us, and do not realize what a "living sacrifice" means. To sacrifice is to "devote with loss." Loss to self through devotion to some thing or some one who is to be benefitted.

May we who are waiting for the King to come, be willing to give up self, and write our life chapters for the good of others.

N. B. Fellow laborers, did you notice what an extra good paper the last one was? (March 4) Are you sad? Read first piece of poetry, then follow right down with Bro. Read the several articles on that subject—read the whole paper; every bit of it is well worth your time. God bless Brother and Sister Underwood, for devoting themselves to we readers.

Justification.

Faith and obedience have always constituted the plan by which man can be justified. In this, the Christian age, the gospel dispensation, the day of a completed plan of salvation—there are three vital points brought to view in the gospel plan. The first of these is Faith—faith in God's great and precious promises. For the promise was through the righteousness of faith.

The promises were made to Abraham, and were confirmed in Isaac and Jacob, and in them center the hopes of a Savior, and a home in God's kingdom.

Faith comes by hearing the words of God; and without faith it is impossible to please God. So in coming to God we must believe that he exists, and must believe he is a rewarder of them that seek him.

Paul says, faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen. Then is it not a vital point, and is it not first in God's gracious plan[illegible] man?

Next in the p[illegible] repentance to[illegible] turning from evil[illegible]

Poetry

"As Ye Sow."

Whose days are o'erburdened with care,
And life is o'erclouded with woe,
When pain and unkindness seem double,
'Tis because we deserve it, you know;
Way back in the past we have planted
Unkindness and hatred to grow;
We gather the seed that we sow without heed,
For always we reap as we sow.

Whose eyes are o'erburdened with sadness,
And Hope on bright pinions has fled,
And all the sweet roses of gladness
Lie cold, and forgotten and dead;
Look not yonder with fear for the shadows,
Look not yonder with fear for the woe;
For some one, somewhere, you have planted the tares,
And always we reap as we sow.

Who every day holds a full measure
Of unselfish peace and content,
'Tis because we are reaping some treasure
That had on the past we have spent
Our precious gift of love and kindness,
To find a heart, where it may grow;
The rule is quite just, and believe it we must,
For always we reap as we sow.

[illegible] with tomorrow,
The seed we implanted or sow?
The seed of forgiveness or sorrow—
The seed that will make love's glow?
The spirit of right and of justice
Will follow, wherever you go,
And as for the kind, we will certainly find
That always we reap as we sow.

The Grace of Being Obliging.

There is a great difference in people in the matter of obligingness. Some are always ready to do a good turn, to be of service, to be uncommonly ing. Others are always wanting in this grace. They never show a disposition to confer a favor, to do a kindness, to go out of their way in the slightest degree to be helpful to any one.

Obligingness is a Christian grace. It is one of the manifestations of love. It belongs, therefore, among the essential qualities of a beautiful life Perhaps one may be a Christian and be disobliging, just as one may be disagreeable or discontented or fretful or ungentle, and yet be a Christian. We may not say at how many points one may be wanting in beauty of character and yet be a Christian. Christ sets a very high standard for his followers, but he is very patient with beginners, in the stumbling of their early steps. A disciple is a scholar, and scholars may enter school at the lowest grade. They are scholars when they first enter, though it may be years before they will have completed their course.

Hence one may lack altogether the quality of obligingness when one begins the Christian life, but this is one of the lessons that must be taken up at once, one of the graces in which we must grow from the first. Love can not be disobliging. Love is kind. Love seeketh not its own. The very central quality in love is the desire to serve. If we have the love of Christ in our hearts we will wish to be helpful to every human being we meet or see—this will be our attitude toward all. This feeling will lead us to accept every opportunity to be useful, not only in cases of great need, when large service may be required, but also when only some simple, common kindness is called for.

The training of one's self in obligingness is, therefore, an important part of Christian culture. It is easy to allow selfishness to hold back the hand from kindness. "Every man for himself" is one of the world's maxims, and it is easy to become so absorbed in thinking of one's self and one's own affairs, that the heart shall grow cold toward all others.

But selfishness is always most unlovely and most un-Christlike. The only beautiful life is one that love inspires and controls. The Christian rule is, "Not looking each of you to his own things, but each of you also to the things of others." This does not mean that we should meddle in other people's affairs. There is another Scriptural injunction which puts the meddler in other men's matters in the same black list with the murderer, the thief, and the evil doer. One of the last things a Christian should consent to be is a busy-body. The way Christians are to look at the things of others is in interest, sympathy, and helpfulness, ready always to lend a hand, to do anything in their power to lighten a burden or help along.

Obligingness is a good word. When we say that a man is of an obliging disposition, we mean that he is always ready to do what he can to [illegible] sist others. If we are in some tr[illegible] he comes with his kindly help [illegible] are carrying a heavy load [illegible] share it. Feet Washing.

Yesterday the Church hereat Salem, O., decided that the following be sent to THE RESTITUTION for publication.

In correspondence with brethren I have repeatedly been asked, "Do you practice feet washing?—if not, why not?" Answer, Because the Lord did not teach feet washing. Neither did the apostles, nor the Church.

The grand lesson in John xiii. has nothing to do with feet washing. It is true he had washed their feet—just got through, and said, "Know ye what I have done to you?" No answer. Why? Because he had previously said "What I do thou knowest not now, but thou shalt know hereafter." He was doing a natural act, to teach a great spiritual truth. Humility—sublime tute of mind over which the natural has no power, and at which it stands astonished. Know ye what I have done unto you? No, they did not know. Two things they did know. They knew that he had washed their feet, and they also knew that he was not teaching feet washing, but something far better, higher, and more effective; more necessary to a godly life than feet washing.

This may be said to be the beginning of his last instructions before his death, and goes on through Chapters 14, 15, and 16, and at the end they say "Lo, now speakest thou plainly, and speakest no proverb." Know ye what I have done unto you? You shall know hereafter.

In the circumstances of his shameful and painful mock trial he showed the dignity, the strength and the value of humility, and when the Holy Spirit came upon the disciples they were perfected for their great work, preaching the gospel, the loving message of God to men through his Son Jesus Christ. But they never mentioned feet washing in the Church, but they did both practice and preach humility. They well remembered the words "the servant is not greater than his Lord," and they said "Humble yourselves in the sight of the Lord, and he shall lift you up." "Humble yourselves under the mighty hand of God, and he will exalt you in due time." Yea; all of you be subject one to another, and be clothed with humility.

Much more might be added, but I think the foregoing sufficient, and will close by saying Humility is a bulwark of the Church, and with beloved Paul, beseech and pray that we may all walk worthy of the vocation wherewith we are called. With all lowliness and meekness, with longsuffering, forbearing one another in love; endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace.

Israel in Egypt—How Long?

At the time I raised the question concerning the length of time the Israelites were in Egypt, I had no idea that such an interest would be aroused. I have greatly enjoyed the letters which have been written, especially those of Brother Eychaner and Sister Beebes. Bro. Eychaner has asked some questions to which I would like to know his answer.

Sister Beebes has shown that she has looked up the subject thoroughly. I was a good deal impressed with her view of the time when the "confirmation" took place; but the after thought which came to me leads me to ask some more questions. Is not the language used in Psa. cv. 9, 10, "Which covenant he made with Abraham, and his oath unto Isaac; and confirmed the same unto Jacob for a law, and to Israel for an everlasting covenant" mere rhetorical in its effect? Was the covenant never confirmed to Abraham? What does "confirm" mean? Webster says it means "to ratify" or "to assure." The covenant to Abraham was the promise of landed possessions and the blessing of nations through a promised seed.

These promises may be found in Genesis xvii. and xxii. 15-19. In this latter I find that God swore by himself because he could swear by no one greater. This, it seems to me, gave Abraham all of the assurance necessary. Would not this be all the "confirmation" Abraham could ask for? Did Isaac or Jacob receive any greater assurance?

Regarding this oath as a confirmation, I refer the reader to Rom. vi. 15-18, to show that the covenant was "confirmed" before of God in Christ in the promise and oath made to Abraham.

Rom. vi. 15-18 reads as follows: And so, after he had patiently endured, he obtained the promise. For men verily swear by the greater; and an oath for confirmation is to them the end of all strife. Wherein God, willing more abundantly to show unto the heirs of promise the immutability of his counsel, confirmed it by an oath; that by two immutable things, in which it was impossible for God to lie, we might have a strong consolation, who have fled for refuge to lay hold upon the hope set before us.

Verse 13 says: For when God made promise to Abraham, because he could swear by no greater, he sware by himself.

This certainly refers to the promise that his seed should bless all nations. Paul says this seed is Christ. This is the covenant of God in Christ as made to Abraham. Let us praise God for his goodness to us in laying this plan for salvation in Christ.

Your brother in Christ.

Table Talk.

THE GIFT OF GOD.

God's first gift to man was the earth. He created the earth and all the fowls and beasts, the garden of Eden, with its beautiful trees and flowers and rivers of pure water, and gave it to man. We cannot realize all the beauties of the earth when first given to man, for it is still beautiful after thousands of years with the curse upon it. But man sinned and was driven forth from the garden of Eden, and brought death upon himself and all men, and a curse on the earth. He lost possession of what God had entrusted in his care, yet the gift remains. God called unto Abraham; he called him out from among the heathen and blessed him and made a covenant with him, and gave him all the land of Canaan for an everlasting possession. Yet Abraham did not receive the promise, for he was a stranger and sojourner in the land of promise. Psa. cxv. 17. The heaven, even the heavens are the Lord's. But the earth hath he given to the children of men. But by man came death, and men are still dying. How then can they inherit God's gift? By his great love and mercy. For God so loved the world that he gave his only Begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have everlasting life. God loved man with an everlasting love. This is the gift of God, eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord. When we accept Jesus and believe on him, then only can we understand God's gift to man, the earth for an everlasting possession, for the earth will be redeemed from the curse, restored as Eden, the earth beautiful as it was when God pronounced it good and gave it to man, the curse of sin and death removed. Man redeemed through Jesus can then sing the new song, "For thou wast slain and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood, and hast made us unto our God kings and priests, and we shall reign on the earth; and the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High. He that overcometh shall inherit all things, and I will be his God and he shall be my Son. Then we will know the greatness of the gift of God. But now we only see dimly, but when the whole earth is filled with his glory, and Christ and the redeemed dwell in the New Jerusalem, in that city where they have no need of sun or moon, for the glory of God will the light of it. We thank and praise his holy name for the gift of his Son, who brought eternal life and immortality. May he come quickly and restore all things, and my prayer is that we be ready to receive the gift of God—eternal life.

A Word of Appreciation.

Some time ago I asked the brotherhood through THE RESTITUTION how many copies of the pamphlet "The Reasons of My Withdrawal from the Evangelical Association," would be wanted. Letters came from all parts of the country, some containing money stating the number of copies desired, so that a second edition of 1000 was printed. I wish to state that this edition is nearly exhausted, there being only about 150 left. Those wishing copies better send their orders early, as they will soon be gone. I desire, by this means, to thank the brethren for their encouraging words and financial help. Trusting that the seed will fall in good soil and produce fruit unto eternal life. 25 pages, at 5 cents per copy. A. H. Zilmer, Plymouth, Ind.

Kissing the Rod.

Oh, heart of mine, we shouldn't
Worry so!
What we've missed of calm we couldn't
Have, you know!
What we've met of stormy pain,
And of sorrow's driving rain,
We can better meet again,
If it blow!

We have erred in that dark hour
When our tears [illegible]
All alone!
Were not shine and shadow blent
As the gracious Master meant?
Let us temper our content
With his own.

For we know not every morrow
Can be sad;
So, forgetting all the sorrow
We have had,
Let us fold away our fears,
And put off foolish tears,
And through all the coming years
Just be glad.

Notes By the Way.

The last I wrote I was in Cleveland, Ohio, preaching for the Blessed Hope Mission, which is in charge of Brethren Shourds and McLauchlan, who are zealous in the work. I was making my home at this time, with our worthy Brother and Sister McLauchlan, at 1100 Wilson Ave. The last meeting that I attended while in Cleveland, was the Sisters' meeting of the Blessed Hopechurch. Having bid good bye to our Brother Robert McLauchlan and his estimable wife, I took the train for Meadville, Pennsylvania. Arriving at Meadville, on the Erie R. R., I was met at the station by Bro. Ira Hall, who conveyed me to his home at Randolph, Pa., and was kindly entertained by Bro. Hall and daughter. Bro. Hull is a widower, he has been married twice, but both of his wives are asleep in Jesus, both of them having died of a cancer.

We commenced meetings in the Ex-Methodist church where close attention was given to the Word preached. Some may ask what kind of a church is an Ex-Methodist church? Why this is so named, came about in this wise: H. L. Hastings, some years ago went to Randolph to hold meetings, and application was made for the use of the Methodist Episcopal church, but was refused. Application was then made to a Baptist neighbor who was then building a new barn, for its use, which was cheerfully granted. Seats were placed in it, and was largely attended by the neighbors, who severely criticized the Methodists for their meanness.

After these meetings were over the Methodists concluded to start meetings, but failed, the neighbors would not attend, neither at that time, or any other time since. The Methodists then concluded to pull the church down, and put it somewhere else. Workmen appeared to remove the structure, when the neighbors got together and bought the church, for neighborhood purposes. This is the church in which I preached, and had a nice attention, and questions were publicly asked for information. I trust that fruit may come from the seed sown.

Meetings being ended, Bro. Hall conveyed me to Meadville, to remain over night, and then take the train in the morning for Buffalo, N. Y. That night I had a pleasant visit with Bro. Dunn and wife, at Meadville. In the morning I took the train for Buffalo, N. Y., and was met at the station by Elder Oakley, and taken to his home, and was kindly and hospitably entertained by himself, wife and daughters.

Next day at noon, I took the train for Welland, Ontario. The first intimation that I was about to enter a foreign country, was that a custom house officer appeared and asked me to unstrap my grip, that he may look for dutiable goods.

I was met at Welland by Bro. Wm. Platt, Jr., and by him conveyed to Fonthill, Ontario, and was hospitably entertained by his father and mother, whom I had previously met at the Illinois Conference, and therefore-ed a pleasing acquaintance. I arrived on Thursday night, and that very evening opened meetings in their meeting place in the village of Fonthill. Although the weather and roads were bad, there was a very encouraging attendance. When the weather was favorable, the house was comfortably filled every time. One Baptist lady came to me, and expressed her appreciation of the Word spoken.

A social dinner party of many of the household of faith met one day at the residence of Bro. A. Hanlon and family. Among other guests was Bro. John Lent, son and wife, from Salamanca, N. Y., who came up to visit and hear me preach.

The last two days of my stay at Fonthill, was spent with Bro. Read and family. The first day he harnessed his team, and conveyed myself, his wife and daughter to visit Bro. and Sister Gentry, which was appreciated by me. The next day he took us all to Bro. and Sister Bull's and enjoyed their company also.

I also had a pleasing visit with Bro. and Sister Clark, and Bro. Bonk, with whom THE RESTITUTION readers are quite familiar on account of his writings in that paper. I had several interesting interviews with this excellent brother. May the Lord bless him in his work at Fonthill. My work being ended at Fonthill, I bid farewell to these excellent people, and was conveyed by Bro. Platt to Welland.

I took the train at Welland, for Niagara Falls, N. Y., and was met at the Niagara Station by Sister Evangeline Lent, and was entertained at the home of Sisters Evangeline and Elizabeth Lent.

On Sunday I preached twice for the Church of God at Niagara Falls. The Church was pleased, and in the evening they had a larger attendence from those without than was usual.

On Monday morning, in company with Sisters Elizabeth and Evangeline Lent, and Bro. John Lent, from Salamonca, N. Y., we start d out to visit the greatest natural scene of the world, the Niagara Falls. I wish I could picture it in such a way that THE RESTITUTION readers could appreciate the awful and majestic grandeur of that scene, but neither tongue or pen can do so. The upper and lower rapids, together with the whirlpool rapids are almost as grand as the Falls itself.

We first visited the Upper rapids, which is above the bridge leading to Goat Island. The waters of these rapids come rushing down an incline plane at railroad speed. On this incline plane are numerous small falls like mill dams. Hidden beneath the waters are said to be many huge rocks. The water running at about thirty miles an hour strikes against these rocks, and rushes around them and leaps high in the air. The waters are threshed into a foam, and these white crested billows, beating about in fury, like the waves of the old ocean in a storm, rushes on toward the great precipice below, about one hundred and sixty feet deep, and plunges into the great abyss with a terrible roar. The sheet of water which passes over this fall is said to be twenty-two feet thick. The water at the bottom is a mass of white foam, stirring about like a fierce boiling cauldron; and the spray is seen leaping into the air some two hundred feet high. Sometimes the spray is so thick that it is impossible to see across the river on account of this mist, sent into the air by the falling of the water into this abyss.

On the American side of the river is Prospect Park, and on the Canadian side Victoria Park. In winter time the trees and shrubs in both these parks present a magnificent appearance on account of the spray that is frozen upon them.

In the river are a number of wooded islands. Goat Island is the largest one, some three or four miles in circumference. We passed over a bridge from the American shore to this island. Among these islands the water dashes in fury, making a picturesque sight. I passed over a bridge from Goat Island to Luna Island, and stood by the falls by Luna Island, and also by the falls touching Goat Island. There are three other islands connected with Goat Island, called "the three Sisters."

Passing over Goat Island bridge, we visited Prospect Park. We passed through that Park to Prospect Point, and viewed the falls from that place. The falls called the "cave of the winds," is also a beautiful sight.

Being now weary we went home, with the intention of viewing other points the next day.

On Tuesday morning Sister Evangeline Lent and myself went to the falls with the intention of taking a trip down the Gorge road. The gorge through which the river passes is some two hundred feet deep. The cars pass along this gorge at the bottom along the brink of the river.

Below the Steel Arch Bridge are the Whirlpool rapids. The large amount of water passing through a narrow gorge at this point, whirl, dance and plunge in a wild fury. The next scene is the Whirlpool, which twisting around in eddies, engulph everything which comes within their reach.

We rode down this gorge some eight miles to Lewiston, N. Y. At this point we crossed the Suspension Bridge, to Queenstown Heights, Canada, where a fierce battle was fought between the English and American forces. It was here the British General Brock fell. On the Heights is erected a large monument, with his statue on top, indicating the spot where he fell. We then rode on the surface, skirting the gorge, on the Canadian side to the Canadian falls. Opposite these falls back about a mile and a half is the battle ground of Lundy's Lane.

We next crossed on the steel arch bridge to the American side, and this ended a very interesting trip. I feel deeply in debt to Sister Evangeline Lent, for assistance she rendered me as a guide.

On Wednesday morning I took the 6:40 train on the New York Central and Hudson River R. R., for New York City. The ride down the Mohawk Valley, on the banks of the Hudson River was delightful. I arrived at New York at 8:45 p. m. Was met at the station by my brother Samuel, and started to his home in Jersey City, by boat on the Hudson River. More anon.

Wonders of Nippur—Babylon.

A writer in the North Mail in alluding to the wonderful discoveries of Professor H. V. Hilprecht of the University of Pennsylvania, says, The wonderful story of misty centuries that intervened between the time of creation and the time of the patriarch Abraham may now be largely revealed through discoveries which have been made in the ruins of the city of Nippur, or Babylon. The Professor, who is now back at the University from Constantinople, where he had been for eighteen months classifying the results of his work made these discoveries twelve years ago. 20,000 clay tablets was the reward of his toil, and that of his co-laborers. These clay books, if we may so call them, were taken from the Imperial library which lay concealed beneath the ruins of centuries. Hilprecht estimates that the library will yield 150,000 tablets. Of the 20,000 which have been dug up a comparatively small portion was brought over to this country, the most of them being stored in the Imperial Museum at Constantinople. Hilprecht, after a short stay here, will return to the Turkish capital, and will divide his time between the museum there, and the ruins of Nippur. He will devote his life to the work. He has a mighty task in hand. How these tablets are to "largely reveal the history of the antediluvian times" the writer in the North Mail does not tell us. That they throw light upon the times of Abraham and later, I will not question. That they will reveal more than the opening chapters of Genesis reveal touching the history of those early generations of mankind may well be doubted. If with the brief inspired history before us (too brief to satisfy our curiosity) those early centuries may still be styled "misty" will these tablets dissipate the mist? According to the writer in the North Mail they will do this. The 4th chapter of Genesis in brief affords us some light on the question of human progress in the primitive times. Touching the point of religion there is ground here on which to base the belief that the sons and daughters of Adam (and Adam and Eve as well) were made acquainted with a divinely prescribed mode of worship in accordance with which they were to make their offerings in faith. Paul referring to the offerings of Cain and Abel says of Abel, "By faith he offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice than Cain, by which he obtained witness that he was righteous, God testifying of his gifts." Heb. xi. 4. Primitive man was not a savage, with no knowledge of the God of nature, but is introduced to us as an intelligent worshiper, acquainted with the revealed purposes of Jehovah, in possession of a language sufficiently copious to furnish names for all the different species of animals; words with which to hold colloquy with angels; he was a florist, horticulturist, agriculturist and herdman; and, later, in the line of Cain, a builder of a city or town, with a purpose in view; a tent-maker, a manufacturer of harp and organ, a musician with a taste or passion for music, and the ability to gratify it; an artificer in brass (copper) and iron; to which art he did not advance from the manufacture of rude stone implements, as the sages of science tell us. Will these Babylonian tablets tell us more than this of the times before the flood? What has already been deciphered causes the world of scholarship to wonder, and arouses the curiosity of the reading public as to what may be further recorded on tablets in hand but not interpreted, and on the more numerous ones yet to be unearthed. A [illegible] history concerning art, science, law and literature they confirm Bible history—not that alone covering a few centuries subsequent to the flood, but logically that of centuries before; for if the early Babylonians were as wise as these tablets show, then the lawful conclusion is, that Noah and his ancestors before him were as wise, as advanced as inspired history shows them to have been. Hilprecht says, "The contents of these tablets which we have recovered will all altogether change the ideas of the world as to the state of civilization and knowledge of that early people—meaning the Babylonians at the date to which he supposes the interpreted tablets refer; 2300 years before the Christian era. This long stretch of years carries us down to 43 years subsequent to the year of the flood, even less than this after eliminating Usher's mistake as to the year of our Lord's birth. I think he is off here; there was no Babylon so soon after the flood. But Prof. Hilprecht reaches the lower ruins and interprets the inscriptions on the tablets slumbering there. The years he will assign for the time of founding the first Babylon will antedate the creation of Adam by thousands of years! Then the "higher critics" will say "I told you so;" and Mr. Trumbull of the Sunday School Times will be satisfied that his guess, as to man having been on the stage of this world much longer than the period assigned him is proven true by the learned Assyriologist, Mr. Herman V. Hilprecht, of the University of Pennsylvania. Oh ye of little faith (no faith) in Moses and the prophets; how long will you like Ephrain, feed on wind, and follow after the east wind.

J. L. WISE.

Moses' Ghost.

My Methodist friends still regard me as one of their number and they never suspicion that my questions are often asked solely to give me an opportunity to reveal that which seems to be hidden from their understanding. Since I have been confined to the house by sickness my minister calls very often, says he likes to hear me talk about Scripture. He is not used to hear his members discuss Bible questions. Methodists rarely read the Book, and when they do, they go at it like I do my cod liver oil, viz., with very little relish. Now I don't sneer at them. Until I began reading THE RESTITUTION the Bible, or most of it, was a sealed Book. God sending Michael, the angel, for Moses and his contention with Satan over the matter had no interest to me. Its meaning was hid.

The other day I asked my minister what he thought of God sending for Moses, and the remark about no one so far able to find his grave, etc.

"Well," said he, "you see Moses was a very popular man and if God had not concealed the location of his grave, the people near and far would have almost worshiped the spot."

I reminded him that this was not God's way of preventing evil, for he could have put the apple tree out of sight just as easy as hiding Moses' grave. Our Lord prayed not that evil might be kept from us, but that we might be kept from the evil now here by his permission.

Does it not look like God detailed Moses for certain service, perhaps to take part in the wonderful scene at the transfiguration?

"O, no, that was not necessary," said he, "that was not Moses at the transfiguration, it was his ghost."

Well, brother, you surprise me. Did God ever employ a ghost on any mission, at any time in the history of the world? It is said there are plenty of ghosts in Ireland, but you have to get full at the wake or somewhere else before you can see them. An Irish ghost can handle a stick as well as any man.

No, no, my friend, it was Moses and Elias immortalized, glorified, that appeared in the transfiguration scene. And their presence has a glorious meaning for us. They are strictly members of the human family, and just as they all appeared in the Mount, so will God's people appear in the resurrection life.

This life is the hope set before us in the gospel. My brother, who is now nearing the end of this mortal life, expects to be turned into a good ghost when he leaves us here, and be allowed to fellowship with the better class of ghosts way up above the sky. This is the way he has been trained.

ISAAC MCCURRY, Sr.

Random Thoughts.—No. 5.

I have stated that the kingdom of God, like all other kingdoms, must have, 1st, a place, locality, or territory; 2nd, a king or head to its government; 3rd, a cabinet and other officers to assist the king in his government; 4th, subjects or people to be governed; 5th, laws by which to govern and be governed; 6th, a capital or seat of government, from which the law shall go forth; and 7th, a time when the kingdom was or is to be set up. Whether therefore we speak of its territory, king, rulers, subjects, or laws, etc., we may still be speaking of the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus, the Christ. Now that the "earth is the Lords and the fulness thereof," all it contains. I think no one can doubt the cattle upon a thousand hills, or the thousands of cattle on the hills are his and always were and will be his. Though he gave Adam dominion over all the earth, it was on condition, and Adam failed to comply with the condition, and so justly lost his life and the dominion, but the world was still the Lord's, and is yet, and he giveth it to whom he will, till the King shall come whose right it is, who will be King of kings and Lord of lords, who only hath immortality, etc. When he comes he will possess the kingdom for ever, seeing he will live forever. It will include the "kingdom and the dominion and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven," etc. Dan. vii. The whole earth will be the territory of God's kingdom. I cannot imagine how any other idea can be entertained. Certainly God did promise a portion of the earth to Abraham and his seed. Gen. xii. 1-5; xiii. 14-17; xv. 7 18; xvii. 1-8, and this was renewed to Isaac. Gen. xxvi. 2 5, and to Jacob, Gen. xxviii. 12 14. And that this Seed is one namely, Jesus the Christ. Gal. iii. 16. And Abraham, Isaac and Jacob will be in the kingdom. Matt. viii. 11, 12; Luke xiii. 28, so that the kingdom of God must include the land promised to them, and they have not yet possessed it. Acts vii. 5. Nor did they expect to in their then present mortal state, for they saw it afar off, (Heb. xi. 8, 10, 18, 39) in point of time, and dwelt in it as sojourners and strangers, and all died not having received it. True the children of Israel did possess the land for a time under another arrangement, but this did not fulfil the promise to Abraham, etc. Rom. iv. 13-16. The kingdom, the territory, that had been given to Adam was afterward given to another. Jer. xxvii. 5, and Dan. ii. 36 38, but after all this the saints of the Most High shall possess the kingdom, not as subjects for a little while, but as kings for ever. Dan. vii. 13-14, 18, 27. And Jesus certainly knew what he was saying when he said the meek shall inherit the earth. Matt. v. 10. And certainly if language means anything, the prayer Jesus taught his disciples means that the kingdom will be on the earth, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done in earth as it is done in heaven." Matt. vi. 10. The kingdom will be given to the little flock. Luke xii. 32. The saints shall judge, rule, or govern the world (1 Cor. vi. 2) as kings and priests. Rev. v. 9, 10, and they will reign on the earth, and the kingdoms of the world will then be the Lord's. Rev. xi. 15, 17. We thus see that God's plan is just the opposite to the plan of our clergy, that instead of being God's purpose to take his people to heaven to dwell with him there, it is his purpose that "the tabernacle of God shall be with men, and that he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God." Rev. xxi. 3. And yet the clergy tell us that, if we are good we shall go to heaven when we die, and live there; and if we are wicked we shall go to hell when we die and live there forever! And yet they tell us that neither the good nor the bad die at all, but only the house we live in!

Perhaps I have said enough on this topic, to show that the earth will be the territory of the kingdom of God. That we do not read of kingdoms of God in the plural, but in the singular—the kingdom of God. No promise, or hint is given that the kingdom is or will be anywhere else. Even if it could be proved by our scientific men that the planets are all inhabited, there is no promise that any of us could ever get there. The heavens are Jehovah's, but the earth he has given to the children of men. We are of the earth earthy. And we have no good reason to say or sing, "Heaven is my home." If God wished to take any of us to heaven, I doubt not he would have invited us, but he has not, and I do not think it wise in us to say we will go without an invitation, whether he he wishes it or not. The earth and all God had made were once very good, but on account of sin the earth was cursed, but when the curse shall be removed from off the earth, and all things shall become new; it will all be very good again.

GEO. ELTON.

Do not let us complain over the place in which we are compelled to serve. The Lord hath made us, and the whole plan of our life is so arranged as to bring to their most perfect development the faculties with which we have been endowed. Let us only be concerned that we run not counter to his plans.

Read not much at a time; but meditate on what you read, as much as your time capacity and disposition will give leave; ever remembering that little reading and much thinking, little speaking and much hearing, frequent and short prayers and great devotion, is the best way to be wise, to be holy, to be devout.—Bishop Jeremy Taylor.

The duty of subjection under divine correction is a hard one to learn for some people.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

"Eschew ignorance as a dangerous and fatal evil. If ignorance were bliss God would not have troubled himself to reveal so much to make us wise."

"Have you been wounded with injuries? Meet them with patience. Hasty words rankle the wound. Soft language dresses it. Forgiveness cures it; and oblivion takes away the scar."

To become a new creature in Christ we must put off our old man, which is corrupt, according to the deceitful lusts, or desires, and put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness."

Laborer, you cannot turn any to righteousness by getting discouraged, complaining and giving over. Keep to work then. Do what you can. A few have been saved by the foolishness of preaching, and others may—probably will be, and when all of them are brought together, they will make a comparative "many."

Dr. Guthrie once visited a dying woman in an attic, but seemed unable to make an impression upon her. He said: "My good woman, do you not realize that you are passing into eternity? Do you not care that in a few moments you will stand before the judgment bar?" "No more would you, Dr. Guthrie, if you were as cold as I am," she replied.

Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart. Divine inspiration thus commands. Shall we obey it? Let us awake to the uncompromising work to which we are called. We have no time to waste. All the elements of evil seek our destruction. Let us harness the whole man into divine work, and make a moral entity of the whole combined organism? God has made no provision for exceptions. The gospel direction is to glorify God in body and spirit which are his.

When the hungry man, it is not where was the food found, but where is the food to find? We pray, "Give us day by day our daily bread;" is it not well to have a moral as well as a physical reference in so asking? Did the Lord only mean physically? We think not. Say, reader, has that farm, that business contract, that office, that fine house, that promising prospect, that praise of men, that worldly something stolen your affections? Do you really long to see your Lord come? Can you sing,

> "As a woman counts the days,
> Till her absent lord she sees;
> Longs and watches, weeps and prays,
> So the Church must long for these."

If not, why not?

A Statement and an Appeal.

The Plymouth congregation still owes a few hundred dollars on its Church building. The members are all poor people. They are hindered very much in carrying on the work that might be and that ought to be done, from the fact of having to devote their energies to raising money to pay off this debt. Numbers have been forced by circumstances to move away, and this lays the burden on fewer shoulders.

The brethren and sisters are making a great effort to get the money to lift this debt this year, and it is an object to them to raise as much as is possible by June. Many brethren and sisters have in time past met with this Church, and know of their zeal and earnestness. Many others have read accounts from time to time of meetings held at this place, and work done for the Lord. The hospitality of the Plymouth Church is well known to hundreds. The brethren and sisters always have and shall ever give their homes and the best they have to those who may chose to visit and sojourn with them.

It may be that some who have met with the Plymouth brethren, or others who know of their work, would like to contribute of their means to aid in clearing this house of debt, thus enabling the friends to do the work that now languishes. Should there be any such if they will send to Brother E. K. Barnhill, Plymouth, Ind., he will, as Secretary of the Board of Trustees, make proper acknowledgement, and convey the money to the hands of the Treasurer.

Substitution. No. 4.

Lest our readers should forget what we said in reference to the resurrection of Christ and its relation to the teaching we oppose, we repeat it here:—

"If the death of Christ had been a substitutionary or vicarious death, it would have been of little moment whether he were resurrected or not. But abundance of testimony has been offered, proving unmistakably that the whole scheme of redemption would have been without his resurrection; as he only became the Captain of our salvation after he was made perfect; and also, because there was justification for no one till he was raised,—no remission of sins could be preached in his name; no life and immortality would have been brought to light; no kingdom of God could have been set up on earth.

As we can write only when an opportunity offers, we have to write on such phases of the subject as first come into our mind. At this time I would ask our readers if they have ever considered the words of the Spirit in 1 Cor. xv. 50, "That flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God," in connection with the study in hand? If not, it is time they had. Flesh and blood comes from Adam, the first sinner, in whom we all die. Can they not see that there is no salvation for flesh and blood? If there were salvation, or life for it, it could inherit the kingdom.

Does some one think to himself, "Then what does this passage mean?" It means that the Second Adam is the beginning of a new creation, that is to spring from him, as this race of flesh and blood sprang from the first Adam.

If this puzzles any one in regard to Adam's children, we will say: The new creation is not made directly from the dust as was the old; but it is made out of the old one. Adam's family furnishes the place to sow the seed of the new creation.

Conception takes place in one of Adam's children by receiving the incorruptible seed, the Word of God. 1 Peter i. 23. As soon as begotten has taken place, the subject of it is a new creature in Christ Jesus, that is, mentally, morally and religiously, he is a new creature. All this is a pre-requisite to his being made a new creature physically, when Jesus comes. Clearly, then, no salvation has been devised for flesh and blood except by the change indicated above. There is no room for substitution in the instructions regarding the new creation.

It is said, that "Christ bare our sins in his own body on the tree," very true. But is it true that he bore the sins (sinful acts) of all the world? We are curious to know if it is meant that he bore them instead of all the world? Did the advocates of that theory ever think how ridiculous it is to treat all the sin of the world as if it were a substance so condensed that one human body could contain all that was ever committed? Have they found out how transgressions of God's law could get into the body of one who never transgressed? Have they found a Scripture which explains how he could bear the sins that were not committed for nearly 1900 years after he suffered on the tree? Seeing Jesus was a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief does it not appear that he carried through life the load of sins he bore on the tree?

Ought it not to be seen by this time what it was in the body of Christ that caused pain and death under physical law?

Would it not be wise to take Hebrews ii. 17, 18 as the divine explanation of this matter? It says: "Wherefore in all things it behoved him to be made like unto his brethren, [here follows the reason] that he may be a merciful and faithful High Priest in things relating to God, to make reconciliation for the sins of the people; for in that HE SUFFERED [How?] being tempted, he is able to succor them that are tempted."

Again in Hebrews iv. 15 we read: "For we have not an high priest which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities; but was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin."

Objecting reader, just mentally run over all the infirmities of your flesh, especially in the direction of those which most easily beset you. Think of the times without number they have gotten the best of you; and of the continuous struggle you have to keep the body under the control of the Spirit.

Then remember, that our great High Priest was fitted for his exalted position, by just such discipline as that. Can you wonder that after his incessant labors during the day, together with the contradiction of sinners, the cold mountains and the midnight air, witnessed the fervor of his prayer; or that sometimes he continued all night in prayer?

All can see his life was a life of suffering on our account, but not as our substitute. Divine reasons are given for those sufferings in the last Scriptures quoted. Heb. ii. 17, 18; Heb. iv. 15. And it almost makes us tremble to think of our fate had we no such High Priest as he, touched with the feeling of our infirmities!

Yes; he suffered all this for us, but not instead of us, or else our warfare would have ended with his death. But no, we have to suffer on; and, by the way, suffer with him. If his sufferings we suffer, they remain for us to fill up, and to fellowship them. Our reigning with him is contingent upon this.

The tragic scene on the cross closed his sufferings in the flesh in our behalf, and as one of us. But in place of his dying INSTEAD of us, we are to DIE TO. We have to die with him. We have to be immersed into his death, in order to SHARE ITS BENEFITS.

Rom. vi. 3, 8. Substitution we say again, has no place in the divine scheme for saving; because, by faith and obedience we stand before God as if we had actually DIED as he did. Justification by faith in Christ Jesus,—entitles us to live again through the blood of the everlasting covenant;—just as his OWN justness, or righteousness did him. Said he, "Because I live ye shall live also."

Romans vi. 4 says, "We have therefore been entombed with him by the immersion into that death; that like as Christ was raised from the dead by the glory of the Father, so also we should walk in a new life. For IF we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, certainly we shall be also in that of HIS RESURRECTION. This is absolute proof that we shall obtain life by the same means that he did, viz., the blood of the everlasting covenant.

Rom. vi. 8 will assist still further, we think. It says:—"For he that is dead is freed from sin." Of course this cannot be said of all who die a natural death, because sin never had such dominion over men and women in life as it does in death. That is the wages of sin; Rom. vi. 23; and the ~~reason why~~ of hades prevail against them, as our glorious Lord has promised they shall not prevail against his church, congregation, or body. Matt. xvi. 18.

And lest we should forget his promise, or overlook it during his absence, he despatched a special messenger to John to let us know that he possessed the key to unlock the gates that temporarily prevail against his brethren. Hearken to his blessed and gracious assurance in Rev. i. 18,—"I am the and the living One. I was even dead, but, behold I am living for the ages of the ages; and I have the keys of death and of hades; write, therefore, the things thou sawest, even those that are, and the things which are about to transpire after these." Blessed Jesus, we praise thee for this message to those who believe on thee through the apostolic Word.

Sacrificial death,—the shedding of blood that ratify the everlasting covenant,—blood shed for the remission of sins, was the only death that could free one from sin. Without the death of Christ, the sinless one, no one could ever be freed from sin. But now it is possible for others to die and be freed from sin. If personal sins are not forgiven before death,—a man will never be freed from sin. He will never see life. The wrath of God will abide on him. There is no room for substitution.

The next Scripture we invite attention to, is found in Romans ii. 11, "For there is no respect of persons with God."

Unless we are greatly mistaken, this axe strikes at the very root of substitution.

The reason why we refer to this passage is this: Parts of this chapter are used to prove that salvation is obtainable on some other principle than faith and obedience to the gospel. It is taught that the Gentiles who are said to keep the righteousness of the law do so without having ever heard the gospel or read the law.

We will endeavor to show that this Scripture warrants no such conclusion. Positively we find no natural religion in this chapter, nor, indeed, in the whole book of God; although we find that glory, honor and peace await every man that worketh good, to the Jew first, and also to the Gentile. But God defines what working good is,—not man.

The gospel has been preached ever since Pentecost to TAKE OUT from the Gentiles a people for God's name. Acts xv. 14. Those thus taken out are to be the immortal rulers of the nations in the age to come, and to be the means of their coming to "serve the Lord with one consent." And they will then constitute the "NATIONS OF THE SAVED," sitting under their own vines and fig trees with no tyrants to disturb them.

We now proceed to show that the second chapter of Romans furnishes no support to the doctrine of salvation without faith and obedience. The passage put forth to sustain that idea, reads in this way: "When the Gentiles having not the law, do by nature the things contained in the law, these, having not the law, are a law unto themselves who show the work of the law written in their hearts, their conscience also bearing them witness, and their thoughts the meanwhile accusing or else excusing one another."

We demur to the claim based upon this passage, because a foot note in the Diaglott says the word phusei rendered nature, means also an "Infused disposition, which is become, as it were, natural." We hold that the context is quite in harmony with this definition; showing that the Gentiles referred to as doers of the law, do so in the sense that they have been justified by that new and living way that had been predicted in the law and the prophets. The work of the law is written in their hearts, as it will be written in the hearts of the children of Israel under the new national covenant to be made with them. Jer. xxxi.

We understand the key to this subject is found in the 11th verse, "For there is no respect of persons with God." From the 6th to the 16th verse we are shown that Jews and Gentiles are all under sin,—none being righteous,—not one. All the world are guilty before God; none of them doers of the law; none of them justified.

Condemnation is certain. But Jews and Gentiles are not equally vile. The Jews sinning against greater light deserve a sorer punishment than the Gentiles. The former are reserved for judgment and execution at the appearing of the Lord, who will render to every man according to his deeds. Tribulation and anguish upon every soul of man that doeth evil, of the Jew first, and also to the Gentile; there being no respect of persons with God.

The next verse shows the result of God's impartiality, as follows: "For as many as have sinned without law, shall also perish without law. And as many as have sinned under the law shall be judged by the law, for not the hearers of the law shall be just before God; but the doers of the law shall be justified."

This agrees with the divine rule laid down in Rom. iii. 10, "Now, whatsoever the law saith, it saith to them who are under the law." Here are a number of divine truths clearly stated.

1. The Jews had the law.
2. They did not do the works of the law, and were unjust before God.
3. And will be judged by the law, in the day of wrath, and revelation of the righteous judgment of God. V. 5.
4. Because he is not a Jew which is one outwardly.....But he is a Jew which is one inwardly, and circumcision is of the heart, in the Spirit, and not in the letter, whose praise is not of men, but of God. Ver. 28, 29.

Of the Gentiles we read:—

1. They were not under the law; and therefore not accountable to it. From this we learn (a) that accountability is the basis of judgment with God, and (b) that it is knowledge that makes men accountable.
2. That it was by winking at (literally-overlooking) the times of this ignorance, Acts xvii. 30 that he determined not to interfere with them or punish them,—just GAVE THEM UP to uncleanness, Rom. i. 24, 26, as if of no service to him in his eternal purpose in regard to man and earth; and decreed they should perish without law.
3. That the human family is not divided into two classes only, the good and the bad, or the righteous and the wicked, so named, or just and unjust.
4. That there is a class who will PERISH as if no plan for saving them had been instituted; as if there were no law of sin and death, no law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus; and as if they had no moral faculties that made them capable of attaining to divine nature of existence;—fatally alienated from the life of God through ignorance.

Reader, meditate upon the following utterances of the Spirit, and govern yourself accordingly:

"I am as a man that hath no strength, free among the dead, like the slain that lie in the grave, whom thou remembrest no more." Psalm lxxxviii. 5.

"Like sheep they are laid in the grave; death shall feed on them." Ps. xlix. 14. Do sheep rise from the dead?

"They are dead; they shall not live, they are deceased,—they shall not rise; therefore hast thou visited and destroyed them, and made all their memory to perish." Isa. xxvi. 14.

"As the whirlwind passeth, so is the wicked no more." Prov. x. 25.

"The man that wandereth out of the way of understanding shall remain in the congregation of the dead." Prov. xxii. 16. Did Christ die instead of these?

"The army and the power, they shall lie down together; they shall not rise; they are EXTINCT." Isa. xliii. 17. Is not vicarious suffering a great delusion?

"They shall be as though they had not been." Ob. xvi.

"But these as natural brute beasts made to be taken and destroyed, speak evil of the things they understand not; and shall utterly perish in their own corruption." 2 Peter ii. 12. Did Christ die instead of these?

In John iii. 36, the Lord Jesus says, "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life, and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth upon him." If words mean anything this is confirmation of Prov. xxi. 16—they remain in the congregation of the dead; and also of Isa. xliii. 17,—"They shall not rise."

Again, in John iii. 18 the Lord says, "He that believeth not is condemned already, because he hath not believed in the name of the only begotten Son of God."

Still again in 1 John v. 11, 12 we read, "And this is the record that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life!"

Once more we hear Jesus saying what should lead us to reflect before we say he unconditionally confers natural life upon all or any of those who believe not "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that—[for what purpose?] whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

We believe Jesus expressed the Father's purpose in that verse. If he had reasons not given or embodied in those words they do not concern us, and do not belong to us, because not revealed to us. And it seems to us to be the very acme of folly to speculate, and guess, and wish, and argue and agitate, and compass sea and land to make proselytes to a theory, which practically teaches that God dishonored his own law of sin and death by unconditionally restoring Adam to life, knowing that condemnation had been passed upon all men.

Practically denies that he condemned sin in the flesh of Jesus, although he made him of a woman for that very purpose.

Practically teaches that he who said he would "by no means clear the guilty," has violated his word and failed to vindicate his justice.

Practically ignores the fact that if Jesus had not died AS ONE OF US, we would have no Redeemer today. He could not have satisfied the law of sin and death if he had not suffered its penalty. By reason of righteousness, however, he could not be held under the power of death. His precious blood ratified the life-giving covenant, and by that instrument he lived again and dies no more.

We are terribly in earnest to show our readers that if any one has been justified from all past sin, it is entirely of God's favor, through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus, whom God hath sent forth to be a propitiation through faith in his blood, to declare his righteousness for the remission of sins that are past, through THE FORBEARANCE OF GOD; that is, he declares that he remits sins, and yet maintains the integrity of his law.

Since his offer to forgive sins on certain conditions are entirely attributable to his forbearance, no one can claim it as his right. And we appeal to you if this not divine evidence that no commercial transaction has taken place,—that in the death of Christ, God received no equivalent for sin, and that his Son did not occupy the position of a substitute?

To make the evidence still more conclusive against vicarious suffering, God's favor is further displayed in the appointment of Jesus Christ is to be a great High Priest over the house of God, so that if any man, [in Christ] sin, he has an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous; the conditions being that he walk in the light, 1 John i. 7; and confess and forsake sin, and approach God through Christ. Rom. viii. 34. There is no room for substitution in all these divine arrangements.

Be it remembered that any one of the twelve passages quoted in full above, makes it impossible for Christ to have died instead of ALL men, because the doom of many is announced; and the declaration that God is no respecter of persons, make it impossible for him to have died in the room of any one!

Reader, look earnestly into this matter and you will see insurmountable difficulties in substitution. It involves the unending death of the substitute, and the evasion of death by those atoned for.

"We must think that we may think. One thought follows another, and some thoughts are not possible until after others, and if the first do not appear the latter do not come. Thought runs through time, and must be long as well as constant, to reach full proportions. We need trains as well as single thoughts, and should complete the series. Each thought suggests more, and should be followed as far as it will go, and exhaust our capacity as thinkers."

NOTICE.

To the Bereans especially, or to any of the brethren.

It is the desire of many that Bro. S. J. Lindsay conduct a Bible School for at least ten days prior to the beginning of the next annual Conference to be held at Oregon, Ill., for the purpose of Bible drills or systematic Bible instruction. We all need such Normal instruction, and this letter is to all, and especially to those who may be missed by circular letter.

The plan is for those who take the work to take up lodging in the Conference hall, and do their own cooking and furnishing, thus making their stay as inexpensive as they please.

Oregon is a very pleasant city, located on the banks of Rock River, and an ideal place in leisure hours for an outing.

No tuition will be charged, as Bro. Lindsay has offered his services free for this time. Let us know in good season if you will come. For further particulars address the undersigned, Chairman Evangelist Committee, Illinois State Conference, at Lanark, Ill.

Your Brother in hope.

Obituary.

Anson T. Johns was born in Amhearst Co., Va., April 9th, 1828, died Jan. 24, 1903.

Bro. Johns moved with his parents to Tennessee in 1832, then to Indiana in 1854. In 1858 he was married to Miss Mary Newkirk, and to this union was born eight children, six of whom, with the faithful wife are left to mourn their loss.

He moved with his family from Lawrence Co. Ind. to Washington County, Neb. in 1865. He had united with the M. E. Church in 1860, but in 1870 he was baptized by Elder Shockey, and united with the Church of God, and remained faithful till death.

He moved from his farm to Blair, Neb. about four years ago, so had but a short time to enjoy the fruits of a long life of toil.

Bro. Johns was always ready with his counsel and his means, to help the cause along; was a close friend of the writer, and we will all miss him greatly. Words of comfort were spoken by the writer from the residence, after which we laid him away to rest to await the resurrection.

Poetry.

Words of Cheer.

Ho! weary soul, how goes the conflict?
Droops low thy courage with the day?
Rise grim, impassable, the rock-walled,
It clouded heights across thy way?
Is not dismayed; the circling shadows
Thy panoply alone have formed
From subtler foes; behold, thy Guardian
Beside thee moves, as One full-armed.

Invisible to thee? Yea, doubtless;
Great weariness hath dimmed thy sight.
But list; does not thine ear embolden
Yet catch the chink of armored Might Omnipotent? Can'st thou not, fall ring
In human weakness, 'gainst great odds,
Perceive a strengthening touch that whispers,
"The battle is not yours, but God's?"

'Tis even so; thou art not plodding
Alone thy Savior's weary way.
He walks with thee, thy soul enduing
With strength proportioned to its day.
And as the strife and fiery conflict
In surges rise, and round thee roll,
Let peace within thy bosom hover;
Thy Lord fights with thee, soul to soul.

Christ in the Revelation. No. 4.

Chapter ii. 8, "And unto the angel of the church in Smyrna write; these things saith the first and the last, which was dead, and is alive." Having previously noticed our Lord's claim to be the first and the last, we pass to the statement "which was dead, and is alive." These words are pregnant with important truth; the fact that he was dead, proves that he was mortal—when he came in the flesh: and this is Jesus that was born of Mary, named Jesus by the angel, because "He shall save his people from their sins." Matt. i 21. And Jesus himself said, "I am the living bread which came down from heaven; if any man eat of this bread, he shall live forever; and the bread that I will give is my flesh, which I will give for the life of the world." John vi. 51. He earned life by spotless obedience, and is become the author of eternal life to all who obey him. Ver. 9, "I know thy works, and tribulation, and poverty, but thou art rich, and I know the blasphemy of them which say they are Jews, and are not, but are the synagogue of Satan." Suffering poverty and tribulation, but rich in faith, and heirs to God's everlasting kingdom. Notice here what constitutes blasphemy; claiming to be Jews when they are of the Satan. It would be unreasonable to suppose that any one would claim to be literally a Jew, who was not, because the Jews were at that time a despised race, suffering persecution. But in this book of symbols, and figures of speech, we must expect the word Jew to be used in a different sense. See Rom. ii. 28 29, "For he is not a Jew, which is one outwardly; neither is that circumcision, which is outward in the flesh. But he is a Jew, which is one inwardly; and circumcision is that of the heart, in the Spirit, and not in the letter; whose praise is not of men, but of God." Here we have the sense of this Scripture, and the application to the conditions of the parties referred to is natural and easy. The false apostles of the Ephesian church by this time had made the claim, that they were the true Israel of God. The Spirit of the apostasy that worked in Paul's day, and the antichrist mentioned by John had by this time organized themselves into a church in opposition to the truth. Their blasphemy consisted in claiming that they were the true church of God.

Ver. 10, "Fear none of those things which thou shalt suffer; behold the devil shall cast some of you into prison, that ye may be tried; and ye shall have tribulation ten days; be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life." Here we find the key to the construction of the messages to the churches. The casting into prison, and the ten days of tribulation is prophetic of the future, and confirms the statement that the book is a prophecy of future events as stated in verse three of chapter i; and that the messages to the seven churches are no exception to the rule, but cover seven different periods of time, reaching from the giving of the revelation to the end of this dispensation—to the return of the Lord. It is not reasonable to suppose that the beginning and ending of each period can be fixed exactly, but that certain events and conditions can be noted in the history of the church, that will indicate the chronology of the different periods covered by the seven churches, and that will give us the reason why seven churches are written to, and others passed over in silence. No one we believe that we are near the end of this dispensation, the seven periods if equally divided, (which is not likely to be the case) would be considerable less than 800 years each. It is now our province to locate the fulfilment of the prediction to the church of Smyrna. The prophecy says, "The devil shall cast some of you into prison, and ye shall have tribulation ten days." The rule of the Scriptures is that in connection with symbols, symbolic time is used, and as this book is pre-eminently a book of symbols, we expect in it symbolic time; and we could not reasonably conceive of a period of persecution by an empire against a church lasting only ten literal days. The church is a long lived institution, so is an empire; therefore a day for a year is the Bible rule. This prediction had a literal fulfilment from A. D. 303 to 313. The devil in the case being the Emperor Diocletion—the adversary. Speaking of the edicts of Diocletion against the Christians, Gibbon says, "By the first of these edicts, the governors of the provinces were directed to apprehended all persons of the ecclesiastical order; and the prisons, destined for the vilest order of criminals, were soon filled with a multitude of bishops, presbyters, deacons, readers, and exorcists.....This rigorous order was extended, by a subsequent edict, to the whole body of Christians, who were exposed to a violent and general persecution.....Further Gibbon says, "We cannot acquire a just and distinct idea of this important period of ecclesiastical history, unless we separately consider the state of Christianity in the different parts of the empire during the space of ten years, which elapsed between the first edicts of Diocletion and the final peace of the church." Gibbon Vol. II. p. 69-70. It is sufficient here to say that Mosheim in his church history is in perfect accord with Gibbon as to the ten years of persecution under Diocletion. It would be difficult to make any estimate of the number that suffered death in this persecution. The books of the Christians were mostly destroyed, and it was the expressed purpose of Diocletion to destroy the Christian name. The persecution came upon all the churches in the Roman Empire, and indeed we could not well conceive how it could be otherwise. The prophecy contemplates persecution unto death, because it reads, "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life." If faithful unto death, giving up this life sooner than deny the truth they would gain the eternal life, and thereby would be overcomers, and would not be hurt of the second death; and we see the truth of Mark viii. 35, "For whosoever will save his life shall lose it; but whosoever shall lose his life for my sake and the gospel's, the same shall save it."

GEO. FRANCIS.

Table Talk.

The subject is the Good Shepherd. Who is the good Shepherd? Our Lord Jesus is that great Shepherd, whom God raised from the dead. If we are his flock we love him because he laid down his life for us, that we might be ransomed from the grave to inherit eternal life. Good and upright is the Lord. Greater love hath no man shown than this, that he laid down his life that we might live again. The man that feareth the Lord him will he teach in the way that he choose; his soul shall dwell at ease, and his seed shall inherit the earth.

The Word of the Lord endureth forever. All flesh is as grass, and all the glory of man as the flower of grass. The grass withereth, and the flower falleth away.

May we be humble, sober and vigilant, steadfast in the faith, that when the Chief Shepherd shall appear, we shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away.

For Our Children.

HOW HE WON.

The principal of a school in which boys were prepared for college, one day received a message from a lawyer living in the same town, requesting him to call at his office as he wished to have a talk with him.

Arrived at the office, the lawyer stated that he had in his gift a scholarship entitling a boy to a four years' course in a certain college, and that he wished to bestow it where it would be best used.

"Therefore," he continued, "I have concluded to let you decide which boy of your school most deserves it."

"That is a hard question," replied the teacher thoughtfully. "Two of my pupils—Charles Hart and Harry Strong—will complete the course of study in my school this year. Both desire a collegiate education, and neither is able to obtain it without assistance. They are so nearly equal that I cannot tell which is the better scholar."

"How is it as to deportment?" said the lawyer.

"One boy does not more scrupulously observe all the rules of the school than the other," was the answer.

"Well," said the lawyer, "if at the end of the year one boy has not gone ahead of the other, send them to me and I will decide."

As before, at the closing examinations the boys stood equal in attainments. They were directed to call at the lawyer's office, no information being given as to the object of the visit.

Two intelligent well-bred boys they seemed, and the lawyer was beginning to wonder greatly how he should make a decision between them. Just then the door opened, and an elderly lady of peculiar appearance entered. She was well known as being of unsettled mind and possessed of the idea that she had been deprived of a large fortune which was justly hers. As a consequence she was in the habit of visiting lawyers' offices, carrying in her hands a package of papers which she wished examined. She was a familiar visitor to this office, where she was always received with respect.

This morning, seeing that the lawyer was already occupied with others, she seated herself to await his leisure. Unfortunately, the chair she selected was broken and had been set aside as useless.

The result was that she fell in a rather awkward manner, scattering her papers about the floor. The lawyer looked with a quick eye at the boys, before moving himself, to see what they would do.

Charles Hart, after an amused survey of the fall, turned aside to hide a laugh.

Henry Strong sprang to the woman's side and lifted her to her feet. Then, carefully gathering up her papers, he politely handed them to her. Her profuse and rambling thanks served only to increase Charles' amusement.

After the lady had told her customary story, to which the lawyer listened with every appearance of attention, he escorted her to the door and she departed.

Then he turned to the boys, and after expressing pleasure at having formed their acquaintance, he dismissed them. The next day the teacher was informed of the occurrence, and told that the scholarship would be given to Henry Strong, with the remark: "No one so well deserves to be fitted for a position of honor and influence as he who feels it his duty to help the humblest and the lowliest."

WHY HE FAILED.

A young man who had failed by only three points in an examination for admission to the marine corps appealed to his representative in Congress for assistance, and together they went to see the Secretary of the Navy, in the hope of securing what is known as a "re-rating" of his papers.

How many more chances do you want?" asked Secretary Long. "This is your third time." And before the young man had a chance to answer, the Secretary continued: "How do you expect to get along in the world when you smoke so many cigarettes? Your clothes are saturated with their odor. Pull off your glove and let me see your fingers. There, see now yellow they are!" pointing to the side of the first and second fingers.

Before the young man found his tongue to offer an explanation, the Secretary asked him if he drank.

"Only once in a while," was his answer.

Secretary Long then invited the Congressman into his private office, and while offering to do everything that he could, added: "I am sick of trying to make anything of these boys that are loaded with cigarette smoke and 'drink once in awhile.' They are about hopeless, it seems to me."

When they left the department building the young man, half apologizing for his poor showing, remarked, "My father says that drinking is the bane of the Navy."

"I guess it is," replied the Congressman, laconically. "It is the bane of everywhere else, and I should think quite likely it would be in the Navy."

The young man promised to turn over a new leaf absolutely, in both particulars, and was allowed to have another chance.—St. Louis Christian Advocate.

Selected.

The Second Coming.

There are many today who are saying, "Our Lord delayeth his coming." The world, and the worldly-minded Christians, are not expecting his coming, and are not willing to believe that it is at all imminent. They do not expect it because they do not know God's Word, and so do not interpret the signs of the times in the right way. If they attempt any interpretation of them at all, they simply say, "All things continue as they have been from the foundation of the world." Or they excuse their ignorance by saying, "I don't believe we ought to worry ourselves about such things."

Even the suggestion of the thought that Jesus is coming back again ought to make every Christian happy. Does it make you happy? It will if he is your "all in all." And it will not if there is something, or somebody, of which you think more than you do of Jesus. [illegible] there is at the prospect of the early return of a loved one; and if Christ is really a "loved one" in our hearts, and holds a place second to no other there, there will be no sweeter thought come to us than that of soon seeing him who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people, and who is "the chiefest among ten thousand" to us.

On that day when the disciples stood on Mt. Olivet and saw their ascending Lord wrapped in a cloud and disappear in the great vault above, they stood looking, with the hope, perhaps, that they might catch another glimpse of that glorified Jesus as he swept up and away into the unfathomable space of heaven. Jerusalem with all its beauty, the temple and all its magnificence were nothing to them now, Jesus was gone. "The hope of earth and joy of heaven" had gone to "fairer worlds on high." Probably their hearts felt sad and lonely for a little while. But not long. For had not Jesus said to them one day, after he had been telling them that he was going to leave them, "I will not leave you comfortless." And now, even though he had scarcely disappeared from their view, he will not leave them in suspense, but as they looked two men stood by them in white apparel and said. "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." And Luke says in the last verses of his gospel, "And they worshiped him and returned to Jerusalem with great joy, and were continually in the temple, praising and blessing God."

What made them joyful? They had heard from angel lips that their Lord was coming back again. They loved him. Of course such blessed news made them joyful. Sad were their thoughts when they saw him, with whom they had held such sweet converse, whose heart could love as no human heart can; whose love could touch the harlot and the publican and the sinner; sad, I say, were they, when they saw him go. But when the fact of his return is revealed to them straight from heaven, they grasp it, and sadness gives place to joy. And they go through life with that bright hope ever before them. It makes tribulation sweet and death a joy. Living in the constant thought of the Lord's return, their one desire was to be doing those things which were pleasing to him, and which they would be pleased to be doing when they should see him face to face.

When you see Christians who are indifferent to the fact of the Lord's second coming, or who are always trying to find some reason why he can not come for quite a while yet, you may be sure that they would not be glad to meet him, just as they are now. There is something in this world, the thought of separation from which gives them pain. There is a reason for everything; therefore there is some reason why they are not anxious to meet him whom they profess to love. You ask them if they love the Savior, and they say they do. But if you should continue the question, and should get an honest answer you would find that they loved something else, which they would not like to take into the presence of Jesus.

O beloved, if your heart does not leap with joy at the thought of standing, perhaps tomorrow, in the presence of the blessed Jesus, why is it? Search your heart. Let God, through his Holy Spirit, turn in the light of heaven and let every dark spot be revealed. Don't cringe a particle. Open wide the doors and windows of your heart and let the probing knife of the Holy Spirit go clear through to the bottom of your soul. Is there a single unholy affection there? Let the knife cut it out. It may hurt. It may prostrate you for a time, but the convalescence will be sweet. Shall I define for you, in just a word, an unholy affection? Any affection is unholy which makes your affection for Jesus less intense. Is there any thought in your heart which does not mix well with thoughts of God? Let it be driven out. You may think it will leave your mind a blank for a time, but he will put a better, richer thought in its place.

Let this searching continue until all has been revealed and dealt with, and then the words "Jesus is coming" will fill you with inexpressible delight. The Christian ought to consider himself in great danger, as he really is, if he is not filled with joy to know that Jesus is soon coming.

When the call shall echo through woodland, across prairie, through valley, and over hilltop and mountain peak, "Behold, he cometh! Go ye out to meet him!" If it finds a happy, answering echo in your heart, you understand the call and spring forth in answer to the summons.

My dear reader, seek that place in Christian life where the happiest thought of your being is, "Jesus is coming."—Gospel Witness.

"The Last Day."

The sun had just risen, and one of its beams, smiling through the window, fell lovingly upon the pallid face of a sufferer, who had lingered many days with that dreaded disease, consumption. The form was emaciated, but the eyes were as bright as jewels. The father, who had been a patient watcher, stood by the head of the bed. "Papa," said the voice, now weakened to almost a whisper, "this is my last day." At the close of the day, as the evening shades were gathering, like a flower she folded her hands upon her breast and fell asleep in Jesus.

If the minister knew that next Sunday he would preach his last sermon, how full of love and timely warning it would be; such words of entreaty—prayers of mercy and deeds of kindness, yet it may be the last sermon.

If the men or women that today refuse the call of mercy, knew it to be their last one, they would not so coolly turn Jesus away. Yet it will come.

Preachers will preach the last discourse, close their Bible the last time, leave the pulpit, having entered it the last time and made their appeal.

Editors will write their last editorial, and lay down their pen, never to pick it up again. Their last day will arrive.

To the unsaved, God will call the last time; the last refusal will be made. The day is approaching; it may be to-day. And as I write it seems that I have never till now fully understood—today may be my last day.

God help us, if today should close our account with earthly life, that we may awake to a new day, in the resurrection morning, where last days never come.

Be Generous while Alive.

I have felt that it is a great mistake to put off being generous till after you are dead. In the first place you lose the pleasure of witnessing the good that you may do; and, again, no one can administer your gifts for you as well as you can do it yourself. It is a great pleasure to be brought into personal relations of that kind, and to make people feel that you are not a philanthropist in the abstract, but that you are interested in them personally and care for their welfare. In that way you benefit them not merely in a natural way, but you make them feel that men are really brothers, and that they were made to help one another. That feeling is not only agreeable in itself, but it will be apt to prompt them to carry out the principle themselves. Put yourself into all you do, and let others feel that you are there. Do not only contribute to a charitable fund, but go yourself and help. It may seem an inconvenience at first, but soon you will come to consider it worth any inconvenience.—O. W. Childs.

God's Book the Best.

If asked what a man should chiefly look to for the power that is to sustain him under trials and enable him to confront his inevitable affliction, I must point him to something which in a well-known hymn is called "the old, old story," told in an old, old Book, and taught with an old, old teaching, which is the greatest and best gift ever given to mankind.—W. E. Gladstone.

The Law of Helpfulness.

"Bear ye one another's burdens." We easily see how it would help the other for us to bear his burdens. It would lighten his load. But would it not be adding just that much to our own? It may seem that way, but often it is not the case. Bearing the burdens of others often makes us throw aside and forget our own.

We have a friend who has had, and still has sufferings and infirmities. She has often told us of them. But now another member of the family is lying low, and she has forgotten about herself. She no longer talks of her pains and infirmities except to lament that she can do no more.

It is often thus. Concern for others causes self-forgetfulness. Bearing the burdens of others relieves us of our own. The law of help to others proves a law of help to ourselves.

We once read of a traveler so benumbed with cold that he was about to lie down to die. But just then he saw another traveler who was already overcome with the cold. He went to him and began to rub his stiffening limbs. In a little while exertion brought warmth and vigor to his own, and thus in saving another's life he saved his own.

The favored ones are not those who have only their own trials and burdens, but those who through hearing the burdens of others forget their own and develop a noble, unselfish disposition.

The Richest Nation.

Viewed from the standpoint of an English statistician, the United States is rated as the richest nation in the world. The admission is made by no less an authority than the "London Daily Mail Year Book" for 1902, a copy of which was recently received by the Treasury Bureau of Statistics. Under the head of "Wealth" it groups the wealth of five nations:—United States, £16,350,000,000; United Kingdom, £11,800,000,000; France, £9,690,000,000; Germany, £8,053,000,000; Russia, £6,425,000,000.

While the United States heads the list of countries in its wealth, it shows the smallest national indebtedness: £221,000,000; Germany, £351,000,000; United Kingdom, £706,000,000; Russia, £711,000,000; France, £1,230,000,000.

God's "Hall-mark" of Character.

No manufacturer of gold or silver is permitted to sell his goods in England without the hall-marking of the government as to the standard of its purity. Everything that is not up to professed standard is broken in pieces by government hall markers. Such heavy penalties are imposed on fraudulent hall-marking that, as the 'Scientific American" tells us, "attempts to deceive the public by means of spurious hall-marks are unknown." God's hall-mark of character is the sinless robe of Christ's righteousness. Nothing else will admit to his kingdom. No man will there enter on his good deeds, or his "charity," or the good opinion of his neighbors. He must not attempt to mix these or his sins with the pure metal of God's requirements. Only the heart wholly yielded to God will stand the test. That being yielded to the Master Assayer, the Divine Alchemist, it is transmuted into his own likeness, and the "hall-mark" of eternity placed upon it. This sealing of God may be yours, reader, whoever you are.—Signs of the Times.

A writer in Zion's Herald writing of the part Russia is taking in getting ready for the struggle in the far East has the following to say:

Millions of dollars are being expended by the Russians in the construction of immense fortifications, the erection of magnificent buildings, and the dredging of a wide harbor at Port Arthur. Every hill has forts and frowning guns. Three ships are in course of construction, the men being worked night and day in separate shifts. The harbor is now large enough to furnish anchorage for the entire Russian fleet, but the dredging is still going on. On a recent occasion twenty-one war vessels were counted in this harbor. There are fifteen thousand soldiers in the garrison, and the big burly fellows are in evidence everywhere. Port Arthur is the Pacific Ocean terminus of the Manchurian railway system—all under Russian control. It is not far from Japan, and the warlike preparations that are being made at Port Arthur indicate that Russia is preparing for the inevitable conflict between the Slavs and the Orientals.

Our Letter Drawer.

Dear brothers and sisters:

I have been a regular reader of this paper for thirty years, and now that it is time to renew our subscription again, I cannot think of doing without it; for I know I should sadly miss all those interesting and instructive articles written by our able brethren from which we receive the hidden manna or food for the inner man, continually, as the days are going by. Yes, I have often thought of what a kind, sympathetic and ever ready friend we have in the silent visits of our good, old weekly paper. Not only do we receive instruction through its columns, but comfort and consolation to the believer in every trial and affliction through which we are called to pass. It affords us grand opportunities to become acquainted with the faithful ones all over the land, even by letter. During our Christmas love feast I counted 52 letters in one number, 18 states represented by them, and all speaking the same thing and exhorting one another unto love and good works, each expressing an ardent desire for the soon coming of our King, who will change our vile bodies and fashion them like unto his glorious body, then we will be fitted to enjoy the divine government that he is coming to establish, for to him every knee is to bow, and every tongue confess, for he is to be King of kings and Lord of lords. 1st Tim. vi. 15, "Yea, all kings shall fall down before him, all nations shall serve him." Psa. lxxii 11. Yea, we rejoice to know that during his reign peace and righteousness shall cover the earth as the waters cover the sea. Who is it that cannot pray "Thy kingdom come thy will be done in earth as it is done in heaven." As THE RESTITUTION has been such a help and comfort in the past let us not only renew our subscription but send in as many more new names as possible and thereby introduce these truths into other new homes.

I have sent in several new names this year, and hope to send more as soon as spring opens and I can travel about. Let us all be willing workers in the vineyard of the Lord, for soon the night cometh when no man can work. Let us do faithfully what our hands find to do, until the Master comes to gather his jewels and crown them with life eternal.

SARAH F. MORGAN.

Editor Restitution:

The reason I have not written to renew my paper is because I have had a severe spell of sickness, and not quite well yet. But thanks be to the Lord I am up and about. I am glad that so many of the dear scattered ones have written so many nice letters for the dear RESTITUTION. They cheer us isolated ones. Oh, how our hearts glow with love in reading them. I don't know how long I will be spared to read the dear old paper, but I expect to read it as long as I can see to read anything.

I am just past the 83d mile post of my age. Enclosed is money for renewing THE RESTITUTION for another year.

Lovingly your Brother in the Lord Jesus Christ.

A cannon ball of the enemy, plunging into the ground at Sevastopol, opened a spring of water for the soldiers there. A block of granite, put in the way for a stumbling block, may become a step upward. The Jews' persecution of Paul was the means of his getting safely to Rome and preaching the gospel there.

Popular Lectures by M. Joblin.

Brethren and Sisters, Have you loved ones who think sincerity will save them? Have you friends who think they worship acceptably while ignorant of God's promises? Have you acquaintances with false hopes of heaven, or who believe themselves immortal by nature, or who think their sins are forgiven, although they are ignorant of the Law of Pardon, or who have no use for a God who consigns sinners to Eternal Torment, and are ignorant of Jehovah's beneficent purpose to fill the earth with his glory and bestow Eternal Life upon believers of the Gospel, so they can enjoy it for ever? If so, send for Popular Lectures by Bro. Joblin, entitled:—"The Kingdom of God;" "Old Mother Earth to Be Born Again;" "Strangers from the Covenants of Promise;" "Vain Worship;" "No Immortality Out of Christ;" "Hope Begotten by the Resurrection of Christ;" "God's Love and Solicitude for Mankind;" and "What Shall We Do to be Saved?"

A Word of Appreciation.

Some time ago I asked the brotherhood through THE RESTITUTION how many copies of the pamphlet "The Reasons of My Withdrawal from the Evangelical Association," would be wanted. Letters came from all parts of the country, some containing money stating the number of copies desired, so that a second edition of 1000 was printed. I wish to state that this edition is nearly exhausted, there being only about 150 left. Those wishing copies better send their orders early, as they will soon be gone. I desire, by this means, to thank the brethren for their encouraging words and financial help. Trusting that the seed will fall in good soil and produce fruit unto eternal life. 32 pages, at 5 cents per copy. A. H. Zilmer, Plymouth, Ind.

Mid-Week Meeting, at Cleveland, Ohio.

Our lesson for tonight is taken from Jno. xv. 5. "I am the vine, ye are the branches, he that abideth in me and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit, for without me ye can do nothing." "I am the vine, ye are the branches." This is taken from one of Jesus' sermons to his disciples. It is a part of his farewell sermon to them before his crucifixion. In the preceding chapter he had been consoling them in their sorrow at the prospect of his leaving them, and assures them God will send them a comforter to take his place. And in our lesson of tonight he is endeavoring to show them the relative position they occupy in God's vineyard, Jesus the vine, his disciples the branches, and God the husbandman or vine dresser. I am the vine, ye are the branches. The first thought that suggests itself to us in the study of this lesson is the union thus established and the dependence shown. We know from the standpoint of nature how dependent the branches are upon the vine for sustenance and how absolutely essential it is that they remain intact in order that both may thrive and that good fruit may be borne, and if by any means the branch becomes separated from the vine, how quickly it withers and is cast away. And as it is in the natural so it is in the spiritual. We as branches are dependent upon Jesus, the vine, for sustenance. For proof of this we read what he says in the 4th verse of this chapter. "Abide in me and I in you, as the branch cannot bear fruit of itself no more can ye except ye abide in me." Thus we see that our success as fruit-bearing branches in God's vineyard depends upon our abiding in and our desiring sustenance from Jesus the vine. And in connection with this the question naturally arises, how can we abide in the vine, and what is the manner of our abiding. Our excellencies from the natural in that we are grafted branches. This grafting took place when we had learned the things concerning the Kingdom of God, and Jesus the King and were baptized into Jesus for the remission of our past sins. Then we become grafted branches of the true vine, and in order that we may thrive as branches, we must continue in the things we have thus learned. The thought of fruit-bearing implies live branches, the thought of us as branches being workers together with Jesus the vine. We know that dead branches bear no fruit and are only a detriment to the vine, and while it is true that by our abiding in Jesus, the vine, and continuing in the things we have learned, we may be able to bear much fruit, yet it is evident from what Jesus says in the second verse the fruit we bear must be ever on the increase. Every branch in me that beareth not fruit, he, God the vine dresser, taketh away, and every branch that beareth fruit he purgeth it that it may bring forth more fruit. This then corroborates that oft repeated statement, God's standard is always onward and upward. Our fruit bearing is always on the increase, leading us Jesus said, on to perfection. Then if this purging or cleansing process is to enable us to bear more fruit, the question arises, "What is the process God employs?" We find the answer in the third verse. "Now are ye clean through the Word which I have spoken unto you." This then gives us the key. The word Jesus gave his disciples was the Word of God, the gospel of salvation, and it is this Word that cleanses us and enable us to bear more fruit. The manner of cleansing is apparent. But in order that the Word may become effective and that it may accomplish the desired end, it must be applied daily and hourly to our lives. We must be as the branch, constantly in touch with it, that it may cleanse us from all that would be a detriment to us as fruitful branches. We must be like David, have it indited in our hearts, and if we do, it will surely make itself manifest in the fruit we bear. Paul in his first letter to Tim. iv. 15, "Meditate upon these things, give thyself wholly to them, that thy profiting may appear to all." There is one beautiful thought in connection with this lesson of the vine and the branches, and that is, both are working together for one cause, and this cause is the ultimate result of a faithful performance of duty; viz: Herein is my Father glorified that ye bear fruit, so shall ye be my disciples. Thus we see the end in view is, that God may be glorified, and if he is glorified, we are stamped as true disciples of Jesus and are thereby sure of a reward. The fruit that we bear will be manifested to those without in many different ways. Did not Jesus say it is by our fruit we are known, then if our fruit denotes that we are branches of the true vine, men will see our good works, and as Jesus said, be led to glorify God, and perchance some may become impressed by the effectual working of the gospel in us, and be induced to become branches or fellow laborers with us in God's vineyard. Then is a sad fate waiting those who are unfruitful branches, God who seeth all things is the vine dresser, and as Jesus said, every branch that beareth not fruit he taketh it away. Why? Because a branch that bears no fruit is a detriment to the vine and the sooner taken away the better, and the end of such branches is destruction. These can be likened unto those to whom Jesus when he comes shall say, Depart from me, I never knew you; and to those who shall be cast in outer darkness. And what a lesson there is in this for us, what a stimulating effect it should have upon us, making us strive to become fruitful branches lest we meet a like fate. Our rewards are determined by the fruit we bear, the work we do. Jesus said, "Behold I come quickly, and my reward is with me, to give to every man as his work shall be." Finally then we see that our success as fruit bearing branches depends upon our remaining in touch with Jesus, the vine, and in our keeping in mind the things we have learned, putting them into practical use. And may we all strive to become fruit bearing branches, as Paul says, study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the Word of truth to the end that God may be glorified in us, and that we may obtain the reward he has promised to the overcomers.

CHAS. SANFORD.

THE DANGERS OF RICHES. 1 TIM. VI. 9.

To the natural mind, to be rich is one of the most desirable conditions that could be thought of. It enables one to have all the necessities, comforts and luxuries of life, to see and have all that one could wish, in fact, it enables one to gratify their every desire.

Truly it seems a wonderful thing, and the more we think of its power the less we see in it, and if we follow our natural bent we soon come to the conclusion that instead of being an evil, it is a good. But here we must stop and think. Is there anything else that it brings? Ah, yes, just listen to those verses: "But they that are rich fall into temptation and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in destruction and perdition. For the love of money is the root of all evil, which while some covet after, they have erred from the faith, and pierced themselves through with many sorrows." 1 Tim. vi. 9-10.

And yet the one thing most sought after is wealth. But even though after years of toil and care, wealth at last is secured, is man satisfied? No, because although it may be a great consolace, and save him many hardships, yet it cannot save him that which is precious to him above all things, his life. No, it takes something more than riches to save his life, it takes faith and obedience and love and godliness, and so we might go on and name all the Christian virtues.

God in his infinite goodness has so ordained things that although we may not own a dollar in the world we may secure life, and an inheritance in his kingdom. But we do not have to have wealth to be rich, it says, "Charge them that are rich in this world, that they be not high minded, nor trust in uncertain riches, but in the living God, who giveth us richly all things to enjoy. That they do good, that they be rich in good works, ready to distribute, willing to communicate." How much better it is to be rich in good works, for if we lay up our treasure in heaven, thieves cannot break in, neither can moth or rust destroy.

"But thou, O man, flee these things, and follow after righteousness, godliness, faith, love, patience, meekness. Fight the good fight of faith, lay hold on eternal life, where unto thou art also called, and hast professed a good profession before many witnesses."

Therefore, brothers and sisters, let us strive to increase in these, the true riches, that instead of the trouble, temptations, and sorrows incident to worldly riches, we may gain that peace which is above price, that peace which only the humble believer in Christ can secure, and then we can rest assured that when Christ comes we shall receive our inheritance, and be among the little flock who have witnessed for him.

BUELL A. NUTT.

What Think Ye of Christ?

A SYMPOSIUM.

Flavel, Eternity cannot unfold him. Daniel Webster, I believe Jesus Christ to be the Son of God. Garibaldi, I love and venerate the religion of Christ. Ingersoll, Had I been in his day I would have been his friend. Thomas Paine, The morality that he preached has not been excelled by any. Napoleon Bonaparte, I know men, and I tell you that Jesus Christ is not a man. Disraeli, Has not Jesus conquered Europe and changed its name to Christendom? Dr. Franklin, I think that the system of morals that he taught and his religion are the best that the world ever saw, or is likely to see. Gladstone, All that I think, all that I hope, all that I write, all that I live for is based upon the divinity of Jesus Christ. Matthew Arnold, No other conception of righteousness will do except Christ's conception of it. Renan, In Jesus Christ is condensed all that is good and exalted in our nature.

The above symposium was taken from a religious journal published by one of our popular churches. While we admit that the language in each statement is finished, we fail to see that it in any degree answers the question, What think ye of Christ? And as the different contributors to THE RESTITUTION seem to be laboring very hard to present the Christ of the Bible I thought it might be interesting to our readers to see how hard the churches are trying to cover up the truth in the expressions of men who seem to know nothing of God's plan as unfolded in his Son, the Christ. One statement is clothed in the language of the Bible, viz: I believe that Jesus Christ to be the Son of God. As far as we know the author of this language lived and died without a saving knowledge of the Son of God. No where in his writing does he give expression to any religious thought, other than that taught by the popular churches of his day. No expression is found during his life that Christ was David's promised Son. Therefore a statement made by this writer is without value in answering the question at the head of this article.

The question, What think ye of Christ? is found in Matt. xxii. 42, and was submitted by Jesus to the Pharisees after they had made an effort to puzzle him by questions. Their answer was, "The Son of David." Jesus answered them, "How then doth David in Spirit call him Lord, saying, The Lord said unto my Lord, Sit thou at my right hand, till I make thine enemies thy footstool?" If David then called him Lord, how then is he his Son? And no man was able to answer him a word. Why? Because they did not [illegible] that the promise [illegible] to David in his old age. Now who is acquainted with the covenants of promise this is an easy question. In 2 Sam. vii. 12, we find this promise to David, "And when thy days be fulfilled, and thou shalt sleep with thy fathers (lie), I will set up thy seed after thee, which shall proceed out of thy bowels, and I will establish thy kingdom forever." Those who have studied with care admit that "the seed" here spoken of is Christ and not Solomon. Solomon's kingdom was not established forever. He occupied David's throne before his father's death. This seed was to be set up after David's death. He was to occupy the throne forever, which Solomon did not. So we find substantial reason in this Scripture for believing that David's seed here spoken of was promised a future reign and much more glorious than that of Solomon. If you doubt these statements please read David's prayer recorded in this chapter, beginning with the 18th verse. This is the Son whom David calls Lord, and who is of the lineage of David. Paul in Rom. i. 3, concerning his Son Jesus Christ our Lord, which was made of the seed of David according to the flesh, and declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the spirit of holiness, by his resurrection from the dead.

While Jesus was David's son according to the flesh, being the son of Mary, he was David's Lord according to the spirit of holiness (or his spiritual nature) his resurrection from the dead. And in the kingdom of God or David's kingdom restored to Israel he can with propriety call Christ his Lord. I will invite your attention to the 110th Psalm from which the question is taken, propounded by Jesus to the Pharisees. The Lord said unto my Lord, sit thou at my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool. The Lord shall send the rod of thy strength out of Zion; rule thou in the midst of thine enemies. Thy people shall be willing in the day of thy power. The Lord hath sworn, and will not repent. Thou art a priest for ever after the order of Melchisedeck. The Lord at thy right hand shall strike through kings in the day of his power. He shall judge among the heathen, he shall fill the places with the dead bodies; he shall wound the heads over many countries. He shall drink of the brook in the way; therefore shall he lift up the head. What does the writer teach in this Psalm? Will it apply to the work of the churches of today, or has it a place in the future under the leadership of Christ. It comes in the unfolding of God's plan of establishing forever the seed of David. It is one of the covenants of promise. Peter said, God raised Christ from the dead, to sit on David's throne. This is one of the covenants of promise spoken of by Paul in Eph. ii. 12. If we are strangers to these we are without Christ, having no hope, and without God in the world. It matters not what you may believe about Christ, it availeth you nothing if you accept not God's covenant to David. When Jesus asked his apostles, Whom say the world that I the Son of Man am? And they said, some say that thou art John the Baptist, some Elias, others Jeremiah or one of the prophets. These answers differ widely as do the professions through the churches today. They seem to agree in answering the question who Christ is; but they differ in their theological ideas. Let Peter answer the question from a Scriptural standpoint. "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." We might put it in this language. The anointed Son of the living God, so declared by his resurrection from the dead. No pre-existant Christ whom God placed above death; no part God and part man. The Seed of the woman made under the law. A man of sorrow acquainted with grief. "He hath poured out his soul unto death." In conclusion let me admonish you to "study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the Word of truth."

Your brother seeking for the truth.

Fellow Workers.

Did you see the appeal from Plymouth, Ind., in paper of March 25th? If not please find it and read it carefully. If you read it and thought, well that does not affect me; I do not live in Indiana, please read it again, and consider that State lines cannot separate us from doing our duty and helping along with God's cause. "Oh, no man anything" was written for our instruction. You are trying to keep out of debt that when the Lord Jesus comes you can be free in that respect. Are you one member of the body of Christ, made so by adoption into his family in the sacred rite of baptism? So are the Church at Plymouth. The Christ unselfishly gave his life for his entire body, or church. Shall we follow his example? and while we strive to keep from personal debt, and keep our own home church free, let us remember the needs of our neighboring churches. If we are workers together with God, it will not matter where we are located, our Christian duties are the same. Is money sparingly dealt out to us; we can prove our love for the truth by using a little sacrifice now.

Where is our tenth? Could not a part of that go to Plymouth? If not more than 25 cents, or 50, or $1.00—every nickel will help make up the amount so necessary to be raised by June.

We are well acquainted with the conditions of this church and people. We have worked with them by the week several times, and know just what great whole-hearted, earnest, sacrificing people they are. If all had remained in Plymouth who were there when the Church was built it would have been paid for long ago. Many have moved away, and the load is very heavy for the few that remain, and they are so anxious to have it all paid. Who will come to the rescue? Let us all do the little or the much that we can. And we will not put it off, dear ones, until next week, then the next, and finally use it for a new hat, plow, or something else, will we? Let us send now, and let the brethren know their many acts of benevolence and love for others has been appreciated. Our little offering of love will be sent immediately.

Yours working for the Truth.

Exhortation.

"Strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it," says Jesus. Matt. vii. 14. Now he says, "Strive to enter into the strait gate." Dear brothers and sisters in Christ, why is it so necessary for us to strive to enter into "The strait gate that leads into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior." It is because there are so many false teachers who use all their power to lead men and women astray. Jesus says, Beware of false prophets. When we look around us and see how few people there are that believe what God told Adam in the garden of Eden, "The day thou eatest thereof, thou shalt surely die." Speaking of the tree of knowledge of good and evil. And how many there are that believe the lie the devil told Eve, "That they would not surely die." We have the false prophets today who teach the people that they do not die, but they step out of this old tenement of clay and ascend to a higher and nobler life, to sit at the right hand of our Father, which is in heaven. Is it any wonder that Jesus says, "They be blind leaders of the blind. And if the blind lead the blind, both fall into the ditch." Matt. xv. 14. Ah, it behooves us, that we beware of false prophets, and that we give the more earnest heed to the things that have been written for our instruction. And that we, "Contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints," by our actions as well as our words. Jesus says, "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven." Matt. v. 16. "Ye are the salt of the earth; but if the salt have lost its savor, wherewith shall it be salted." Ver. 13. Says Paul Eph. vi. 10, 11. "Finally, my brethren, be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might. Put on the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil. Stand therefore, having your loins girt about with truth, and having on the breastplate of righteousness; and your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace. Above all taking the shield of faith, wherewith ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked. And take the helmet of salvation and the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God." Therefore says Peter, "Ye also, as lively stones, are built up a spiritual house, an holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ." 1 Peter ii. 5. 1 Pet. ii. 5, "Wherefore gird up the loins of your mind, be sober, and hope to the end for the grace that is to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jesus Christ." 1 Peter i. 13. My brother, my sister, in the one hope and calling of the gospel, are we striving to walk in that straight and narrow way, are we looking unto Jesus, who is our pattern and high priest, who suffered and died for us, that we through him might have life more abundantly; I say, are we looking unto him as the author and finisher of our faith. Ah, dear ones, the time is short, improve it while you may.

A Contrast.

The dying statement of two leading preachers contrasted.

1. That of the Apostle Paul, in 2d Tim. iv. 7, 8. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith. Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge shall give to me at that day. Not to me only, but unto all them that love his appearing.

2. That of Dwight L. Moody.

I see the earth receding, and heaven opening, and God calling for me.

Notice first, that one of the leading thoughts in the Apostle Paul's dying statement is that he has a Savior connected in it. He says I have kept the faith; that is the faith of Jesus, which is the faith of the kingdom of God.

That Dwight L. Moody had no such faith at all, will also be noticed.

The Apostle Paul had five things which he looked forward to the future with so much delight, with an eye of faith and hope for its consummation, and which Mr. Moody did not have at all. They are:

1. A crown of righteousness.
2. To be given in that day.
3. By the Lord, the Righteous Judge.
4. Also unto all the true saints of God.
5. That love his appearing.

The above five points are full of faith, hope, and love, and will characterize the true saints of God in all ages, and cause them to look forward to the future by an eye of faith and hope, and long for the time to come when it shall be true, and that these two dying statements are as far apart as the north pole is from the south pole, and therefore cannot be reconciled, and that the crown of righteousness, which is to be given by the Lord the righteous Judge in that day, finds no part in Mr. Moody's dying statement at all.

Paul's dying statement is wrapt in the second coming of our Savior with joy as the crowning day of glory—while Mr. Moody has nothing to say at all about the second coming of the Christ, and therefore is not in line.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Substitution. No. 5.

Before resuming the argument proper, we assure our readers that we wish to impugn the motives of no one. But when those we esteem, seem to strike off on a by path and indefatigably labor to take others with them, without what we would call Scriptural warrant, it may be profitable to inquire into the CAUSE OF IT.

And we are the more anxious to do this, because it often happens that men and women of fine feelings, and excellent traits of character, think it their duty to leave the old paths, and travel in what they deem to be more beneficent ways, ways, in their estimation, more worthy of a loving God.

Truly man is fearfully and wonderfully made. He has been organized with many noble faculties, such as conscientiousness, veneration, and others, which are NOT KNOWING FACULTIES,—but which impel men to do what they suppose to be right. The knowledge of WHAT IS RIGHT is derived from the intellect.

The intellect, however, has to be informed from without before it can direct the non-knowing moral faculties. And the Psalmist says it is, "The entrance of thy (God's) Word that giveth light," that is, light to faculties which are in a state of nature.

The necessity of being informed from without is proven by Paul who says, "For I know that in me, that is, in my flesh, dwelleth no good thing." Rom. vii. 18.

Again in Romans viii. 6, 7, "For the mind of the flesh is death, but the mind of the Spirit is life and peace. Because the mind of the flesh is enmity to God; for to the law of God it is not subject; nor, indeed, can it be. Those in a sensual state are unable to please God."

The Spirit in Paul again says,—Rom. v. 6, "Besides we being yet helpless, Christ at the proper time died in behalf of the ungodly." Utterly helpless was the condition of man.

Jehovah in Isa. lv. 8, 9, "For my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith Jehovah. For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts."

One more Scripture will be useful in this connection,—1 Cor. ii. 12, 13 where the apostle says, he spake the things given him of God, "Not in words which man's wisdom teacheth, but which the Holy Spirit teacheth."

Let us then be wise. If men offer us a doctrine which cannot be expressed in the words of the Spirit, Let us reject it.

Whenever one unenlightened reasons about God it is what Paul calls the carnal mind, that is at work. This is not intended in a vile sense; but the thinking of the flesh; the working of his conscientiousness, or veneration, unenlightened by the entrance of God's Word, and therefore is at enmity with God, and cannot be subject to his law nor please him, so unlike are his thoughts to God's.

We have heard of one of the advocates of the views we oppose, saying he wished he could find positive proof of his views in the Scriptures.

But what a sad thought it is that he teaches it before he found the proof! And what does his wish indicate, but that his mind has never yet submitted to God's mind as revealed? What is not of faith is sin. Rom. xiv. 23.

The doctrine of substitution is said to be proved by Heb. vii. 22, "By so much was Jesus made a surety of a better testament."

We reply that Jesus is here called the "Surety of a better testament," or covenant, not a surety for mankind, and needs no further comments.

It is also sought to support the substitutionary idea by an argument draw from the Greek prepositions nuper and anti, as signifying, in the room of.

There are two places, 2 Cor. v. 20, and Phil. xiii., where nuper is translated thus. "We pray you in Christ's stead;" "Whom I would have retained with me, that in thy stead he might have ministered unto me."

The argument is this: Nuper is translated in the stead of,—and it is written, Christ died for us, suffered for us, was delivered up for us all, the original word being nuper, therefore it means that Christ died instead of us.

This is a very inconclusive argument, because nuper is found many hundreds of times in the New Testament, and we have not found it rendered in the stead of but in the two texts above.

If nuper signifies substitution, then Paul and the other apostles suffered as substitutes for us: "Who now rejoice in my sufferings for you, (nuper, in your stead,) and fill up that which is behind, of the afflictions of Christ, in my flesh, for (nuper in the stead of his body) which is the church." Col. i. 24; Eph. iii. 12; 2 Cor. xii. 15.

If nuper means substitution Christians are substitutes for one another, and in the same sense as Jesus was. 1 John iii. 16; Rom. vi. 4.

If nuper signifies substitution, then were the Christians substitutes for Christ and suffered in his stead.

"Unto you it is given in behalf of Christ, (nuper, in the stead of Christ,) not only to believe on him, but also to suffer for his sake" (nuper, in his room or stead). See also 2 Cor. xii. 10; Acts v. 11-16.

If nuper must mean substitution, then was Christ a substitute for our sins. Gal. i. 4, "Who gave himself for our sins (nuper, in the room of our sins.)" "Christ died for our sins, (nuper, in the stead of our sins.)

But the Scriptures have explained the word nuper by others which the nicest critic cannot pervert to mean substitution. Luke xxii. 20: "This is the New Testament in my blood shed for you," (nuper) instead of you. There would be force to this, if these addressed had not died.

The argument from anti is still more inconclusive, as it is based upon a solitary translation in Matt. ii. 22.

"Archelaus did reign in Judea, in the room of his father Herod," (anti).

If anti had been used in reference to Christ's death it would have apparently warranted the use of it; but unhappily for that theory, it is not. Besides that, it also means, "on account of," as well as "in the place of."

One solitary place is found in the Old Testament where the word commonly translated atonement is translated satisfaction, Num. xxxi. 32, "Ye shall take no satisfaction for the life of a murderer, and ye shall take no satisfaction for him that is fled to the city of his refuge."

We repeat that satisfaction destroys the principles of favor and forgiveness. If our surety or substitute has fully discharged our debt can it be favor on the part of our creditor to give us a full receipt?

In Matt. vi. 12 we are taught to pray, "Forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors."

If God does not forgive us until our debts are paid, then we must do the same, God being the example for us.

This scheme shamefully veils the glory of God's grace, in our judgment. How can we praise God for his mercy if our substitute has fully discharged the debt?

We see the favor of God in forgiving beautifully illustrated in Matt. xxviii. 23-27 where the King forgave one who had nothing to pay, and begged the favor.

The first gospel promise ever made to man as a sinner, (and he needed no gospel before that,) was that the woman's seed should crush the head of the serpent.

We learn from Hebrews ii. 14 that the seed referred to in that promise, was to accomplish the task assigned him through the means of death; that for this purpose he was of the same flesh and blood as his mother and all her children.

That being gospel to our parents, it had to be believed; and, as sin had disclosed their nakedness and need of covering, their own device for that purpose was set aside by God who clothed them with the skins of animals, whose blood had to be shed for that purpose. This we believe to have been the typical Lamb slain from the foundation of the world.

Abel had been instructed to offer sacrifices, and so had Cain. And there is no doubt in our mind but it was a part of their worship; and testified to their faith in the promised Seed; and confession of the justice of the death sentence passed upon them, and being provisionally justified by faith, they had peace with God, and a hope that inspired them to walk with God, as Enoch did; t pointed forward as the emblems of the Lord's body and blood point backward.

By turning to Jude's epistle it will be seen that Enoch, the seventh from Adam, had a far clearer conception of God's purpose with man and earth than have the clergy of this day. His faith spanned the patriarchal, Mosaic, and gospel ages, and saw the Lord coming to his royal [illegible] with ten thousands of his saints, to rule the world in righteousness.

As the way of life after death was revealed to David, we are persuaded that that same way was the ray of hope to those far away and isolated patriarchs.

That being the case, the blood of the victims slain all along their weary march, pointed to the antitypical victim,—the Lamb of God, that as to take away the sin of the world.

Is it thinkable, that they could have regarded the blood shed by them, as instead of them, or that it was to propitiate the God of love, who graciously allowed them to approach him in faith and love by this typical offering? No one who admits that God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself,—NOT himself unto the world, will thus think.

We have many times proved that the nature of Christ was the same as that of Abraham, and therefore the same as that of Adam. And the fact that he was tempted in [illegible] points like as we are, proves that [illegible] to keep [illegible] subjection [illegible] down the same weakne[illegible] pro-clivities that we have; here we are told that "God cannot be tempted."

It must not be forgotten that it was the possession of this nature of the sinner Adam, and his spotless character, that made him an

for sin. If this be lost sight of, it makes it appear that God punished the innocent in the place of the guilty,—a most unrighteous thing to do, in view of his own declaration to Cain, "If thou doest well, shalt thou not be accepted? And if thou doest not well, sin crouches at the door." "As if sin were personified in the shape of a fierce animal, ready to pounce upon him, and punish him."

Instead of acquainting themselves with the principles of the divine economy, too many of our brethren listen to the inventions of others, so arranged as to please the fancy, or cater to the flesh, tha. they arm themselves with a few passages that at first glance seem to favor the new views, and at once become zealous propagators of them. We urge them to try the spirits, and emulate the Bereans of old, and search the Scriptures to see if the things they hear be so, and hold fast the form of sound words.

In order to make it clear to our readers that Christ suffered as "LOT" US, when he suffered on our account,—that is, on account of our sins,—we would remind them of another part of the sentence. It said, "In SORROW shalt thou (Adam) eat of it (the bread gained by the sweat of his face, all the days of thy life."

We read that Jesus was a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief.

Did he suffer sorrow and grief and hunger and thirst, and ostracism and persecution and misrepresentation and temptations for any fault of his own? Not As one of us, he suffered. He was made under the law, and was all through life suffering a part of the penalty.

Reader, did he suffer thus instead of you? Speak out, we entreat you, and let us know how you have been benefitted by all the ills he suffered. We want to know if you have gotten thus far along the journey of life without the ills resulting from the law of sin and death?

Do you never have the toothache, headache, backache, heartache, la grippe or rheumatism? If you do, it is either proof positive that Christ did not suffer those things instead of you; or, if he did, it failed of its purpose.

Do not say that he suffered those things for himself, and not for you, unless you are ready to [illegible] the doctrine of substitu[illegible] because we have shown [illegible] and sorrows of this life are [illegible] of the disobedience of Adam, and help to bring about the full payment of its wages,—DEATH.

If he suffered bodily ailments for himself while alive, it was on our account; as, indeed, was everything he did and said. We are told that he learned obedience by the things which he suffered; and this prepared him for the closing act of obedience upon the cross. We have already shown another purpose was, to fit him to be our great High Priest, by being in touch with our infirmities. It was all in our behalf, not instead of us. And seeing that all die as if Christ had not died, have we not the best of evidence that he did not die vicariously?

But it matters little how much objection is made to the idea that our Lord suffered greatly through life the ills common to our race because he was of that race. It will be worse than useless, however, to object to the next proof to be offered that those sufferings were not vicarious.

Matt. viii. 16, 19 reads as follows:—

"When the even was come, they brought unto him many that were possessed with demoniacs, and he cast out the spirits with his Word, and healed all that were sick." For what purpose? That it might be fulfilled which was spoken by Esaias the prophet, saying:—

"HIMSELF took our infirmities, and bore our sicknesses," etc.

The Word of the Spirit for it, this is also the way Christ bore the griefs and carried the sorrows of his people.

It will hardly be claimed that JESUS became demoniacally possessed, or sick, in fulfilling what was spoken by the prophet. He felt pity and had compassion on the sufferers, and gave evidence of the power of the Father that was in him, by bearing away their palsies and leprosies and fevers.

The fact that inexorable conditions of salvation are exacted of men, although Jesus has died for us, proves infallibly that he did not secure salvation to us; but made it possible for us to secure it ourselves. Therefore,

"God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him might not PERISH, but have everlasting life."

This is divine evidence that without this gift,—to perish was the doom of all. John iii. 16.

It is also divine evidence that without the faith specified, no one can obtain the everlasting life. And it once more proves that he will by no means clear the guilty; his ways are EQUAL, and the guilt must be removed before any one can be freed from the law of sin and death; and the means for its removal is ready to our hands:—

"He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved," Mark xvi 16; and

"Repent and be baptized every one of you [who believe] in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins." Acts ii. 38.

To conclude this article we refer to the 49th Psalm, where we see that no man is rich enough to redeem his brother, nor give to God a ransom for him, that he should not go to corruption, because the wise, the foolish, the brutish persons PERISH, and leave their wealth to others."

If this does not prove that all these characters PERISH when they go to corruption, it would be difficult to tell what it proves. But there is no room to guess as to its meaning, for the immediate context says:—

"Nevertheless, man in honor abideth not; he is like the beast that perish..... Like sheep they are laid in the grave; death shall feed on them; and the upright shall have dominion over them in the morning; and their beauty shall consume in the grave, from their dwelling." Now note the contrast:—"But God will redeem my soul from the power of the grave; for he shall receive ME."..... Again it says, "Man in honor and understandeth not, is like the beasts that PERISH;" as if determined we should not overlook the fate of such.

Queries.

1. "Against whom did the holy prophets, the Savior of the world, and his apostles inveigh with the utmost severity?

Ans. The popular religious leaders. Never were any things spoken by the Lord Jesus, or by the holy apostles, with so much keenness, with so much severity, as their reproofs of, or their denunciations against the popular clergy.

2. Who are the popular clergy now?

Ans. Those who are trained for the purpose of teaching religion as their calling, please the mass of the people, establish themselves into a distinct order, from which they exclude all that are not so trained, and for hire affect to be the only legitimate Interpreters of the Scriptures.

3. What are the most effectual means to diminish the power and dominion of the clergy?

Ans. The same means which the Lord and his apostles used in their day against those of that time; chiefly to persuade the people to hold fast the holy commandments of the apostles, and to build themselves up in their most holy faith.

Truth is always consistent with itself, and needs nothing to help it out; it is always near at hand, and sits upon our lips, and is ready to drop out before we are aware; whereas a lie is troublesome, and sets a man's invention upon the rack; and one trick needs a great many more to make it good.

Please do not forget our financial needs.

Will you please look up your account, and if you have not yet sent the money to renew your subscription for 1903, will you not kindly do so at once?

In almost every large city of our land the workmen in all industries are talking "strike." Labor unions are against capital combinations. Some places are having trouble now, and the outlook is stormy.

It is evident that trouble is expected in China, as the United States is adding several new vessels to her Asiatic squadron. An edict has been published providing for the punishment of any one convicted of making Boxers flags.

Brother E. K. Barnhill wishes us to say that he has received $2.00 from "A reader of The Restitution" as a contribution to the Plymouth Church. He is unable to receipt for it as he cannot tell who sent. He is thankful for the gift. Others have sent sums each of which have been acknowledged by Bro. Barnhill.

The trouble in the Balkan districts is getting worse. [illegible] with Russia and Austria in asking the Sultan to inaugurate reforms, which he readily consents to do. Of course he applies them where not needed and in the wrong manner, causing revolts and the killing of hundreds of people, thus making an excuse for pouring in large bodies of Asiatic troops who will kill and destroy. How long it will be till the powers interfere, and by whom and how it will be done, is yet to be seen.

"The Academics, who, with the Epicureans were the most numerous of the Greco-pagan sectarian world at the Christian Era despaired of finding truth in such a variety of opinions as then floated on the public mind, and therefore taught that, it was uncertain whether the gods existed or not; whether the soul was mortal or immortal; whether virtue was preferable to vice, or vice to virtue."

"Socrates flourished four hundred years before Christ. He left no writings, but is said by his scholars to have taught that, The soul of man is immortal because immaterial; that there is but one Supreme God; that there are demons who superintend the affairs of this world; that men ought not to pursue riches or worldly honors, but to cultivate their minds and to practice virtue." He is supposed to have borrowed some of his notions of the Jews.

Some years ago, at a meeting held in this place, Bro. Dwiggins was talking on "The signs of the times," and expressed his conviction that eventually England and France would again be allied together. Since that time nothing has occurred to warrant any such combination, but rather the reverse. Last Sunday's papers told us that Germany had joined with the Russo-Austrian alliance regarding the Balkan situation. Tuesday's papers show France opposed to the course of this alliance, and it is openly stated that a new European alliance is thus made necessary, that will consist of England, France and Italy. Let us watch this closely.

The Coming of the Lord.

Before the faith became corrupted by the introduction of human opinions, the Church longed and prayed for the return of her absent Lord.

Paul styled it "the blessed hope." The Lord himself embodied it in the brief formula of prayer he taught his disciples. "Thy kingdom come" will not be an actual fact until the King comes. Patient waiting, watchfulness and prayerfulness he enjoined in view of it. He described the manner of his coming to guard the Church against deception by false Messiahs. He gave a chain of prophecy reaching from the time in which he spoke down to the close of this dispensation, marking the termination of the chain by signs of his advent. The popular doctrine that death is a condition of consciousness, and enjoyment of the reward robs the second advent of all meaning. The theory represents the great Head of the Church as taking the body to himself by peacemeal.

A Statement and an Appeal.

The Plymouth congregation still owes a few hundred dollars on its Church building. The members are all poor people. They are hindered very much in carrying on the work that might be and that ought to be done, from the fact of having to devote their energies to raising money to pay off this debt. Numbers have been forced by circumstances to move away, and this lays the burden on fewer shoulders.

The brethren and sisters are making a great effort to get the money to lift this debt this year, and it is an object to them to raise as much as is possible by June. Many brethren and sisters have in time past met with this Church, and know of their zeal and earnestness. Many others have read accounts from time to time of meetings held at this place, and work done for the Lord. The hospitality of the Plymouth Church is well known to hundreds. The brethren and sisters always have and shall ever give their homes and the best they have to those who may chose to visit and sojourn with them.

It may be that some who have met with the Plymouth brethren, or others who know of their work, would like to contribute of their means to aid in clearing this house of debt, thus enabling the friends to do the work that now languishes. Should there be any such if they will send to Brother E. K. Barnhill, Plymouth, Ind., he will, as Secretary of the Board of Trustees, make proper acknowledgement, and convey the money to the hands of the Treasurer.

Obituary.

Died near Severance, Kansas, Mar. 25, 1903, Sister Ellen Bitner, in the 73d year of her age.

Sister Bitner's maiden name was Robb, and she was born and raised in Pennsylvania. She was married to J. P. Bitner about 49 years ago, and they moved to Kansas in 1857, and settled and lived ever since, in the neighborhood where she died.

She leaves a husband, two children, and two brothers to mourn for her.

It was my good fortune to become acquainted with the family in 1859, and I have been intimate with them ever since. Brother and Sister Bitner were religiously inclined, and joined the Lutheran Church early in their Kansas life, but about 1865 they gave that up and were baptized by W. P. Shockey, and ever since have been zealous for the faith once delivered to the saints.

Sister Bitner was highly respected by her neighbors of all faiths, as was attested by their attendance upon her in her sickness and burial. She will be missed in the neighborhood as well as in the family.

We laid her to rest in the family cemetery on the old home place. The signs indicate that she will not have long to wait.

Poetry.

The Garden of Gathsemane.

While nature was sinking in silence to rest,
And the last lone ray of daylight were dim in the west,
I strayed in the twilight unconscious away
In deep meditation, wherever my path lay.

I passed near a garden, there fell on mine ear
A voice of deep anguish, from one that was there.
The tones of his agonies melted my heart,
While earnestly pleading the last sinners part.

In offering to heaven, his strong mutchless prayer,
He spoke of the torment the sinner must bear;
His life as a ransom he offered to give,
That sinners redeemed in glory might live.

So deep was his sorrow, so fervent his prayer,
That down o'er his bosom rolled sweat blood and tears.
I wept to behold him, and asked him his name.
He answered, 'Tis Jesus, from heaven I come

I am thy Redeemer, for thee I must die;
The cup is most bitter, but cannot pass by
Thy sins like a mountain are laid upon me,
And all this deep anguish I suffer for thee.

I heard with attention the tale of his woe,
While tears like a fountain of water did flow.
The cause of his sorrow, to hear him repeat,
Affected my heart, and I fell at his feet.

I trembled with horror, and loudly cried out,
Lord save or I perish! oh, save or I die.
He smiled when he saw me, and said to me, live,
Thy sins which are many, I will freely forgive.

How sweet was that language, it made me rejoice;
His smile, oh how pleasant, how cheering his voice.
I ran from the garden, to spread it abroad,
I shouted Salvation! oh glory to God.

I am now on my journey to mansions of love,
My soul's full of glory, of peace, light and love.
I think of the garden, the prayer, and the tears.
And of that loving stranger, who banished my fears.

The day of bright glory is rolling around,
When Gabriel descending, the trumpet shall sound.
My soul with rapture of glory will rise.
To gaze on that Stranger with unclouded eyes.

The Two Ways.

A sermon delivered by Sister Nannie T. Skeels, at Lake Shore, Wash., Sunday evening, Feb. 8, 1903.

Enter in through the narrow gate, for wide is the gate of destruction and broad that way leading thither and many they are who enter through it. How narrow is the gate of life, how difficult the way leading thither, and how few are they who find it. Matt. vii. 13, 14. Here life and death are under consideration. The narrow way, the difficult way, is the one that reaches the crown, and the reward is endless life. Though the gate is narrow and the way oftimes rough our Father's love is ever with us to make the way easier. When we enter the narrow gate by putting on Christ, for this is the way, for he says, Jno. xiv. 6, I am the way, the truth and the life, no one cometh to the Father but by me. The way to come to the Father by the Son, is by being baptized into Christ, and living a godly life, and the way to do this he has told us through his Word, which he has given us. In Luke xv. 24, Earnestly endeavor to enter through the narrow door. For many I tell you will seek to enter in and shall not be able, will not be able to enter in because they are not strong in the faith, and are enticed away by the pleasures of this world, which is more to them, that the blood of Christ or the seed has not fallen on good ground and has been choked out by the thorns and thistles, which are the cares of this life, and they fail to enter by the narrow way, or the evil one tempts them with the pleasures of this world, and being weak they are led from the straight and narrow way to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season. So it was with the children of Israel in the wilderness of sin. Although they had God with them in a cloud by day and a pillar of fire by night, yet would they murmur, and notwithstanding all he did for them and all he brought them through, while bringing them out of Egypt, for God performed a miracle each day for 40 years while Israel wandered in the wilderness. In Ex. xvi. 35, we find they ate manna for 40 years, until they came to the borders of Canaan, and it was by a miracle this angels' food was given them. Still they murmured and rebelled and of all that vast multitude that started from Egypt, even while God was with them but two entered into the promised land. Even that great and grand leader Moses, who let them and had stood between the people and God's wrath when he would have destroyed them, had transgressed and was not allowed to cross the border and enter the promised land.

Friends, this is a type of the church, and if so few of that multitude who were sustained by the miracles of God every day, when he was present by day in a cloud and a pillar of fire by night, I say, if but two of this chosen people was worthy to enter into the land of promise, it is needful for us to look where we stand, and see and know whether we are in the narrow way that leads to the promised land, or have we wandered away into the wilderness of sin. Oh, brethren, the wilderness of sin did not have the pleasures, attractions and ways to lead God's people astray, that the world of today has; the many snares that are laid by Satan to tempt the feet of those who are seeking pleasure or gain, and are not watching. And we must be more zealous, earnest and devoted, or we will step aside into the broad way before we know it, and the broad way leads down, down, down to destruction. We have Christ's own words for it, and the end of this way is death. But the other way, the narrow door, leads up to Zion's hill, to the city whose streets are of gold, and whose builder and maker is God. How [illegible] is minded in our [illegible] way, for it is the way of the Lord, and of life and the way to meet with those we have loved who are asleep in Christ, and if we take the broad way we will be forever separated from them, and will no more see their dear faces. Which way will we choose? Where will we be found when the Lord comes? In olden times when cities were defended by a wall around about them, they had gates in the wall by which the inhabitants of the country could pass in and out of the city. There was a wide gate that was open in time of peace, and all could enter the city by that way as they pleased, and could come and go as they chose. But in war this gate was closed and barred and barricaded so that the city could not be entered by it. And there was a narrow gate or door in the wall that was used in time of war, and it was so very narrow that it was difficult to pass through, and for the greater safety of the city, the larger part of the troops or fighting men of the city were placed to guard this narrow way or gate, and therefore it was very difficult to enter the city by this way. So we see Christ chose something with which they are familiar to impress on the mind of the people that there was something to overcome in the narrow way. And as life is a warfare to reach the crown of righteousness, so must we fight to overcome the world, if we would enter by the narrow way. Paul in writing to the Corinthian brethren, 1 Cor. ix. 24, uses the same method in explaining the way to them. He took as an example their games, which were in high repute among the people, so much so that it was considered one of the highest honors one could receive to merit a crown of laurel as a champion of the Olympic games. So the apostle reasons from this to show them that they must do their best, and then some will fail. The athletes of today train themselves to strengthen their bodies and are careful of their diet that they will in no way injure their physical strength. So must we look to ourselves, that we train ourselves in the ways of the Lord, faithfully, hopefully and spiritually, if we ever expect to win in the race. Paul himself knew if he should grow careless and neglectful of his duty, he would be rejected. Can we remain idle and careless of the work the Lord has for us to do, and expect to slip into the kingdom of God, if Paul with all the numbers he had through Christ converted, all he had suffered and endured for the heavenly cause, and should he grow weary before the end, he would be rejected. Are we going to start in the race and only half run, and expect to reach the reward? It is hard for us to realize that God is near to us, he seems so far away; he is not a reality as things we see and know, and Christ with the almost 2000 years between us and the time he was here seems unreal, and something we cannot grasp as reality. Why is it thus? If we were close to him in spirit, have we not the promise that he is in the midst where two or three are gathered together in his name. The question is not what some one else has done or not done, but what have I done, have I helped some weaker brother, or have I set the example that has caused one of the little ones in Christ to fall or wander away from the straight and difficult way. The question will come to each of us, What have you done with your talent? Can we answer that we have used it diligently, or will we have hid it away? Will we have failed to reach a hand to help a weaker brother, for a cup of cold water given in his name is remembered. Mark ix. 42, "And whosoever shall offend one of these little ones that believe in me, it is better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and he were cast into the sea." Does this look as though the broad way would bring peace, or that we will not be held responsible for what we do, and the example set others? No, loved ones in the Lord, we must be careful, watchful and diligent, or we will not be able to enter in through the narrow door, and great will be our loss. Those who love the Lord and his appearing, strive to enter through the narrow way.

But those who walk in the broad way are of a different class and receive a different reward. The wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ the Lord. It takes no trouble to trace out the broad way, it is all about us on every side to allure us away. It was in this way that the prodigal son walked until he returned to his father's house and a father's care, though the father's love followed him in all his course, and mourned for the beloved one who had wandered away. Luke xv. 11-24. What earthly father is there but would forgive his erring son who returns to him, and how much greater is the love of the heavenly Father. How many mothers and fathers in this broad land tonight who mourn a prodigal son or daughter, and the hearts of mothers are bleeding as they watch in loneliness tonight for the return of the prodigal, and in their anxious and burdened hearts is repeated over and over the cry, "Where is my wandering boy tonight?" How willingly they would take to their arms and heart the child who has gone astray, whose feet are wandering in paths of sin, and who are deep in the mire of the wide way that leadeth to destruction. They long and pray for their child to return to a father's loving care, and how joyously they would be welcomed as one returned from the dead. Many tonight can repeat with longing the lines of the poet,

"Backward, turn backward, oh time, in your flight;
Make me a child again, just for tonight.
Smoothe from my forehead the furrows of care;
Brush the few silver threads out of my hair;
Over my slumbers your loving watch keep;
Rock me to sleep, mother, rock me to sleep."

Yes, how many there are who long to wipe away all the sin and error of life, and be back in the innocence of childhood. My brother and sister, Jesus offers you just such cleansing. The blood of Christ will wash your sin stained garments white, and he will accept a repentant son as the father welcomed the returned prodigal. Even so I say unto you there is joy in the presence of God over one sinner that repenteth, and the answer given the brother that had remained at home. Luke xv. 31-32, Son thou art ever with me and all that is mine is thine. But it is meet to make merry and be glad, for thy brother was dead and is alive again, and was lost and is found. The sinner is dead in sin, but has repented and turned from the broad way, and is returned to the Father's house and made alive in Christ. Which is the safer, more peaceful way, the way of God or the way of sinners? Every one in the depths of his own heart knows God's way brings peace and the other road only bitterness and ends in destruction. We do not enter into the broad way at a bound, but little by little we are drawn away from the godly way. When we first do any thing that leads us a little aside, our conscience pricks us, and we feel guilty and dissatisfied with ourselves. But we keep on till we do not care, and some greater offence is committed, and each time our conscience toward God is dulled, until finally he is forgotten in the selfishness and pleasures of this world. Most of us have heard some one say, "Well, I have only one life to live, and I am going to have a good time while I do live." Friend, there is another life that is endless, and it will be a free gift to us, if we serve God here with all our heart, might and strength. What will this short span with its toils, tears, trials and sorrows be compared to that heavenly and peaceful existence where no heartaches ever come, and which will be the reward of those who love his appearing. Do we love his appearing when we spend our time and strength on vain pleasures? Suppose that Christ should come today and you should go to the judgment seat with a pack of cards in your hand as a passport into the kingdom of heaven, saying, "Behold Master, here is the way I have spent my time, and the example I have set my brethren and the young of my associates; some have gone down into the broad way and down to destruction, and some of my children have become gamblers through me, But I only played for fun, Do you think you would be received and hear the answer from the lips of the one who died that sin might be abolished, Well done, thou good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joys of the Lord. Or another should come and say, Master, all I know is how to dance; that is all I have put my time or thoughts on, and if you will just let me into the kingdom I can learn the children of the kingdom how to dance or waltz. Lord, I loved to dance better than I loved thee or thy Word, and so I learned to dance. Would we if we spend our time in such pursuits be fitted for the work there will be to do in the kingdom of God. Would they be accepted or rejected? Brethren, in the time of the early church and the apostles people did not have to be dead to be saints, as the common idea is in this day, for we read of the ministering to the saints, and washing the feet of saints, and many other references regarding them. Any unless we walk in the narrow way [illegible] ding won't make saints of us, for [illegible] be judged by our works. Li[illegible] how much devotion [illegible] the ball room or at the [illegible]able. It is here that the name of the Lord is taken in vain. Do such pursuits elevate or make us purer? Paul in instructing the brethren in Phil. i. 27, as regards their manner of speech, tells them that it should be as becometh the gospel of Christ, and in Matt. xii. 36, 37, we must be careful of our speech, and if we study God's Word more we will be more careful of our words and actions. In the 34th verse of this same chapter we are told that out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh, and if we are always using filthy language or repeating some indecent anecdote can we expect our heart to be pure? Can our thoughts be pure if they dwell on that which is impure? Christ has told us that it could not be, and if we are cursing or swearing, or taking the name of God in vain do we love the Father very dearly or do we love profanity more? We must put from our minds every thing that is not pure if we expect the pure spirit of God to dwell with us, and the cleansing must be thorough. We may take a white garment and let it become soiled with dust, we wash it and it is clean, and allow some stain of fruit on it and it is little harder to get it clean, and we go on and repeat this till by and by after the repeated stains they do not all come out, and after each cleansing it is a little less white until finally the whiteness is gone, but the stains remain. So it is with us, a little at a time we take up impure things until by and by our hearts and minds are stained and blackened with the filth and mire of the world before we know it. But little flock, it is the Father's good pleasure to give the pure the kingdom. Strait is the gate and narrow is the way into this kingdom, and we must work for it if we ever reach it. Matt. xxiv. 42. Watch ye therefore because you do not at what day your Master will come. Therefore be you also prepared. Because the Son of Man will come at an hour when you do not expect him. Are we ready, are our garments white, are we walking in the narrow way, for when the Master comes we will have no time to prepare; and the time is growing shorter and every day wasted will take from the brightness of our crown. Let us be ready by a life of purity and devotion. Come Lord Jesus come quickly.

Our Letter Drawer.

Dear Restitution:

I want to write a few lines to the dear brothers and sisters, that I have read so many good letters from since the [illegible] of this year. I am not personally acquainted with but very few [illegible] have read letters from; but I [illegible] love all the faithful, and I am trying to live so that I will be with them forever in the kingdom of God. When Christ was told that his mother and brethren had come to see him, he said, My mother and brethren are those that hear the Word of God and do it. It appears that Christ felt nearer related to the faithful doers of God's Word, than he did to his own blood relation, if they fail to do God's will, and why should we not feel the same way, if we expect to live with them forever in the earth made new, where God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes, and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain, Rev. xxi. 4, one of the most comforting verses in the whole Bible, especially when one has sore trials and disappointments. If such verses fail to do them good their faith surely needs increasing. When I was a young man I was talking to a wealthy farmer one day, he said any man could be rich if he would try. I disputed it; but since I commenced studying the Bible I believe it possible for any one that can read the Bible to get rich in faith. That makes him heir of the kingdom which will finally cover the whole earth, and better still, gives him eternal life, without pain or trouble of any kind to enjoy that possession. James ii. 5. There are only a few of the one faith here at Oleander, Cal. We have Bible class every Sunday, except every 4th Sunday, Brother Grout comes 25 miles and preaches to us, which we enjoy very much. Brother Presser made a good illustration last Sunday of faith and works. He compared it to a man running a ferry boat, he called one oar faith, and the one oar works. When he got in the middle of the river he laid works down and pulled hard on faith with both hands, the boat staying in the middle of the river, so he laid faith down, took up works, pulling hard with both hands, whirling in the same place; his passengers getting uneasy said, We will never get to shore this way, so he took faith in one hand and works in the other, which took them speedily to the other shore. Dear brothers and sisters, I will say, for one, that I will try hard to never lay down faith or works either, even for one hour. If we don't have works it is because we do not become well enough acquainted with God and Christ, by reading their Word, and prayer to make us rich in faith. The Restitution is also of great value to one that wants to be rich in faith. I sometimes think that the letters in one paper are worth the cost of the paper for the whole year. I want to write a few of our Savior's Words in John vii. 24. "Judge not according to the appearance, but judge righteous judgment." It is possible that I apply this Scripture wrong, for I apply it every place I can, and I know it has done me good. I have had near friends that promised to be home at a certain time, but failed to come or send word. The appearance was very bad, but righteous judgment has worked all right every time that I have tried it. Some say it is natural to worry when the appearance is bad. How can we help it? Nature and conscience, are two very bad guides, unless a person is pretty near what God wants them to be; unrighteous judgment makes long, restless nights, bad dreams, weak stomach and brain, shortens this natural life and endangers the eternal life. Righteous judgment gives better rest at night, good dreams, if any, much stronger stomach and a brain better prepared for large meals of spiritual food, prolongs this natural life, causing our light to shine brighter and makes the prospect good for the eternal life, which I am trying in my weakness to attain unto.

Your brother in Christ, hoping to meet all the faithful in the kingdom of God.

Dear brethren and sisters:

It is just two years today since I was buried in the waters and arose to walk in newness of life. Words cannot express how thankful I am that I have heard and obeyed the true faith, and of the joy there is in understanding the great plan of salvation that God has in store for mankind. I love to study the precious Word and to make myself a useful servant for my Master. My greatest aim in life is to so live that I may be the means of bringing those round about me into the fold of Christ. When worn and weary with toil and the cares of life, I find great relief by spending a few moments in reading the letters and exhortations, written by the dear brothers and sisters in The Restitution, by meditating on the promises that God has given in this life to all the faithful, and the promise of eternal life in the future, we almost forget that we have passed through trials and sorrows. I wish to say with Sister Wince, "Listen, oh listen." We cannot listen too closely to God's Word, we should feed upon it, digest it, allow it to become a part of our very being. Oh that we may all attain to the highest position that God has offered us, and live such noble, God-like lives, that all desire for places of worldly amusement, and foolish conversation, and exalted positions in eyes of man, may be done away with, that every word and action of ours may be done with an eye single to the glory of God, for behold we see a gleam of that glorious morning when the saints in death shall be raised and those that are living will be changed, and together be caught up to meet the Lord in the air. May we, dear readers, be numbered with that throng, is my prayer.

Dear Restitution:

I see so many good letters in the paper that I thought I must write a few lines, as I have not written before. I was buried with Christ in baptism something over two years ago. I wrote and stated my case in the paper. I wrote to Brother R. E. Grout, and he stopped over and I was buried with Christ in baptism on March 3rd two years ago and I have had more joy and comfort in the Lord in those two years than I saw in the 40 years that I was in the Baptist Church. I can heartily subscribe to the principles set forth in the right hand corner of the paper. The first clause is enough to cover the whole plan of salvation. I am here with only one brother that believes as we do, and we have never heard the gospel preached as we believe it, only as we get it through The Restitution, and we think we get some very good sermons. I write with a pencil because I am over 60 years old and can not write with a pen and am not a scholar any way.

Your brother in Christ.

GLORY TO BE REVEALED.

And the glory of the Lord shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together, for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it. Rejoice inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings, that when his glory shall be revealed ye may be glad also with exceeding joy. And to you who are troubled, rest with us, when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels. For the Son of Man shall come in the glory of his Father, with his angels, and then he shall reward every man according to his works, and then shall they see the Son of Man coming in a cloud with power and great glory. Then look up, and lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh. It doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when he appears we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is. Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to his abunduut mercy hath begotten us again unto a lively hope, by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead to an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you who are kept by the power of God, through faith unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last time. Therefore rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory; for I reckon that the suffering of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us. But as it is written, Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither hath entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him; but God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit. As it is written, God who is rich in mercy, for his great love wherewith he loved us, even when we were dead in sins, hath quickened us together with Christ, and hath raised us up together, and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus, that in the ages to come he might show the exceeding riches of his grace in his kindness toward us, through Christ Jesus, for by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves, it is the gift of God. The joy of the resurrection and the glories to be revealed in the future life eternal, is beyond the imagination of mortal man.

My prayer is, Come Lord Jesus; hasten the time when the knowledge of the Lord shall cover the earth as the waters cover the sea.

Selected.

Can God Trust Me?

Great emphasis is laid on the importance of trusting God. This is well. It cannot be too much emphasized. It affords to the Christian a stronghold and hiding place. The Psalmist exhorts thus, "Trust in the Lord, and do good; so shalt thou dwell in the land, and verily thou shalt be fed. Commit thy way unto the Lord; trust in him, and he shall bring it to pass." For a Christian to trust in the Lord is comparatively easy; in fact it is a joy, a great privilege, a consolation: at the same time he should ask himself the question, Can God trust me? Am I so rooted and grounded in the faith that I will be true to him, in his requirements, to his truth, to his cause, under all circumstances? Can he trust me to give him liberally, as I ought to give to help on the cause in the world? Can he trust me to honor him in all my business transactions? Can he trust me to reflect his image in my life before the world? Can he trust me to do the part of the good Samaritan toward my unfortunate neighbors? Can he trust me to bear patiently the burdens of life, rejoicing that my name is written in heaven? Can he trust me to pray for those who despitefully use me and persecute me? An honest testing of one's self frequently in this way will greatly stimulate the growth of grace in the soul.

"Do It Now."

That is the motto hung under every clock in a big factory at Cleveland, Ohio. It would be a good motto to print on the dial of every clock and watch in Christendom. Half of life's sad omissions, half of its regrets, would be saved, if we did things the moment we are reminded of them.

Sometimes to be sure, it is impossible to do a thing on the instant. In such cases our duty is to bear it in mind until the earliest possible moment when we are at liberty, and then go and do it. But fully one half the obligations we think of, but do not fulfill at once, are among the things that might have been done immediately. Our postponing them is not for a better opportunity, but simply for readier inclination.

"Do it now." You will save time—you may save deep regret. So much of life's ever-accumulating duty will have been discharged ere it has become a reproach and a subject of dread. The joy of duty promptly done is worth all that it costs. No habit is better worth cultivating.

Abiding in Love.

What a quiet, blessed home that is for us! The image, I suppose, that underlies all this sweet speech in these last hours, about dwelling in Christ, in his joy, in his words, in his peace, and the like, is that of some safe house, into which, going, we may be secure. And what sorrow or care or trouble or temptation would be able to reach us if we were folded in the protection of that strong love, and always felt that it was the fortress into which we might continually resort? They who make their abode there, and dwell behind those firm bastions, need fear no foes, but are lifted high above them all. "Abide in my love," for they who dwell within the clefts of that Rock need none other defence; and they to whom the riven heart of Christ is the place of their abode are safe, whatsoever befalls. "As the Father hath loved me, so have I loved you. Abide ye in my love."—Dr. MacLaren.

IMPORTANT NOTICES.

All persons addressing us should give their name, postoffice, county and state, plainly and distinctly.

All letters should be addressed to "THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Marshall, Co., Ind."

Remittance should be sent by bank draft, postoffice money orders, or express orders. Money sent in either of the above ways is at our risk, money sent loose in letters is at the risk of the sender. It is folly to think that you can fold bills in a letter so that no one can tell it, for one who handles much mail matter can almost invariably tell a letter with money in it. Take warning and send safely.

All remittances should be made payable to the order of "THE RESTITUTION."

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

In ordering books or tracts get the latest copy of the paper you have and order only what you see advertised in that.

When desiring a change of address, give both your old and new address.

By complying strictly with the above you will save us much annoyance, and your order will be much more promptly attended.

Scriptures Opened.

A third edition of the above named work is just out, and ready for delivery. This book has been before our readers so long now that its worth is well known. The author is Robert Ashcroft. The price for this edition is put low so that the brethren and sisters can get it to lend to honest enquirers after truth. We hope there are a few who have not turned their ears from the truth to fables. The book will speak for itself in its unfoldings of the purposes and plans of Jehovah, regarding the near future of the earth and its inhabitants. All should be interested in these truths, and those who have never read this book will have a feast. Price 65 cents post paid. Send to this office for them, or orders can be sent to J. O. Woodruff, Elizabeth, N. J.

Popular Lectures by M. Joblin.

Brethren and Sisters, Have you loved ones who think sincerity will save them? Have you friends who think they worship acceptably while ignorant of God's promises? Have you acquaintances with false hopes of heaven, or who believe themselves immortal by nature, or who think their sins are forgiven, although they are ignorant of the Law of Pardon, or who have no use for a God who consigns sinners to Eternal Torment, and are ignorant of Jehovah's beneficent purpose to fill the earth with his glory and bestow Eternal Life upon believers of the Gospel, so they can enjoy it for ever? If so, send for Popular Lectures by Bro. Joblin, entitled:—"The Kingdom of God;" "Old Mother Earth to Be Born Again;" "Strangers from the Covenants of Promise;" "Vain Worship;" "No Immortality Out of Christ;" "Hope Begotten by the Resurrection of Christ;" "God's Love and Solicitude for Mankind;" and "What Shall We Do to be Saved?"

Each Lecture of 16 pages $1 per 100 post free; or an assortment of the whole, same price. Address M. Joblin, 624 Woodland Av., Cleveland, O.

A Word of Appreciation

Some time ago I asked the brotherhood through THE RESTITUTION how many copies of the pamphlet "The Reasons of My Withdrawal from the Evangelical Association," would be wanted. Letters came from all parts of the country, some containing money stating the number of copies desired, so that a second edition of 1000 was printed. I wish to state that this edition is nearly exhausted, there being only about 150 left. Those wishing copies better send their orders early, as they will soon be gone. I desire, by this means, to thank the brethren for their encouraging words and financial help. Trusting that the seed will fall in good soil and produce fruit unto eternal life. 25 pages, at 5 cents per copy. A. H. Zilmer, Plymouth, Ind.

Poetry.

EASTER.

Risen—O wonderful glory!
Risen, all victorious!
Lifted, the heavy bolt low,
Opened the tomb's cold portal.

Risen! O stars of the morning,
Sing in the blue of the skies;
Dawn has come o'er the mountains,
Night and the darkness flies.

Heavy-eyed children of sorrow,
Over the pillow of death,
Christ is forever triumphant,
Mighty forever to save.

Elisha, the Children and the Bears.

Many a man has criticized God, because of the destruction by bears of that mocking company of children near Bethel. But he who criticises does not understand all that was at stake in the life or death of those children. He does not take into consideration the fact that this earth and all that is upon it belongs to God, and that he has the right to do with his own property as he pleases, nor does he remember that man was made amenable to LAW, and that to every violation of LAW, a penalty was attached. God had chosen Israel from all the people of the earth to be his peculiar treasure; not in a spirit of partiality or favoritism, but that by a long course of discipline they might become his trained servants, the custodians and promulgators of his Word, his candle to give light to other races, the progenitors of the Savior, and the saviors of men. No slipshod methods would do with a people, who were to sit so high a position: they must be kept comparatively pure whatever might be the cost. And to mock at one of his prophets was to mock at him and set him at defiance.

But the Hebrew word "yeled" in 2 Kings ii. 24, translated in our common version "little children" and that Young's Concordance makes "lad" or "boy," may mean grown persons, as any one can see for himself by referring to Num. xiii. 28; Isa. ii. 6; xxix. 22, 23, and other places where the same word occurs. Jamieson, Fausset and Brown, commenting on the passage in Kings, say "the idolatrous or infidel young men of the place, who affected to disbelieve the report of his master's translation, earnestly urged him to follow in the glorious career. "Bald-head" they say was an epithet of contempt in the East, applied to a person even with a bushy head of hair. The appalling judgment that befell them was God's interference to uphold his newly invested prophet. Something of the awful sacredness of himself, as the Creator and Lord of the universe must clothe the prophet, else would reverence, loyalty and obedience be lost to the nation; all would go astray; all would turn away from God to the service of idols, and the candle of the Lord go out. The mocking words of the young men were a direct insult to God. The very existence of the nation depended on its reverence for the prophet, and not only this, but the welfare of all peoples in all time. We shall see this more clearly as we go on.

Notice in the meantime, that Elijah and Elisha made a short stop at Bethel on their way down to the Jordan and that the sons of the prophets who dwelt in that consecrated spot, knew that Elijah was to be translated that very day. It being known to these, it is very natural to surmise that it was through their ungarded conversation, that it became known to the infidels of the town, though Elisha had bidden them to "hold their peace."

There were "doubters," and a good many of them too, even among the sons of the prophets, who accompanied Elijah and Elisha to Jericho and stood afar off to view. "Evil communications corrupt good manners." The infidel element was drawing the latter, the more faithful class downward after themselves. Elijah had gone upward in a chariot of fire. The unbelieving sons of the prophets had sent out their searching party to find his mutilated remains, but without result. God had taken him upward to some other abode. He had not falsified his Word, as the "doubters" supposed.

Elisha makes his way back to Bethel, clothed in the garment, and with the spirit and power of [illegible] on him. He is met outside of the city by an organized band of young men, banded for the express purpose of ridiculing and giving the lie to a man whom God had chosen to be his messenger to the nation. Little children would not do this. They would not have knowledge, nor the understanding of conflicting beliefs that would lead them to do it.

We must therefore conclude with Jamieson, Fausset and Brown, that the mockers were young men, and being young men, and taking the side of idol worshipers against God, his worship and his government, their sin was treason—treason both to God and to their country—a crime amenable to death among all nations. And if it be not thought wrong for nations to punish traitors, why should it be thought wrong for God to take the same course? Not often did he do this, but to save the people, some one must at some time be made an example of. The thing was done in kindness to the people of Israel and Judah. Better that a few perish than that the whole nation perish.

All the kings of Israel from the time of the separation of Israel and Judah, had done evil in the sight of the Lord, and the kings of Judah were soon to follow in the steps of Jehoshaphat's son Jehoram, having married a daughter of the notorious Jezebel and became the murderer of all his brethren and of divers of the princes of Israel, and "walked in the ways of the kings of Israel," compelling his people to become idol-worshipers, and his son and grandson took the same road. But Jehoshaphat seems to have heeded the warning, as did also some of his later descendants.

To understand the necessity for severe measures on the part of God, we have only to understand what idol-worship really is, and what it leads to. Human victims were offered in sacrifice. Little children were made to walk in a path walled in by flames of fire, and fell dead as they walked. The dear, innocent babes were tossed into the idol's arms, when it had been heated like a furnace; the cries of the mothers being drowned by discordant music.

The rites and ceremonies of the worship were horribly licentious and debasing, kindness, truth, purity, and all that is lovely and endearing fled before the march of such a worship as this, spreading as it did, like wild-fire, just as Christian Science or Buddhism is spreading in our country at the present time, from one feeble woman in 1898 to 1,000,000 in 1903!

The sacrifice of the 42 young men was a small matter, compared to the sacrifice that would be made to Baal should all the chosen people go into idolatry; some of them at least, were saved by the warning.

The episode occurred in the land of Benjamin. And though the ten tribes were exiled from Canaan, and Judah ultimately driven out and scattered among all nations, the Benjamites alone escaped the destruction that came upon their brethren when Jerusalem was besieged by Titus, for they fled to the mountains in accordance with the command of Jesus, when the commanding general of the Romans withdrew for a time his investing army, and thus fulfilled Isaiah's prophecy concerning them, "O ye children of Benjamin, gather yourselves to flee out of the midst of Jerusalem, and blow the trumpet in Tekoa and set up a sign of fire in Beth-haccarem, for evil appeareth out of the north and great destruction." Jer. vi. 1.

Benjamin had been lent to Judah for David's sake, that David might always have a light before the Lord in Jerusalem. 1 Kings ii. 32, 36. The apostles were all of the tribe of Benjamin, with the exception of Judas, and so were nearly all the early Christians. Christ came unto his own (tribe, that of Judah), but they received him not.

Benjamin belonged to the ten-tribed kingdom, but God gave it to Judah, because he saw that in the final test, it alone would prove loyal to him. From that little tribe, saved no doubt by the [illegible] of 42 [illegible] great salvation has come to a lost and ruined world, for how would the world have heard the blessed news of a crucified and risen Savior had there been no Benjamites?

"O the depths of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! How unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out! For who hath known the mind of the Lord, or who hath been his counselor?" Find no fault with God, but thank him that the candle was saved.

S. ROXANA WINCE.

Christ in the Revelation. No. 5

"And to the angel of the church in Pergamos write: These things saith he which hath the sharp sword with two edges." In the interpretation of symbols, writers give the best light they have on the subject. I understand the "sharp sword with two edges" to be a symbol of the Word of God, which is the Sword of the Spirit; and Paul says it "is quick and powerful, and sharper than any two edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart." Heb. iv. 12. And Peter testifies, "Lust by the Word of God the heavens were of old;" and that by the same Word, "The world that then was, being overflowed with water perished." 2 Peter iii. 5 6.

A noted instance of the power of the Word of God is seen in the Reformation in Europe in the 16th century. God in his providence brought from the Arabian desert the followers of Muhammed like locusts in numbers; but they failed to disperse the darkness of the apostasy, that hung like a pall over Europe; but when the reformers put into the hands of the people the open Bible, the consumption of that system commenced which is going on to this day. The daily paper this week brings the news of the suppression of the monkish educators of France; the same process is working in Spain, and in Mexico, and is destined to continue until "the knowledge of the Lord covers the earth, as the waters cover the sea."

I will here give two extracts from a Roman Catholic work by the Right Rev. Richard Gilmour, D. D., bishop of Cleveland. "In 1870 Victor Emmanuel, king of Sardinia, invaded the states of the Church, took Rome, and has since held it, keeping the Pope a prisoner in the Vatican." "In 1522 Luther translated the Bible into German, and with it proclaimed the doctrine of an open Bible and free interpretation, as a fundamental doctrine. He also denied the supremacy of the Pope, the authority of the Church, ... the doctrine of purgatory." How dense is the ignorance that prevents men from seeing the providence of God in the increase of knowledge? Verse 13, Satan's seat. "Pergamos under the Attalic kings, became a city of temples devoted to a sensuous worship; and being in its origin, according to pagan notions, a sacred place, might be viewed as the seat of Satan." Ephesus was noted on account of its great temple of Diana; and for the manufacture of silver shrines thereto. Acts xix. 24. But no reference to the worship of Diana is found in the message to the church of Ephesus; neither does the seat of Satan in the case of Pergamos have any reference to the pagan worship, if our exposition be correct, but has reference to the seat of the beast, upon which the fifth vial is poured out. xvi. 10. The beast being the Satan "or the adversary" of the Christians of the Pergamos state of the Church.

The establishment of the seat of Satan was in doubt, as between Rome and Constantinople, in the sixth century, and was not decided until A. D. 606 when Phocas, the emperor of Constantinople decided the question in favor of the Bishop of Rome; therefore from that time Rome became the seat of the beast, the Satan, the adversary. And this took place during the period of time occupied by the church at Pergamos, the truth of which will appear more clearly when we examine what is said, about Christ's faithful martyr Anti-pas, who was slain among the Pergamos Christians, "where Satan dwelleth." That Antipas was not an individual but the representative of a class of individuals that opposed the claims of the bishops to their exaltation, and to lord it over the people. Said claims resulted in the establishment of the Papacy. The faithful testimony of that class of men represented by Antipas, against the exaltation of the bishops, and the establishment of the Papacy, cost those witnesses to the truth their lives; thus Antipas was slain. In xiii. 3, we read of the wounding of one of the heads of the beast; said wounding was accomplished by the invasions of the Roman Empire by the northern tribes of Germany and Sythia; the recovery from the wound was due to the influence of the rising power of the bishop of Rome and the Catholic church; after noting that the deadly wound was healed it is added, "And all the world wondered after the beast." xiii. 3. The meaning of the word Antipas is "against all" so when all the world was "wondering after the beast," extoling the bishops, and laying the foundation for the Papacy—Antipas was "against all." Some see in the word a combination of two words, Anti-Papas, father, or Pope.

Verse 4. "But I have a few things against thee, because thou hast there them that hold the doctrine of Balaam, who taught Balak to cast a stumbling block before the children of Israel, to eat things sacrificed unto idols, and to commit fornication." "Thou hast there," by this language we learn that some in the church of Pergamos was holding the doctrine taught by Balaam to Balak. See Num. xxv. 1. "The people began to commit whoredom with the daughters of Moab. Verse 2, "And they called the people unto the sacrifices of their gods; and the people did eat, and bowed down to their gods." Verse 3, "And Israel joined himself to Baal-peor; and the anger of the Lord was kindled against Israel." Balaam being prevented from cursing Israel, coveted the rewards offered by Balak, and to accomplish his purpose gave evil council to Balak—which caused Israel to sin by committing fornication with the daughters of Moab. Some of the congregation of Pergamos mingled with those of the apostasy, and coveted the rewards of the world and thereby committed spiritual fornication; and also held the licentious doctrine of the Nicolaitans which was hateful to their Lord. Verse 17, "To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the hidden manna, and will give him a white stone and in the stone a new name written, which no man knoweth saving he that receiveth it."

The manna that God sent from heaven for the Israelites in the wilderness—during forty years a sample of which was afterward laid up in the ark—is here called "the hidden manna." The typical manna was hid in the typical ark in the typical holy of holies—in the typical sanctuary; and it preserved the lives of the Israelites in the wilderness; and is in Psalm lxxviii. 25, called "angels' food." But Jesus Christ the true bread from heaven, is the anti-typical ark, in which is deposited the eternal life; "which was with the Father, and was manifested unto us," 1 John i. 2, and is now in heaven, the true holy of holies. He that hath the Son, hath the life; and when he who is our life shall appear—the overcomer shall eat of the true manna that will give him life forevermore.

The white stone. It became a well established custom among the ancient Greeks and Romans, to provide their guests with some particular mark, which was handed down from father to son, and insured hospitality and kind treatment wherever it was represented. This mark was a small stone or pebble cut in two and upon the two halves of which the host and the guest mutually inscribed their names, and then interchanged them with each other. The production of this stone was quite sufficient to insure friendship for themselves or their descendants, whenever they travelled again [illegible] It is evident that these stones required to be privately kept, and the name written on them carefully concealed, lest others should obtain the privileges instead of him for whom they were intended, how natural is the allusion to this custom in the words, "I will give him a white stone, and in the stone a new name written, which no man knoweth, saving he that receiveth it," an inviolable pledge of friendship.

Our Work In Indiana.

I have been asked by some of the brethren, "Why do you not write more for THE RESTITUTION?" My long silence is not due to a want of interest either in the truth, or the brotherhood, or the paper, but to a lack of time. I have been busier the last season than ever before, going from place to place in Indiana sounding out the Word of life. I have so far visited and conducted meetings at six different places, viz: South Bend, Roll, Scicleville, Pleasant View (at this place we were obliged to close the meeting on account of bad roads), and North Salem; and I am engaged in a meeting at Inwood at this writing. All these meetings were successful, though perhaps not in the popular conception of that term. I endeavored to set forth the [illegible] in a plain and comprehensible manner and in the Spirit of Christ, warning men and women to flee from the wrath to come by taking refuge in Christ the Life-Giver. We did not have accessions to the church at all these points, but this is no reason for considering the effort a failure. Seed was sown which requires time to germinate, grow, and produce ripe fruit. The baptisms which took place (nineteen in all) were perhaps not the direct result of my labors, except as a word here and there gave a new impulse to a desire or resolution awakened by the faithful presentation of the truth years ago. The brethren, Hatch, Wince, Wagoner, Halstead, and others, spent years of hard labor at some of the places visited, and possibly did not see immediate results of some of their efforts; but the Word, faithfully preached, does not return void.

The greater number of those who were added to the body are younger persons, whose membership in the Church of God should be a source of gratification. They did a wise act in consecrating their young lives to God and his service. Others of more mature years were added whom we welcome with joy, because they, too, have obtained the like precious faith with us. I have a special reason for rejoicing in the fact that my own dear mother has come to the knowledge of the truth, and that she put on Christ in the ordinance of baptism. My heart overflowed with joy and gratitude to God, when, with two others—husband and wife—she submitted to God's righteousness in going into the stream to be planted in the likeness of Christ's death, and by being baptized into Christ Jesus to put on Christ. The truth of God is mighty, and does wonders even at this late date. To God be all the praise!

"What is the condition of our work in Indiana?" This is a question in which we are all interested. If I can speak with authority, I should say, on the whole, hopeful and encouraging. There have been many more calls for evangelistic work this season than we have been able, with the forces at command, to accept. Some of the brethren do not seem do understand that I am in the employ of several churches, and am therefore not in a position to make them a visit at any time the call may be made. I have been and am using as much of my time as I can spare in the interests of Conference work, and shall continue to do so. I intend to visit all of our churches before our June meeting at Antioch.

Our brethren throughout the State stand closer together and seem to understand each other better than before. They have a deeper interest in the work than before, and this interest is increasing. Let the members of the different committees keep a watch-[illegible] their work, keep in close touch with one another, and work together for the good of the cause and the glory of God. You will hear from me again.

Your brother in Christ,
A. H. ZIMMER.

Eternal Life Is Denied to the Wicked.

If this statement is true, sinners cannot live eternally, but must certainly die in a literal sense, when the stroke of Divine wrath shall fall upon them. John tells us "Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer; and ye know that no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him." 1 John iii. 15. This testimony is direct. No language can more pointedly deny eternal life to the wicked.

It is claimed that all men have eternal life in the sense of an endless life for the soul, murderers and saints alike. But this text is a positive denial of endless life to the man who even hates his brother. Nor can the force of the statement be evaded by an attempt to make the text simply affirm an absence of spiritual life, or religion, for that is not eternal, else there could be no backsliding.

We read again in 1 John v. 11, 12, "This is the record, God hath given to us eternal life, and this life (this eternal life) is in his Son. He that hath the Son hath life (eternal life) and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life." The only kind of life here referred to, is eternal life. The same life here assigned to the saint is positively denied to the sinner, and the only life here mentioned is eternal life. Reference cannot be made to spiritual life, called religion, as the life here mentioned is eternal, which is not the case with spiritual life, as shown.

We also read, "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life, and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him." John iii. 36.

What life is here ascribed to the believers, and denied to the sinner? Everlasting life. The unbeliever shall not see everlasting life. Then how can he live eternally? Temporal life is not denied to the sinner, here or hereafter, for sinners do see that life, but there is a certain life of which it is said "He that hath not the Son of God hath not life," and "shall not see life," a life that the sinner is now destitute of and never can possess—eternal life. As spiritual life is not eternal, that is not the kind of life referred to, but literal life made eternal. This is certainly denied to the sinner.

That reference is made to a future life, not now possessed even by the saint, and never to be possessed by the sinner, is further evident from the statement of the Apostle Paul, "He that soweth to the flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting." Gal. vi. 8.

The life here referred to is one not now possessed by saints, but one that they will reap at the final harvest. The harvest is the end of the world, and the life is everlasting. In the case of the saint we are told, "this corruptible body must put on incorruption." 1 Cor. xv. 53. But the sinner shall reap corruption, have a corruptible body, and the wicked "shall utterly perish in their own corruption." 2 Pet. ii. 12.

Sinners do not sow to the Spirit, and therefore cannot reap life everlasting, and consequently cannot live eternally, but must submit to the power of the second death.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

THE righteousness of the law of Moses is fulfilled in those who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit. Rom. viii. 5.

WE acknowledge receipt of an invitation to attend the celebration at the dedication of the Louisana Purchase Exposition, to be held at Saint Louis, Mo., April 30 and May 1, 1903. We are under obligation to the General Press Bureau for this favor. Thanks.

A SCOTCH blacksmith being asked the meaning of "metaphysics," explained it as follows:—"When the party who listens dinna ken what the party who speaks dinna ken what he means himsel—that is metaphysics."

"MEN who have the root of the matter in them have no relish for those who are never more than half-hearted for the truth, and who in the clear understanding of the consequences of error, are nevertheless full of allowances for those who propagate it."

Substitution. No. 6.

Reader, have you been baptized into the death of Christ? If so, by that act of obedience to your faith in the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, you acknowledged, in a most practical way, that the condemnation of sin in the flesh of Jesus was JUST,—just that he should suffer the penalty of the law, since he was in the nature of Adam.

In being baptized into his death you not only acknowledge the justice in his case, but that it would be just for you to pay the same penalty, had not divine love and mercy intervened, and provided a way through faith, and obedience in baptism, by which you could be justified from [illegible] and participate in the REPRESENTATIVE DEATH of the JUST ONE.

Without this beneficent arrangement of justification by faith, in case of death, your own sins would have for ever prevented your living again.

Your faith in the risen Lord is reckoned to you for righteousness, and, if called upon to do so, you can close your eyes in death, with perfect confidence that it will not be possible to be long holden of it, any more than it was for your Lord.

Justification by faith is the grand pre-requisite to a resurrection like his. You knew your conscience had been defiled, and desired it to be cleansed. Heb. ix. 14. You knew this could only be done by the blood of Christ, and by the eye of faith you saw the water colored with that blood. You went into it a sinner by constitution and practice,—and came out a saint. You entered filthy, and came out "washed." 2 Peter ii. 22; 1 Cor. vi. 11. The "heart" is "sprinkled from an evil conscience, and the body washed with pure water." Heb. x. 22. By this means that which related only to Adamic sin, and death, a change in the relationship of the flesh takes place, so that, earthen vessel as it is, it becomes the temple of the Holy Spirit. 1 Cor. vi. 19. In all this we see no room for substitution.

Our attention has been called to the objection that Paul in 1 Tim. ii. 4, speaking of God our Savior, says: "Who will have all men to be saved;" and it is difficult to see how it can be done but by a resurrection, on some principle or other. We trust no one will deny that we have proven all men will not live again; and yet there are words before us for consideration that seem to run counter to what we teach.

It is our duty to justify our teaching by the Word, or confess we are mistaken. We submit, then, that as the great God has so many times revealed the fact that those who sin without law, PERISH without law, it CANNOT BE, that he has willed to save those whom he informs us are ALREADY LOST.

We want to be understood; and so explain, that we mean God does NOT WILL all men to be saved in the sense of compelling them to be saved. What other conclusion could we come to in view of the fact that so few of every generation have arrived at the knowledge of the truth. Can we suppose for a moment that he has failed to carry out his will?

By proceeding carefully we think we shall be able to arrive at the mind of the Spirit. The first thing to be noted is, that the salvation spoken of is by means of the TRUTH. That means that truth must set them apart for God as Jesus prayed his disciples may be. And also that faith cannot be exercised without a knowledge of it; and that would make justification impossible. "Faith cometh by hearing the Word of God." Rom. x. 17.

The redemption which is in Christ, is REALIZED when he comes the second time. As the Master closes the door into the kingdom when he rises up,—we can be certain that this Scripture refers to the age we live in; because it is the truth Jesus commissioned the apostles to preach, that an accurate knowledge of, is to be required. It is the gospel of the kingdom that is to be preached Matt. xxiv. 14. The gospel of the kingdom, or the good news of its coming will [illegible] surely.

The next words say what confirms our remarks; or rather assigns the reasons for saying God desires all men to be saved, viz., "For God is one; and there is one Mediator of God and men, that man Christ Jesus, who gave himself a ransom for all,—the testimony in its own seasons; for which I was appointed a herald and an apostle, (I speak truth, I do not falsify,) a Teacher of nations in faith and truth."

Observe, the scope of this Scripture does not extend beyond the mediatorship of Christ; and that ceases with the completion of the number to be called out by the gospel.

The present Mediator gave himself a ransom for all,—to be testified in due time;" or as the Diaglott reads, "the testimony in its own season," or times.

There are several men in this country who have come to be recognized leaders in the Broader Hope theory, and in particular one who makes it appear that the due time for the testimony respecting him who gave himself a ransom for all, was very near the close of this age, and that HE was raised up to do it.

It may seem cruel to dispel this hallucination, but when divine evidence that the DUE TIME occurred near [illegible] and that the Lord, who gave himself a ransom for all had appointed another to testify concerning it away back there, our duty in the matter is plain.

Verses 5, 6, 7 says, "There is one God, and one Mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus, who gave himself a ransom for all, to be testified in DUE TIME, for which I WAS APPOINTED A HERALD, and an apostle. (I speak truth, I do not falsify,) a teacher of NATIONS in faith and truth." What folly for men at the end of the 19th century to say they were raised up to do what Paul was appointed to do so long ago! The Lord himself told Ananias (Acts ix. 12-15) that Paul, then Saul, was a chosen vessel unto him, to bear his name before the Gentiles, and kings, and the children of Israel." And at Jerusalem the Lord said to him, "Make haste, and get thee quickly out of Jerusalem, for they will not receive thy TESTIMONY concerning me." So the due time had come to testify and Paul was doing it. Paul is surely ahead on the testimony.

In Rom. xv. 8, this same Paul says Christ came to confirm the promises made to the fathers Abraham, Isaac, Jacob and David. These promises or covenanted blessings, are the substance or subject matter of the new covenant, which took the place of the old, when IT was nailed to the cross with Christ.

The old covenant treated all but the children of Abraham as aliens,—and so the 9th verse of Rom. xv. says that the confirmation of the promises was "that the GENTILES—nations rather, might now glorify God for his mercy."

It was to let all the NATIONS know of the great change that had taken place, that they may take advantage of it, that Paul says he was ordained a preacher and an apostle and a teacher of the GENTILES in faith and verity.

The due time was then, when the law,—the middle wall of partition was removed. How could any Gentiles have been taken out for God's name during these 1900 years, but for the apostolic testimony respecting the change, then? The ransom was all-embracing!

It was a new departure; even Peter had to have a miraculous lesson before he consented to preach to Gentiles. And he was taken to task about it on returning to the other apostles at Jerusalem; but after Peter's rehearsal of the whole matter; they held up on their objections, and glorified God, saying, "Then has God also TO THE GENTILES granted repentance unto life." ALL nations, instead of ONE, were now granted repentance unto life. All can see from this why God did not previously hold them to an account; let them PERISH WITHOUT LAW; because the time had not arrived to open the gate of life wide open.

Dare any one to question the wisdom, justice, mercy or love? Hath not the potter power over the clay? Instead of JEWS ONLY, all people nations, languages and tongues are now invited to God's kingdom and glory.

But what is the grand result of these times of reformation to be? Will all be saved between the due time testimony of Paul and Peter and 1 bliss, and the coming of the Lord? Answer: Turn to Rev. v. 9, 10, and listen to the hosts: "Thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us by thy blood OUT OF every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation, and hast made us unto our God kings and priests, and we shall reign on the earth."

Is not the TAKING OUT a people for his name the declared purpose of visiting the Gentiles with the gospel? See Acts xv. 14. If so he did not will or determine, that all men shall be saved,—or else he has failed of his purpose for the first time. Jesus knew all about it when he said his coming will find the world as it was in the days of Noah.

We are often referred to 1 Cor. xv. 22 for proof that life through Christ is as universal as death through Adam.

God knows whether or not theory has so blinded the minds of some that they cannot see that that is a wresting of the Scripture, or that the exigencies of the case are such that they do not take pains to investigate. Certainly they should know that this language was addressed to the Church of God at Corinth, to them that are sanctified in Christ Jesus. See 1, 2.

They certainly know that all men are in Adam, and were never consulted in relation to that state of existence.

They know that all men [illegible] in Christ; and that the Corinthians in particular, at one time were [illegible] Christ.

They know that there were thousands living at that time in Corinth, who were not in Christ.

They know, that those who were in Christ had been begotten by Paul "through the gospel," for he says so himself, 1 Cor. iv. 15; and as there was but one way of getting into Christ, they like the Romans (vi. 3;) and the three thousand at Pentecost, had been baptized into Christ.

They know do those who claim 1 Cor. xv. 22 as proof of universal resurrection, that Paul never forced them against their will to be baptized. They had to take action in the matter, because it had to be done in obedience to their faith in the gospel Paul preached to them.

They know that the church at Corinth, or part of it had been led astray since the apostle left them, respecting the resurrection, and this chapter was intended to correct that error. In his argument he makes no reference whatever to unbelievers. Why should he? He was not treating with such

Having shown that Christ was raised; and offering this as proof that there is to be a resurrection of after-fruits, as well as that of Christ, the first-fruits,—he states the order. Christ the first-fruits,—AFTERWARDS those who are Christ's at his appearing."

As all who die are not his, all will not rise, there being no third party referred to; the reason being found in the non-compliance with the conditions those who are his, had to comply with. They had not been begotten through the gospel,—had never been baptized into Christ.

We are then referred to John v. 28 for proof that all in their graves shall hear the voice of the Son of God and come forth,—some to life, and some to condemnation.

We have shown infallible proofs that those not amenable to law, perish without law. Will they come forth after they have perished?

Isa. xliii. 17 describes others who shall lie down together and shall NOT RISE, are EXTINCT, and QUENCHED as tow. Will universal resurrectionists dare insist that these shall rise?

Psa. xcii. 67, declares that "A brutish man knoweth not; neither doth a fool understand this,—when the wicked spring as the grass, and when all the workers of iniquity do flourish, it is that they shall be DESTROYED FOREVER. Will they hear the voice of the Son of God and come forth after that?

IMPOSSIBLE!!

Then what is the explanation?

Ans. After destroyed forever, they are not in their graves, or any where else!!! This explains why it says others shall not rise. They are not there to rise.

I see that the word huper is misprinted six times in article on Substitution as unper. Doubtless the h was written too much like an n. Please correct and oblige. M. J.

The Balkan Situation.

Headlines such as "Sultan unable to stop Balkan war." "Crisis cannot long be delayed," and others of like import, appear in the daily papers. We give herewith a dispatch taken from the Chicago Inter Ocean of April 12, and dated at London. It gives a clear idea of the present condition in that turbulent country.

With the inevitableness of fate itself, the course of events in southeastern Europe shapes without pity or deviation toward a great sanguinary struggle. Like many another crisis which has ushered in momentous changes in the destinies of historic races, an unforeseen event has broken in on the calculations of statesmen with such force that it promises to precipitate all their delicately balanced considerations down the roadway whose only end is war.

In the present situation this event is the murder of M. Stcherbina, the Russian Minister at Mitrovitza. Allowing for the vast contrast in political conditions, it may be said broadly that the shot which ended the Russian agent's life had in it for Turkey's dominions in Europe possibilities akin to what the blowing up of the Maine had for Spain's empire in America. It is a difference in degree only, not in kind.

To appreciate fully the crime at Mitrovitza it is necessary to know who M. Stcherbina was and what he stood for in Russian policy, which, when all has been said and done, is the great abiding factor of eastern Europe. He was born in 1868, educated in Moscow at the Lazareff Institute of Oriental languages, which is the school for [illegible] entered the St. Petersburg state department at the age of 21, making the Balkan peninsula a specialty.

Later he was attached to the Russian embassy at Constantinople. He was then appointed successively to the Russian consulates at Uskub and Scutari. His intelligent and energetic career promised a brilliant future for him as a diplomatist. His appointment a year ago to Mitrovitza was a most dangerous step for a man who knew, as everybody else did, that he had made himself obnoxious at Scutari to the Albanians, whose language he spoke better than any foreigner.

It was, indeed, his reports on the state of Albania that brought about this appointment. While there he did not conceal his active Pan-Slavic propaganda, and counteracted Austrian secret action wherever he found it. Stcherbina was, besides an energetic Russian official, an outspoken protagonist in the movement for drawing men from all the Slavonic races, and money from at least unofficial Russia.

The sentence of fifteen years' imprisonment imposed on the Albanian soldier Ibrahim, whose shot was calculated as accurately as a murderer's ever was, amounts to an insult to the Czar's government. That the Sultan will gladly have him executed nobody doubts, but what is Abdul's own position? Not only are all his bodyguard highland Albanians of the most turbulent type, drawn from the same bands that attacked Mitrovitza, but the grand Vizier, Ferid Pasha, is an Albanian; his chief favorite, Ized Bey, is an Albanian, and his chief chamberlains, Emin Bey, Selfoullah Bey, Adjl Ali Bey, and Raghip Bey are all Albanians.

It will be to the interest of all these men to keep things as they are. Reforms would mean the end of their system, as it would also mean the end of the cutthroat raidings of their kinsmen in northern Albania. These latter rely on their friends at Yildiz Kiosk to bring the necessary pressure to bear on the Sultan, who is as much at their mercy as were formerly the Roman emperors with their pretorian guards.

The only alternative left to discuss is the Russo-Austrian reform scheme. An experienced observer at Odessa, has this to say:

"It is daily becoming more apparent, and probably more plain to the Russians themselves than to others, that the Macedonian reform scheme is not going to solve the Balkan question. The project has really nothing more potent to recommend it than its well-intentioned inception.

All the wisdom of all the cabinets of Europe might be embodied in a Macedonian reform project, but the result would be sterile if its execution were relegated to the hands of the Turks, and in the sequel the situation would be more dangerously complicated than ever. It is true that the malcontent Bulgarians have done, and are doing, their utmost to obstruct and nullify the Austro-Russian scheme, but it were idle and inequitable to ascribe to them the whole responsibility of its miscarriage."

Supposing that the concert of Europe be substituted for the Austro-Russian combination, there is even less hope. Mutual jealousies would make anything except negative action ineffective. Europe would object to the Sultan bringing over the Kurds, who were so effective against the Armenians, to restore order in the Balkan peninsula, if only because these savages would undoubtedly commit outrages on the unarmed Christian peasantry on the plains, and after that European cohesion would inevitably fall to pieces.

The Tory newspapers of London bravely declare that England will not allow Russia and Austria to divide Macedonia between them, though it is difficult to see who, except the Turks could prevent them if they could agree on the partition, but they will never agree while Russia rates Austria's strength so cheaply.

Europe knows that Russia knows where she stands. The Czar's sincere personal sentiment in favor of peace, and the more material circumstance that the Russian government may prefer to postpone the inevitable for a while, may be influences operating now, but there is nothing else visible of hopeful augury under the lowering clouds that momentarily threaten to burst upon what is left of European Turkey.

Bear Ye one anothers Burdens.

No doubt all readers of THE RESTITUTION have seen the modest appeal for the Plymouth brethren. As stated the work is hindered. Can we not all spare one, two or more dollars to aid these brethren?

I feel sure we can. This is a worthy cause. The debt would no doubt have been paid had not so many been compelled to move away to get employment.

"Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ."

NANCY BARNES.

Dear Restitution:

Please find enclosed money to renew my subscription for our beloved RESTITUTION. I cannot do without it as I am isolated from all of the one faith. I have not heard one of our brethren preach for fifteen years. Pray for me dear brethren, that I may have my lamp trimmed and burning brightly, and be ready to meet the Lord when he comes.

I think it will not be long from the signs of the times. I think it will not be long as time rolls on and the dark clouds thicken in the east. All nations are making ready for the last great battle. This proves to them that know the prophecy, that the end of Gentile times is at hand. Then the vail will be taken off of Israel- then Christ will come.

My prayer is that the Lord will soon come and set up his kingdom.

Your lonely Sister,

We whose names are given herewith, believing that it is our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending THE RESTITUTION to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our names for the purpose of aiding the managers of the paper to supply the needy ones. Passing it Over.

If we only could restrain our often too-ready tongues and fiery tempers until the storms of human trials, every-hour and every day, pass over, what shadows we would arise from!—aye, smiling, as we saw them vanishing into the distant nothingness of oblivion. If we could but reason calmly and patiently and resolutely with ourselves, as we betimes must bear the foot-bruises along life's rugged pathway, and bathe them in his heavenly dew of hope until even the scars leave not a vestige of their existence as we gaze upon them again with softening eyes of eternal faith: if we could only train our human ears to listen to the tolls of sorrow that resound upon them as we perforce must see the heavy clods falling upon some beloved breast!

If we could only train our hearts to thrill with the ecstasy of a higher [illegible] with a supreme love towards [illegible] morbid, human despair when [illegible] mortal eye, some hand, some voice in which we vainly trusted: oh! solemnly, desecrates the pedestal of loyal friendship and honor upon which our love-elected their endurance, had turned to mock us, or thrown us helplessly aside, or traduced us by calumny or distrustful suspicions. Ah, yes! if we only could do these things, how different would our lives seem in their passing! But we must only try, remembering our Savior's heavy heart and cross wearied shoulders, and his bleeding feet on the lonely road to Calvary. He also had to reach the immortal goal of peace through life's bitterest shadows. He smiled angelically at his enemies, and today he turns—oh! we know not how often—to blot out the sins of his wandering human fold as they cry out to him for mercy below.—Christian Work.

Merit and Possession.

No merit, but possession, is often the ruling consideration in human affairs. A certain man is not, perhaps, the best man, the most competent man, or the most faithful man for a certain position, but he is the man who has got the place. How he got it is another matter; it may be by fair means, it may be by foul; by honest methods or by methods which will not bear inspection, but he is there; and that is the fact with which we have to deal, and it is our business to recognize, to a certain extent, the existing order. Other people might do a work better could they get a chance, but they do not get the chance, and hence they are obliged to wait.

It is the duty and right of every Christian man to know what God would have him to do, and to be in the place of divine appointment. It is not necessary that he quarrel with others or to dispute about possession or precedent. Somewhere in the Lord's world there is a place for him if he will seek it and find it and fill it. It may be a humble place, it may be a poor place, it may be a hard place, but it is the place, to which God's providence has appointed him; let him find it and fill it; or it may be he has found it already, and only needs a heart to work, in order to do those things which lie ready at his hand.—H. L. H.

A man's strength in this life is often greater from some single word, cherished and remembered, than in arms or armor. Looking over the dead on a field of battle, it was easy to see why that young man, and he but a recruit, fought so valiantly. Hidden under his vest was a sweet face, done up in gold; and so, through love's heroism, he fought with double strokes, and danger mounting higher, till he found honor in death. So, if you carry the talisman of Christ in your heart, it will give you strength and courage in every conflict.

The famous DeWitt, one of the great statesmen of the age in which he lived, being asked by a friend how he was able to dispatch that multitude of affairs in which he was engaged, replied that his whole art consisted in doing one thing at a time. "If," says he "I have any necessary dispatches to make, I think of nothing else until those are finished; if any domestic affairs require my attention, I give myself up wholly to them until they are set in order."

The Bible is not merely a book containing a revelation; it is a revelation struggling within the limitations of a book.

"Faith gives light, where reason gropes in darkness. The entrance of thy Word giveth light."

Poetry.

Have You Found Jesus?

"I counsel thee to buy of me gold tried in the fire, that thou mayest be rich."
Rev. iii. 18.

Have you found Him, weary stranger?
Is He precious to your soul?
Has He spoken peace and pardon,
Loosed your hand and made you whole?
Is He more to you than friends,
Strokes, or riches, or flowing wells?
More than clean royal palaces,
Wisest earth's proudest monarch dwells?

More to you than friends or children?
Bright as pleasure, or worldly fame?
More to you than sweetest pleasures,
Ay—to stand, or fall in shame?
O, my soul, your wealth is useless,
Counting dust and time but loss,
Only comes a true belief in Him
How to have and to enjoy.

All not perish with the passing,
No, not one keeps not endless years;
Longest out in bitter grieving,
Vain regrets and useless tears!
Give yourself to God's sweet service;
He holds hand to each one you.
For this hour is now, and needs the filling,
Or and then we ask there is to be.

[illegible] of life is going,
Soon the moments speed away;
Would you win the crown of glory?
Seek the Savior now—to-day!
Rich reward awaits the doer,
Wealth, beyond what tongue can tell;
Crown, and throne, and life immortal,
And bright home wherein to dwell.

Sweet it is to work for Jesus,
Waiting for the night to long;
When we will come no pain nor dying,
Nor be heard sad voice's song.
Work for him will prosper ever,
Widening, broadening, moving on,
Till the world's last field of battle,
Shall for Christ, our King, be won.

Immortality of Soul.

Editor Sentinel:

It has been our good fortune to tempt some prominent "Divines" of our State, to engage in a public discussion in one of our secular papers, upon the subject of the nature of man, which owing to the prominence of the theologians represented has attracted considerable attention. The "Rev. Dr. Bixby" of Camden, Del. is of the Baptist persuasion, while the "Rev." B. F. Campbell and Harry Price of Dover are Methodists.

S. H. Thomas.

Editor Dover Sentinel:

Will some Bible student among your many intelligent readers kindly give the chapter and verse in the Bible for the prevailing belief that man has by nature an immortal or never-dying soul. I have use for such a passage, but strange to say, am unable to find it.

S. H. Thomas.

Editor Sentinel:

My notice was called to a request in your last issue, for chapter and verse where the Bible says man is immortal. Believing this request prompted by one of the most insidious and dangerous forms of infidelity, I hasten to reply, that none may be deceived. There is no such passage, and none is needed. The Bible takes it for granted that we know some things. It does not tell us that two and two make four. It does not tell us that the earth is composed of land and water, or that the air is composed of oxygen and nitrogen, or that the moon is not made of "green cheese."

It does teach us, however, that a man's soul leaves the body at death, as in Gen. xxxv. 18, where it says Rachel's soul departed at her death, and 2 Pet. i. 13 15, where Peter tells us he puts off the body at death, and in Matt. xxv. 4, where Christ says the wicked will go to eternal punishment. There can be no punishment without consciousness, and no eternal punishment without eternal consciousness. Many other passages can be cited if these are not enough.

D. C. Bixby.

Editor Sentinel:

Please accept thanks for space accorded my question concerning Bible evidence for the prevailing belief of the immortality of the soul, or as more plainly stated, of the existence in man of a conscious and never-dying part, which is the man himself, and which lives on and is conscious after the dissolution of the body which it inhabits. Being deeply interested in the subject, and believing as I do that the Bible is the word of the living God, quite naturally I went to it for information on the subject, and failing to find satisfactory evidence there I put the question to your many intelligent readers. I must say the result has been somewhat surprising. Three Bible students, one of them, Dr. Bixby, a Baptist minister, have kindly replied, and all agree that the Bible contains no such passage. Possibly, however, these gentlemen like myself have failed to look in the right place; so, believing as I do that time spent in searching the Word of God is time well spent, I would beg them and others to continue the search, and to stimulate further investigation, I will offer a little prize of ten dollars to the first person who will send chapter and verse to the Sentinel office which says that any man has an immortal or never-dying soul or spirit.

Mr. Bixby says, "Believing this request prompted by one of the most insidious and dangerous forms of infidelity, etc." No doubt Mr. Bixby will be glad to learn that he is mistaken in this, so I hasten to inform him that I have the greatest possible love and reverence for the living God and for the Bible as his Word. I have no creed but it, and my daily life is shaped and guided by its teachings alone. This being so the question can hardly be said to be of infidel origin. Mr. Bixby accounts for the fact that the Bible nowhere says that man is an immortal soul by asserting that "the Bible takes it for granted." This is a new thought to me. I have not yet reached that point in theology where I can feel justified in taking for granted and incorporating into my creed grave and important doctrines not mentioned in the Word of God. I would like to ask Mr. Bixby if he has no fears of establishing a dangerous precedent.

I have often wondered why there are so many creeds to be found among professing Christians throughout the world, each diverse from the others, and each strenuously contending that his is the true Gospel, and all from the same Bible. But it is all plain to me now. They each accept such portions of the Word of God as may please their fancy and then "take for granted" the balance of their creed. Will Mr. Bixby kindly tell us in his next how much of his creed is backed by a plain "thus saith the Lord," and just how much is "taken for granted."

In support of this thought that the "Bible takes for granted" the immortality of the soul, Mr. Bixby continues: "It does not tell us that the earth is composed of land and water, etc." Now, Mr. Bixby, the Bible is a large book, and tells us so many things we should go slow in quoting what it does not say. You have evidently overlooked Gen. i. 9, 10, which reads as follows: "And God said let the waters under the heaven be gathered together unto one place, and let the dry land appear, and it was so. And God called the dry land earth, and the waters called he seas."

This comes pretty close to saying that the earth is composed of land and water. He also refers to the moon being made of green cheese, etc. which I pass without comment.

Mr. Bixby next refers to Gen. xxxv. 18. I will quote it in full. "And it came to pass that as her soul was departing (for she died) that she called his name Ben-Oni." Now, it will be observed that the words immortal or never-dying are not used in connection with Rachel's soul, which was in the act of departing. Mr. Bixby says "we must take it for granted." But let us see if there is not a better way. By reference to Dr. Young's Analytical Concordance, page 917, we find that the original word used in this verse is the Hebrew "nephesh," which means animal life. The same Hebrew word is translated life in Gen. i. 2, and here refers to all living animals, fish and birds. "And God said let the waters bring forth abundantly the moving creatures that hath (nephesh) life, fowl that they may fly above the earth."

Also see verse 30, of same chapter, "And to every beast of the earth and to every fowl of the air, and to every thing that creepeth upon the earth, wherein there is (nephesh) life, I have given every green herb for meat."

If Mr. Bixby or any other interested person will open their Bible to this chapter and verse they will see that the original reference reads, "A living soul." Thus showing that the original Hebrew word Nephesh simply means animal life, and it was this life which was leaving Rachael at her death as quoted above. Nephesh, meaning soul or animal life, is applied in our Bible to both man and beast, to every creeping thing in the sea and out of the sea, and is rendered in the English version of the Bible both soul and life, but is never qualified by the words immortal, everlasting or never dying. I find 28 different passages which say that beasts and every creeping, flying or living thing, including mankind, have, or rather are, souls. There is one more passage quoted by Mr. Bixby which calls for notice, Matt. xxv. 46, "And these shall go away into everlasting punishment." It will be observed by reading the entire chapter that this is the last act in the great drama of human life, the closing scene of the great future judgment day. Mr. Bixby says, "There can be no everlasting punishment without everlasting consciousness." Doubtless Mr. Bixby is aware that there are many different original words translated "ever" or "everlasting" in our Bible. Some of them mean "without end." For example, Job ii. 27, speaking of a certain class of men, says: "He shall perish for (Nelsach) ever like his own dung." In this case the original word translated "ever" means perpetual or endless. See Dr. Young, page 310. In the case of Matt. xxv., however, the original word is "Aonion," and as all lexicographers and students know means a period of time. I am glad to know that this is so, for by this knowledge I can understand that the terrible scene described in the closing verse of Matt. xxv. will have an end, and that aonion punishment is not endless torment; but rather that it terminates in the death of the subject. In the light of this knowledge I am also able to correctly understand Rom. vi. 23: "The wages of sin is death;" also Ezek. xviii. 4: "The soul that sinneth it shall die." Not live forever in torment. Also Psa. cxiv. 20: "The Lord preserveth all them that love him but all the wicked will he destroyed." Not preserve in endless fire. Mal. iv. 1 speaks eloquently and plainly of that event recorded in Matt. xxv.: "For behold the day cometh that shall burn as an oven, and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly shall be stubble and the day that cometh shall burn them up saith the Lord of hosts that it shall leave them neither root nor branch. And ye shall tread down the wicked for they shall be ashes under the soles of your feet in the day that I will do this saith the Lord;" also Psa. xxxvii. 20, "The wicked shall perish and the enemies of the Lord shall be as the fat of lambs. They shall consume into smoke shall they consume away;" and in verse 38 we read: "The transgressors shall be destroyed together. The end of the wicked shall be cut off." They are also likened to grass, chaff, stubble and tares that are cast into the fire and burned. In Oba. 16 verse, as if the great Author of the Bible foresaw that error would prevail upon this subject, he therefore places it beyond all question or possible mistake by these words: "They shall be as if they had not been." In view of all this I think Mr. Bixby and all others will agree with me that if "The wages of sin is death;" if all the wicked will be destroyed; if like stubble, chaff and tares they are cast into a furnace and burned and become ashes and have left neither root nor branch; if, like the fat of lambs offered at Jewish sacrifices, they consume into smoke; if the end of the wicked shall be cut off and they shall become as though they had not been;—if all this be so, can torment and torture, weeping, wailing, cursing and gnashing of teeth continue endlessly? Nay we not look with longing eyes for that blessed age when sin and sinners, suffering, tears, sorrows and death will all lie behind us, while before us naught but endless peace and perfect happiness, knowing that in all God's boundless universe not one spot remains where sorrow and suffering exists. God in mercy speed the time!

THE HOUSEHOLD OF GOD.

What an endearing word this word household is. In a natural way it means so much. A united household is not only a power, but something to be admired and appreciated. "Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed on us, that we should be called the sons of God." We who are aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope, and without God in the world. "But now in Christ Jesus, ye who sometimes were far off, are made nigh by the blood of Christ." We thank and adore his great name for these precious promises, by which we are made one of his own dear household. If children, then heirs, heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ, we will not only share the honors and glories of that kingdom that is to break in pieces and consume all others, filling the earth with its glory, but our bodies shall be like his own glorious body. We read, "Moses was faithful over his house, (house of Jacob, household of God), but Christ as a son over his own house, whose house are we, if we hold fast the beginning of our confidence, and the rejoicing of the hope firm unto the end." We are no more strangers and foreigners, but "fellow citizens with the saints, and of the household of God." What a blessed privilege is this, an assurance, a joy to be of the household of God. We are indeed to sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus, in anticipation of the glories to be revealed at his coming. Christ says, "In my Father's house are many mansions." Many places or abodes, many positions, or room for many in the household of God. So he says, "In my Father's house," keep in mind the house over which Christ is faithful. In my Father's house are many mansions, not our idea of a literal mansion, for this could not be gotten in a literal house, but a position in God's kingdom. "I go to prepare a place for you." Yes, he is at the right hand of the Father interceding for us, and when he comes again, he will receive us unto himself, that where he is there we may be. We will not only be with him, but like him in power, the glorified household of God. The apostles asked, "We have left all and followed thee?" The answer came, "Ye which have followed me in the regeneration when the Son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel." They followed him, and they will reign with him. We follow him and by loving obedience to his will we are a prepared household, waiting a place in his kingdom. He is now interceding for us, he bids us come boldly to the throne of grace. We fully appreciate this offer, when we think of us occupying such an exalted position in the household of God. If we hold the beginning of our confidence firm unto the end, rejoicing in the hope, Christ will receive us unto himself an immortal household of God. Glorious consummation may it soon come.

Nancy Barbee.

Gal. i. 10, "As we therefore have opportunity let us do good to all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith." Why the household of faith? Because this is Christ's house, whose house we are if we hold fast the confidence and the rejoicing firm unto the end. Christ as a Son over his own house, in whom all the building fitly framed together groweth unto an holy temple in the Lord, in whom ye also are builded together for an habitation of God. Every one who is obedient to God and accepts the gospel of salvation becomes one in the household, which when complete will be ruled over by Jesus, for he is worthy as a Son to rule over the household of God. Love one another, by this shall all men know that ye are my disciples. If ye love one another, bear one another's burden, and so fulfill the law of Christ. If we live acceptable to God we are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow citizens with the household of God. To be of this household will mean love, joy and peace—no strife or envy or jealousy, no more separation or sorrow, but one with Christ. May the time soon come when this home will be ours. But now let us strive to keep the household of faith what God meant it to be when he gave his Son that we might have an inheritance with him, and be no more strangers, but as one family, one household, with one faith, one hope, waiting and watching for the Son, who will reign over our home, the household of God.

Ella Knowles.

The Lord seeing that Abraham was a just and wise man, he spake on this wise concerning him, "I know him that he will command his children and his household after him, and they shall keep the ways of the Lord, to do justice and judgment, that the Lord may bring upon Abraham that which he hath spoken of him, that he should be a father of many nations, and in him should all of the families of the earth be blessed. God knew faithful Abraham, that he would guide his household in the way of the Lord, for he had been a friend of God and proved himself worthy to become an heir of salvation, and we must come to Jesus in faith. As Abraham's faith was centered in God in all things, as he commanded him to do, so likewise it rests on us to believe on Jesus Christ, who laid down his precious life for us, and be adopted into the household of God, the faithful ones that have believed in the promises of all ages. There is quite a difference in being one of a household or of a home, and of being one chosen of God, and belonging to the household of God. In our homes we can do many good things to add to the comforts of its inmates and make our homes comfortable, a place where each member loves to return and rest when weary of the cares of life. In Proverbs xxxi. 27, says, "She looketh well to the ways of her household, and eateth not the bread of idleness." We are commanded not to be idle, but to do whatsoever our hands findeth to do, and to be diligent, and if we have more than we need we can help others that are not so well favored. As we therfore have opportunity let us do good unto all men, especially to them of the household of faith. Then in living a holy and pure life after obeying the gospel of the kingdom, then we can hear our blessed Lord say those words, "Now, therefore ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow citizens with the saints and of the household of God, and are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone." If we would always keep those promises in mind we would have but little time to worry and fret; our trials would seem light and would vanish as the dew before the rising sun, but we are too apt to let these beautiful words slip our memories, and our own thoughts rule in their place. Dear ones, let us try to endure unto the end, that we may hear the voice of him who spake as never man spake, "Thou hast been faithful over a few things, enter into the joys of thy Lord."

Book that Stands Hammering.

Thousand of books which men have written and read perished long ago. Of the great Alexandrian Library with its half-million volumes, how many remain? Who knows the contents of the twenty thousand volumes in the old Rameseum at Thebes? Even of some of the famous classics of Greece and Rome only fragments remain. And yet these books have not encountered hatred and enmity, nor have men put forth determined efforts to oppose and destroy them. But the Bible has been the target for the arrows of heathen, skeptics and infidels. It has been the storm-centre around which cyclones of persecution have revolved. It has been condemned by imperial decree and destroyed by ecclesiastical mandate. It has been investigated, criticized, ridiculed, caricatured, exploded, time and again; and yet it endures assaults, survives its adversaries, and leads the progress of the world like a flaming pillar and a guiding cloud.

About the beginning of the nineteenth century the Bible was assailed with fresh energy by men who supposed they had utterly demolished it. Up to that time probably not more than ten millions copies of the Scriptures had been circulated since the beginning of the world; but during the nineteenth century it is estimated that some four hundred millions of copies of the book in whole or in part have been printed, in between three and four hundred languages, and scattered far and wide for the healing of the nations, and the salvation of the lost. And these books have gone forth from the most wealthy, enlightened, progressive and influential nations of the world, who now control more than three-fifths of the entire surface on the earth; and it is said that the languages into which these books have been translated can be read by nearly nine-tenths of the human family.

The existence of such a collection of books after eighteen centuries of assault and opposition is a miracle, and is fitly illustrated by that old Waldensian seal—an anvil surrounded by broken hammers—with its legend which has been freely rendered.

Hammer away, ye hostile bands,
Your hammers break, God's anvil stands.

And the waves which are today dashing against this impregnable book will recede as others have done, and leave it firm as before.—H. L. Hastings.

"A Religion of Silences."

It is not the business of the gospel to clear up every mystery, but to throw light upon a certain narrow, straight path of faith and duty which leads man, now lost as he is in the mire of sin and amid the mazes of doubt, back to his Father's house. Christianity has been called "a religion of silences." Its reticences may at times be hard to bear, but they result partly from the vastness of the unseen life and partly from the present limitations of our finite faculties. Then, too, there remains an inevitable residue of mystery which belongs to the royal investiture of an infinite God. Humanity has always found difficulty in reconciling itself to these silences and reservations. In every age it has demanded a complete philosophical catalogue of the whole universe. Men are perpetually clamoring for the clearing up of every mystery. But God will never tell man everything there is to be known; and no man comes at last into the presence of the Almighty in the role of a proud philosopher, but as a humble believer, saved by grace.—New York Observer.

The Narrow Way.

"Strait is the gate and narrow is the way which leadeth to life." Matt. vii. 14.

The gate of life is strait, too strait to allow the passage of sin, pride, envy, worldliness, or anything unChristlike, and we must strive if we would enter in. But the striving comes in stripping ourselves down to the measure of the gate. Once the effort is made and all the worthless treasures that prevented our entrance have been cast aside, it is marvelous how easy the actual passage is after all.

And oh, the blessedness of the narrow way. It is too narrow for the entrance of fear, or care, or doubt, or hopeless sorrow. Yet wide enough for limitless faith and boundless hope, and faithfulness love and countless [illegible] for Jesus and me, just wide enough for Jesus and you. Were the way wider we might be separated from the Savior; but now, so long as we are in the way, we must be close to him. So close that he is ever near to help. Thank God for the narrowness!—Alice M. Goodwin.

Obituary.

Elizabeth Suit was born Sept. 15, 1819, in Fairfield Co. Pa., and died near Englewood, Kan., April 6, 1903, aged 83 years, six months, and 21 days.

The deceased was married to Jacob Kelver at Logansport, Ind., July 26, 1839, and for over 55 years they lived together until the death of her husband a few years since.

To their union were born six children, three of whom are living, namely Daniel, of South Bend, Henry, who lives on the old homestead, and Catherine Miller, of Englewood, Kansas. Besides these who are left to mourn for her are thirteen grandchildren, and nine great grandchildren, as well as other relatives and friends.

Mr. and Mrs. Kelver came to Marshall County some 38 years ago, and settled on a farm two miles west of Plymouth, where they resided till his death.

Sister Kelver united with the Church of God at this place many years ago, and was ever firm in the faith and hope of the gospel. After the death of her husband she went to live with her daughter, Sister Miller, in Kansas, where she died as above stated. The body was sent here, and the funeral was held at the old home on April 10, Brother A. H. Zilmer officiating, after which she was laid by the side of her husband in Oak Hill Cemetery, there to wait till the call is sounded for the saints to come forth. May we each so live that the glad sound will reach our ears and awaken us to the life that knows no end.

A Statement and an Appeal.

The Plymouth congregation still owes a few hundred dollars on its Church building. The members are all poor people. They are hindered very much in carrying on the work that might be and that ought to be done, from the fact of having to devote their energies to raising money to pay off this debt. Numbers have been forced by circumstances to move away, and this lays the burden on fewer shoulders.

The brethren and sisters are making a great effort to get the money to lift this debt this year, and it is an object to them to raise as much as is possible by June. Many brethren and sisters have in time past met with this Church, and know of their zeal and earnestness. Many others have read accounts from time to time of meetings held at this place, and work done for the Lord. The hospitality of the Plymouth [illegible] is known to hundreds. The brethren and sisters always have and shall ever give their homes and the best they have to those who may chose to visit and sojourn with them.

It may be that some who have met with the Plymouth brethren, or others who know of their work, would like to contribute of their means to aid in clearing this house of debt, thus enabling the friends to do the work that now languishes. Should there be any such if they will send to Brother E. K. Barnhill, Plymouth, Ind., he will, as Secretary of the Board of Trustees, make proper acknowledgement, and convey the money to the hands of the Treasurer.

"The World to Come and the Life Everlasting," is the name of a book of over 400 pages. The title page describes it as a Symposium of Writers on eternal life from the Bible Basis, and is selected from the works of a goodly number of Bible Students who have written during the past few years. It is compiled and published by Bro. John O. Woodruff, of Elizabeth, N. J., of whom it may be ordered. The paper and print are excellent, as is the durable cloth-binding. The price is $1.00, and considering the work as a whole it is very low, and we urge all who need a book on this subject to procure one without delay.

NOTICE.

To the Bereans especially, or to any of the brethren.

It is the desire of many that Bro. S. J. Lindsay conduct a Bible School for at least ten days prior to the beginning of the next annual Conference to be held at Oregon, Ill., for the purpose of Bible drills or systematic Bible instruction. We all need such Normal instruction, and this letter is to all, and especially to those who may be missed by circular letter.

The plan is for those who take the work to take up lodging in the Conference hall, and do their own cooking and furnishing, thus making their stay as inexpensive as they please.

Oregon is a very pleasant city, located on the banks of Rock River, and an ideal place in leisure hours for an outing.

No tuition will be charged, as Bro. Lindsay has offered his services free for this time. Let us know in good season if you will come. For further particulars address the undersigned, Chairman Evangelist Committee, Illinois State Conference, [illegible]

Your Brother in hope.

J. M. GLOTFELTY.

A Word of Appreciation.

Some time ago I asked the brotherhood through THE RESTITUTION how many copies of the pamphlet "The Reasons of My Withdrawal from the Evangelical Association," would be wanted. Letters came from all parts of the country, some containing money stating the number of copies desired, so that a second edition of 1000 was printed. I wish to state that this edition is nearly exhausted, there being only about 150 left. Those wishing copies better send their orders early, as they will soon be gone. I desire, by this means, to thank the brethren for their encouraging words and financial help. Trusting that the seed will fall in good soil and produce fruit unto eternal life. 25 pages, at 5 cents per copy. A. H. Zilmer, Plymouth, Ind.

Popular Lectures by M. Joblin.

Brethren and Sisters, Have you loved ones who think sinworthy will save them? Have you friends who think they worship acceptably while ignorant of God's promises? Have you acquaintances with false hopes of heaven, or who believe themselves immortal by nature, or who think their sins are forgiven, although they are ignorant of the Law of Pardon, or who have no use for a God who consigns sinners to Eternal Torment, and are ignorant of Jehovah's benificent purpose to fill the earth with his glory and bestow Eternal Life upon believers of the Gospel, so they can enjoy it for ever? Joblin, entitled:—"The Kingdom of God;" "Old Mother Earth to Be Born Again;" "Strangers from the Covenants of Promise;" "Vain Worship;" "No Immortality Out of Christ;" "Hope Begotten by the Resurrection of Christ;" "God's Love and Solicitude for Mankind;" and "What Shall We Do to be Saved?"

The Way to Him.

Is there no way to him at last
But that where his bleeding feet have passed?
Did he not to his followers say,
I am the Life, the Light, the Way?

Yea, and still from the heavens he saith,
The gate of life is the gate of death.
Pence is the crown of faith's good fight,
And the way of the cross is the way of light!

Immortality of Soul. No. 2.

Editor Sentinel:

In your issue of last week there appeared an article over the signature of one S. H. Thomas which attracted my attention, and which, in a spirit of polemical charity, dare not go unchallenged. After thanking you for space accorded his "Question concerning Bible evidence for the prevailing belief in the immortality of the soul," etc., S. H. T. continues:

"Being deeply interested in the subject, and believing as I do that the Bible is the Word of the living God, quite naturally I went to it for information on the subject, and, failing to find satisfactory evidence there, I put the question to your many intelligent readers. And I must say the result has been somewhat surprising."

Just how "deeply" interested S. H. T. really is, I am at sea to say, but, one thing is certain, he evidently indulged in a very superficial search, judging from his obscure declaration, "failing to find satisfaction there." He next put his "question" to your many intelligent readers, presumably for an answer. "Three Bible students," he declares, "have kindly replied, and all agree that the Bible contains no such passage." I fully admit that so far as a verbatim passage is concerned, i. e., "immortal soul," "never-dying soul," etc., it is not to be found in the Bible. The three Bible students are right in their replies, and I fully agree with them. But that proves nothing. The words "whiskey" and "tobacco" are not found in the Word of God, and yet S. H. T. and every other person knows that the Bible and science are against them as "good creatures of God." Facts prove the contrary. The admission that S. H. T., three Bible students and many of your intelligent readers fail to find a verbatim passage as alluded to does not prove the objection to the "prevailing belief in the immortality of the soul" at all Scriptural. Possibly S. H. T. exults in the bare admissions made by the three Bible students, ex nomine, and vainly imagines he has made an impression upon "your many intelligent readers," who for some reason failed to reply to his question, thereby bringing to him a "result" which "has been somewhat surprising." Comment is unnecessary. S. H. T. declares his belief in the Bible as the Word of the living God, and rightly says, "time spent in searching the Word of God is time well spent," and in order to "stimulate further investigation," he says:

"I will GIVE" twelve fathers [?] to the first person who will send chapter and verse to the Sentinel office which says that any man has an immortal or never-dying soul or spirit."

Now, I am not concerned as to the prize of $10 offered by S. H. T. "to the first person," etc., but I am interested that he and others "shall look in the right place," ad libitum, and take nothing "for granted" that cannot be proven by the "Thus saith the Lord." I will undertake the pleasurable task of conclusively proving to S. H. T. and all other quibblers of his kind the fullest "Bible evidence for the prevailing belief in the immortality of the soul, or, more plainly stated, of the existence in man of a conscious and never-dying part, which is the man himself and which lives on and is conscious after the dissolution of the body which it inhabits."

Man is a tripartite being, i. e., he consists of body, soul and spirit. For a knowledge of the distinction between body and spirit we are indebted to the Bible and science; for a knowledge of the distinction between soul and spirit we are indebted to the Bible and religion solely and wholly. The body is the lowest part of man's nature, the soul is the middle part, the spirit is the highest. See Paul's prayer, 1 Thes. v. 23. The Greek nouns are soma (body), psyche (soul), pneuma (spirit)—the whole man. In his relative position he is a distinct unit.

Now let us go back and begin e the beginning; lay a sure foundatic n and our superstructure will not [illegible]. In Gen. i. 1-25, we find a full description of the creation, concluding with, "And God saw that it was good." Now notice the 25th verse, "And God said, Let us make man in our own image, after our likeness." Verse 27, "So God created man in his own image." The Hebrew noun for image is tselem, and means "a resemblance." A visible resemblance; a tangible conception. Man was God's masterpiece, endowed with soul and spirit, and thus was (v. 26) to have dominion—radah (to rule over)—over all. Now let us examine Gen. ii. 7. "And the Lord God made man out of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul." In Gen. ii. 18 19, and Ps. viii., we find positive proof of man's pre-eminence over and superiority to other living creatures in the fact that he was created to have dominion over them. Such was his state before the fall, but since he became a sinner and has rebelled against God he no longer has this pre-eminence over them. See Eccl. iii. 19. In Gen. ii. 7 it is distinctly stated that, after God had created from the dust of the ground the corporeal part of Adam, the soul was added, which was, of course, not produced from the earth or elements, as the body was. He became a living being. Of no other creature was it said, "And (God) breathed into him the breath of life" (or lives, Heb.). Man, God's image or likeness, created from the dust of the ground, had breathed into him the breath of the Almighty, (soul, spirit, breath of immortality) which raised him to his high distinction and he became a living soul, i. e., he possessed a life not dependent upon his physical organism. The breath of God made Adam an immortal being. He became a moral and religious being; he was made capable of moral distinctions, of knowing right from wrong, and of knowing, loving and serving his Creator. He was raised above a life of instinct into intellectual life, placing him at the head of all creatures on earth. God imparted to Adam the vital principle, making complete his creation.

Let S. H. T. show a solitary instance in which it is said that God, in creating other animals, constituted them living creatures by breathing into them the breath of life. If he cannot, then I charge upon him a culpable equivocation in pretending to meet an issue of such vital importance as the immortality of the soul.

I will now proceed briefly to prove that both the ancient church and the early Christian church fully believed and taught the doctrine enunciated, and that the leading evangelical churches of today firmly hold to the precious doctrine. The following passages from the canonical Old Testament Scriptures clearly disclose that ancient church knew and believed that the man was created immortal; Gen. i. 26-28; ii. 7; Eccl. iii. 21; xii. 7; Haggai ii. 23; Zech. xii. 1. The latter passage fully harmonizes with Gen. ii. 7. In the case of Zerubbabel, Haggai ii. 22, the ancient Jews regarded the passage as teaching the immortality of the soul. See Isaiah xlii. 5. The translation of Enoch (Gen. v. 24) and Elijah (2 King ii. 11) prove conclusively that man continues to live after his removal from this world. By reading the Apocrypha, independent of the canonical Scriptures, we have undisputed testimony to man's uninterrupted immortality. Josephus, fully familiar with the national history of the Jews, in his De Bello Jud., lib. 3, chap. 8, sec. 5, says: "The immortal soul, which has its original from God, dwells in the body; now, if any one embezzles or evilly entreats that which is committed to him by man, he is regarded as wicked and perfidious .....can he hope to conceal himself from him that is thus injured?" The survivance of the soul is here so plainly taught, and the Jewish testimony uniform. Rabbis Simeon, Meir, Kimchi, Bechai, Higgaion, Saadia and Aben Ezra, all learned Jews, taught and ably defended the religion of their fathers against the cavils of Materialism and Annihilationism. If S. H. T. [illegible] to him many [illegible] from the Old Testament [illegible] Jewish testimony in relation to the immortality of the soul.

Christ himself announced the blessed doctrine of immortality. See Matt. x. 28; Luke xii. 4, 5. The Savior's argument is, Know therefore that ye (Jews) possess immortal souls, which come not under the power of men, but are subject to the power of God alone. Read Matt. xvii. 1-9; Luke viii. 54, 55; with 1 Kings xvii. 20-22. Take the parable of the rich man and Lazarus, Luke xvi. 19-31. By no rule of interpretation can the great truth of a conscious existence of the soul after death be argued out of this parable. Let S. H. T. attempt it if he can. Read Luke xxiii. 43. The thief on the cross believed in the immortality of the soul. To deny this is simply an objection—ab ignorantia. Read Luke xxvi. 37-39, and Matt. xiv. 26. Why did they fear? Their belief in the immortality of the soul associated itself with his sudden appearance. Read Acts vii. 59. This passage establishes beyond cavil the separate existence of the soul. I refer S. H. T. to Acts xxiii. 6-8. What was the error of the Sadducees? Read 2 Cor. v. 1-9. Here again it is clearly taught that the soul has a separate state. Read 2 Cor. xii. 2-4. Here again is positive evidence of the separability of spirit from mere body? Read Phil. i. 23-24. Obvious teaching here. It would be sheer insanity to deny immortality. Read Heb. xii. 22, 23; 1 Peter iii. 18-20. These passages teach the uninterrupted immortality of the redeemed and the wicked. I challenge S. H. T. to deny it. Polycarp, Justin Martyr, Athenagoras, Irenæus, Tatian, Tertullian, Minucius, Felix, Origen, Clement of Alexandria, Cyprian, Hilary, Lactantius, Jerome, Peter the Martyr, Didymus, Gregory, Augustine, all representative men in the church of Christ during the centuries in which they lived, agree in their beliefs in the immortality of the soul.

In conclusion, permit me to give S. H. T. the consensus of ecclesiastical opinion among the combined Evangelical churches of today upon this vital subject: "The bodies of men after death return to dust, and see corruption, but their souls, which neither die nor sleep, having an immortal subsistence, immediately return to the God who gave them. The souls of the righteous, being made perfect in holiness, are received into the highest heavens, where they behold the face of God in light and glory, waiting for the full redemption of their bodies, and the souls of the wicked are cast into hell, where they remain in torments and utter darkness, reserved to the judgment of the great day. Besides these two places for souls separated from their bodies, the Scripture acknowledgeth none."

One question to S. H. T. You delight in quoting Scripture, as seen in your article. I want to ask you by what law of interpretation you parade your quotations and then attach your own comment? For example, "Ezek. xviii. 4: 'The soul that sinneth it shall die.' Not live forever in torment."

S. T. H. isolates a strong text from its real meaning and adds, "Not live forever in torment." Will he kindly tell me whether the death spoken of in Ezek. xviii. 4 is corporeal death or spiritual death? Let him take his Bible and read, at the 21st verse, "But if the wicked will turn from all his sins that he hath committed, and keep all my statutes, and do that which is lawful and right, he shall surely live, he shall not die." These strong words, obvious as they must be to the reflecting mind, evince the futility of S. H. T.'s objections to immo rality, based on such a passage as he notes.

B. F. CAMPBELL.

Editor Sentinel:

I am hardly hope that you will devote more of your valuable space to this question, and yet in view of the unabated interest of this subject to every living being, and the importance of a correct understanding of it, I am bold to trespass once again on your kindness. Your correspondent [illegible] evidently a scholar and a man of letters, frankly agrees with Dr. Bixby and others that the Bible nowhere plainly states that man has an immortal never-dying soul or spirit. But Mr. Editor, don't you think his long argument showing that all churches and creeds teach it, that Jewish rabbis and ancient philosophers have taught it, etc., is a waste of valuable space? I frankly admit all this and more to, but the question at issue is not what mankind teaches, but what God has said in his Word concerning this matter. Mr. Campbell also gives many Bible references in which the word soul or spirit occurs. But in every case we must infer, or (as Dr. Bixby puts it) "take for granted" that such souls or spirits are immortal. But as a matter of fact, Mr. Editor, a careful study of the context and original text in every case proves conclusively that no such inference can reasonably be taken. Space however forbids a separate examination in this paper of the many references quoted. I will be pleased to notice them in some future number, if desired. The main point I believe has been conceded by all, namely, that the Bible does not plainly state that man has an immortal or never-dying soul or spirit. This being so an inquiring mind will naturally ask, What information then does it give concerning souls? And a careful search of God's Word has revealed some interesting facts upon this subject, which may shed some light upon the meaning of the word soul. We read that souls can touch things and from such contact become unclean. For example, "If a soul touch any unclean thing or carcase of unclean cattle he also shall be unclean." Lev. v. 2. Also that souls may eat blood, "Whatsoever soul it be that eateth any manner of blood, even that soul shall be cut off from his people." Lev. vii. 27. Also souls may be bought with money, for example, "If any priest buy any soul with money he shall eat of it (the soul so bought) and they that are born in his house shall eat of it." Lev. xxii. 11. The soul here referred to is an animal killed for sacrifice. Again we read, "And levy a tribute unto the Lord of the men of war, which went out to battle, one soul of five hundred both of the persons and of the beeves and of the asses and of the sheep" Num. xxxi. 28. By this we learn that not only men but beeves, asses and sheep have souls. We read that Christ's soul was in hell (hades or grave). "He seeing this before spake of the resurrection of Christ that his soul was not left in hell (hades or grave), neither did his flesh see corruption." Acts ii. 30.

Again, we learn that souls may be destroyed with the sword, "And he took Debir and all the cities thereof, and they smote them with the edge of the sword and utterly destroyed all the souls that were therein." Josh x. 32. We also read of souls that have breath, "And they smote all the souls that were therein, utterly destroying them. There was not any left to breathe." Josh. xi. 11. We also find mention of fat souls, for example, "The soul of the sluggard desireth and hath nothing, but the soul of the diligent shall be made fat." Prov. xiii. 4. Also that souls go into the grave or pit, "Yea his soul draweth near unto the grave and his life unto the destroyers. God will deliver his soul from going into the pit and his life shall see the light." Job xxxiii. 22-26. And finally even the fishes of the sea are called souls, for example, "And the second angel poured out his vial and every living soul died in the sea." Rev. xvi. 3.

Thus you see Mr. Editor, we read in the Bible of fat souls, hungry souls, thirsty souls, dead souls and living souls, of souls that eat and of other souls that are eaten, of souls that go down into the grave and come up out of the grave, of animal souls and fish souls, and of every living thing having or being a soul. But never once of an immortal or never-dying soul. In view of all this it must be evident to any unbiased mind that a soul is simply an organized being composed of flesh and [illegible] Adam, with life and no such soul of any kind whatever is said in the Bible to be immortal. On the contrary any such conceit of man or beast is for ever set at rest by a single plain declaration of God as follows, "In his time he will show who is the blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings and Lord of lords, who hath immortality." 1 Tim. vi. 16. Mr. Editor, this is the way the Bible takes "this subject for granted." Let no man therefore flatter himself that he is immortal, that somewhere within his body is hidden away a spark of divine essence that by virtue of its divine origin must necessarily live endlessly. On the contrary, "He is but a shadow that fadeth away. Like the grass that dies and withers like the green herb."

The word immortal occurs but once in the Bible and then it is applied to the living God as one of his almighty attributes, "Now unto the King eternal, immortal, the only wise God be honor and glory for ever and ever." 1 Tim. i. 17. The word immortality occurs five times and is applied to God as we have seen, but never to man as a present possession, but is held forth to man as something to seek after, for example, "To them who by patient continuance in well doing seek for glory, honor and immortality, God will render eternal life." Rom. ii. 7. It is also spoken of as something to be put on by man at the coming of the Lord, for example, "For this corruptible must put on incorruption and this mortal must put on immortality." 1 Cor. xv. 53. The word mortal however occurs frequently and is always applied to man. In view of these facts, Mr. Editor, there seems to be quite a wide difference between the teachings of Mr. Campbell, and the Word of God, for example the Bible says, "God only hath immortality." 1 Tim. vi. 16. Mr. Campbell teaches all mankind has immortality.

The Bible says, "Man must seek for immortality by patient continuance in well doing." Rom. ii. 7. Mr. Campbell teaches man was created immortal and can never die.

The Bible says, "God's people will put on immortality at the return of the Lord and the resurrection of the dead." 1 Cor. xv. 53. Mr. Campbell teaches that all men put it on at birth.

The Bible says, "Man dieth and returneth to his dust, in that very day his thoughts perish." Psa. cxlvi. 4. Mr. Campbell teaches that at death his thoughts become infinite and he then knows all things.

The Bible says, "The living know that they shall die, but the dead know not anything." Eccl. ix. 5. Mr. Campbell teaches, the dead know infinitely more than the living.

The Bible says, "The soul that sinneth it shall die." Ezek. xviii. 4. Mr. Campbell teaches the soul that sinneth cannot die because it is immortal, but that God will torment it throughout the countless years of eternity.

The Bible says, "The wages of sin is death." Rom. vi. 23. Mr. Campbell teaches, The wages of sin is eternal life in torment.

The Bible says that in death, "There is no remembrance of God." Psa. vi. 5. Mr. Campbell teaches that the righteous dead are received into the highest heaven, where they perceive his face continually.

The Bible says, "The dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence." Psa. cxv. 17. Mr. Campbell teaches that the righteous dead play on golden harps before the throne and praise his name continuously.

The Bible says, The Lord preserveth all them that love him, but all the wicked will he destroy." Psa. cxiv. 20. Mr. Campbell teaches, The Lord preserveth the wicked also in everlasting torment.

The Bible says, "The day that cometh shall burn them up and leave them neither root nor branch." Mal. ix. 1. Mr. Campbell teaches that the day that cometh will not burn them up, but that its terrible streams of fire will have the virtue of preserving them alive endlessly.

The Bible says, "The end of the wicked shall be cut off." Mr. Campbell teaches their lives are endless and therefore God himself cannot cut them off.

The Bible says, "They shall be as though they had not been." Oba. 16. Mr. Campbell teaches that after millions of cycles their existence will be none the less real, nor their torture one particle less acute, and all this in the face of thirty-two plain texts that say the wicked shall perish, thirty texts that the wicked will God destroy, forty texts that the wicked will be destroyed, eleven texts that the wicked will be devoured, twenty texts that the wicked will be consumed, fourteen texts that the wicked shall be burned up as thorns, as briars, as tares, as stubble, as chaff, fifty texts that the wicked will become extinct. In all two hundred and thirty times declared by the Word of God that the wicked perish without remedy, root and branch, cease to exist, and become as though they had not been, and yet there are those who will contend that man is immortal and cannot die, perish, be destroyed, consumed, burned up, become extinct, and as though they had not been. And this too while publicly forced to admit that there is not one single plain passage in the entire Bible to sustain the belief. Mr. Editor, I will not trespass much longer on your kindness, but as we have found beyond doubt that the doctrine of the immortality of the soul is not a biblical one I would like to briefly give an account of its origin, and when and how it became incorporated into the Christian church. This doctrine was first taught by the great heathen philosopher Plato, who flourished about 350 B. C., and copies of whose writings are still extant. He taught that man has a soul which is a particle of divine essence and therefore immortal. He held also that for the good there is an eternal abode of happiness or "Elysium," and for the worst of mankind a place of eternal suffering and pain with its streams of fire called "Tartarus." He also held there was a medium place which was called the "Acherusian Lake" into which all those too bad for Elysium, but not bad enough for Tartarus were cast, from which they came forth again after a refining process of fire. This foolish pagan fable was first introduced into Christian theology about the year 177 A. D. by one Clement Athenagoras. He was followed by Tatian in Mesopotamia and still later by the famous Tertullian, called the fierce African theologian, who advocated the same theory, and from these this pagan fable has spread throughout the known world, and has been incorporated into the creeds of all churches. A most remarkable circumstance when we consider that the Christian's Bible contains no such doctrine, but plainly and positively states the opposite. Much more might be added, but space forbids and I close, trusting that some at least who have become interested in the subject may continue the search of God's Word, and finally come to a full knowledge of the truth concerning this and kindred subjects.

The Restitution.

"The Restitution of all things Which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets."

VOLUME LII. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, APRIL 22, 1903 NUMBER 16.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

THERE being five Wednesdays this month our next issue will be May 6.

"IT is not well for a man to pray cream and live skim-milk."

TAKE a note of this everybody—Justifying faith is accompanied by [illegible]

LET our lives be a constant strife against the world and the inherent inclinations of our fleshly natures to err.

SLANDER is a vice which strikes a double blow, wounding both him who commits, and him against whom it is committed.

Moses, the Prophets, and Jesus all teach that the Godhead is one all, or power, and that this unity is absolute. SPIRIT emanates from his substance, and space is filled with this Spirit."

"THERE is such a mixture of folly and infirmity in the best and wisest of the human race, that we should be much more thankful for the good we meet with, than disappointed at the bad."

THERE is a dignity in the very disgrace of Israel. Though they are cast down; yet are they not utterly dejected. Christian men can never look on them without associations of solemn interest and awe.

"FORGIVENESS is one of the most refined and generous points of virtue that human nature can attain to. Cowards have done good and kind actions; but a coward never forgave—it is not in his nature."

Question.

"Please state what the gift of the Holy Spirit was, and oblige."

Ans. It was the ability to do what could not be done until energized by the Spirit. It was given to men already converted, and not for their own private advantage, but for that of others. They were made the recipients of the Spirit by the imposition of apostolic hands and prayer.

Passing Events in the Light of Prophecy.

Britain's army and navy estimates for 1903 have been issued, says the editor of Glad Tidings. For eight or nine years the expenditure has been steadily increasing, and within that period has been doubled. The enormous increase is strikingly shown thus: —For the year ending March 31, 1895 £17,900,000 for the army. For the navy £17,545,000; total £35,445,000.

For the year ending March 1904, £34,500,000 for the army. For the navy £34,457,060. Total £68,957,000.

Although the great struggle in South Africa is at an end, the government evidently does not think the time has come to turn their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks. It has been decided to establish a naval base on the Firth of Forth, within a few miles of the Scottish capital.

The Morning Post says all the signs of the times point to an increasing strain of competition between nation and nation, and to sudden outbursts of feeling, some times uncontrolable, which may quickly turn the rivalries of peace into conflicts of public policy leading to the use of force. The great Powers of the Continent, which count their trained soldiers by millions, are also building great navies.

The Scotsman says:—Something more effective than a Czar's Rescript will apparently be needed to convince these nations of the insanity of their competition, and of the necessity for a reduction of armaments.

The Bible says regarding One infinitely higher than the Czar or any of earth's potentates: "Come, behold the works of the Lord, what desolations he hath made in the earth. He maketh wars to cease unto the end of the earth; he breaketh the bow, and cutteth the spear in sunder; he burneth the chariot in the fire. Be still, and know that I am God; I will be exalted among the nations; I will be exalted in the earth." Psa. xlvi. 8-10.

The Bulgarian papers express great dissatisfaction with the Austro-Russian scheme of reforms for Macedonia. In Sophia public opinion has turned against Russia, who is denounced for sacrificing the Slav peoples of the near East in order to gain advantages elsewhere.

The Daily News says every wise counsellor would undoubtedly urge the Macedonian committee, the Bulgarian bands, and the oppressed tenantry to be patient and wait. Such advice is easily given. But will it be taken? The telegrams do not encourage us to hope. The bands are already engaged in active hostility with the Turkish troops, and they do not come off second best in the contests. If [illegible] while the measures of repression by Turkey are hurried forward, then in the end there will be little to reform except devastated fields.

The Hungarian Professor Vambery has published in the Nineteenth Century a review of the present state of the world from the point of view of the future of Great Britain. He deals with Britain in the Persian Gulf,—is convinced that Russia will do all in her power to gain a footing in Afghanistan, and holds that the Asiatic policy of France aims at preparing an attack on British India from the East. Then he points out that Germany has turned her attention to Asia Minor, where she has built railways which she is extending, and is pushing her trade. But Russia regards Asia Minor as one of her reserves on which Germany is poaching, and, therefore, sooner or later, there must be a conflict between Germany and Russia over Asia Minor. Altogether the international situation is becoming increasingly interesting to students of the prophetic Word which foretells a time of world-wide trouble as the prelude to the day when the nations will dwell in universal brotherhood."

Substitution. No. 7.

All honest students of the Word will admit that when a passage is construed so as to conflict with many plain declarations of the Spirit, it must be wrong.

It cannot be that all men are to live again, when God ages ago entered into judgment with vast numbers, and destroyed them for ever, and declares that they shall not rise; and that "man being in honor understandeth not is like the beasts that perish;" and are laid in the grave like sheep!

Honest students will admit that myriads are to be destroyed by the brightness of Christ's coming, 2 Thes. ii. 8-12, because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved,—and God will have sent them a strong delusion, that they should "believe a lie, that they might be condemned."

It is surprising that men and women have the temerity to say all men will live again after they have been judicially disposed of; after they have been CONDEMNED and DESTROYED!

The all-men will rise doctrine falls to pieces when we read that Jehovah's fury shall come up in his face, and he will plead with the army of Gog with pestilence and with blood, and rain an over-flowing rain, and great hail stones, fire and brimstone, so that the nations shall know [illegible] he is Jehovah; (Ezek. xxxviii. 22) and that the slain of the Lord shall be many, for by fire and by sword will he plead with all flesh—render his anger with fury, and his rebukes with flames of fire, Isa. lxvi. 16; and the carcasses of the slain will be consumed in an unquenchable fire, v. 24; this is the destruction of those who destroy the earth. Rev. xi. 18.

This takes place after God's servants, prophets, saints great and small have been rewarded, and the meek have been beautified with salvation; and we see from Psa. cxlix. 4-9 that it is they who bind kings and nobles and execute the judgment written,—all God's saints share this honor.

Will all their work have to be done over again? Will they all come up again? Or, is this their final judgment?

Would they not have been allowed to live if they were fit to live? Would they be better fit to live if raised? Is not the matter eternally disposed of, since we read that the vengeance here described, and the punishment inflicted, are the JUDGMENTS WRITTEN? See v. 9.

For a moment we invite attention to the words in 1 Cor. v. 13. Taking it for granted that the reader is familiar with the context, we quote, "them that are without, GOD JUDGETH." Here two parties are brought to notice,—those in the church of God, and those not in it. By reference to the passage it will be seen that a congregation had to decide matters of difference between brethren, and even not of right go before the unjust judges with their difficulties.

Have those who teach the relief of all, because of Christ's death, ever weighed the pause of the divine economy revealed in the last Scripture referred to? It says GOD JUDGES those that are not in the Body of Christ. Does it not prove that GOD JUDGES nations and individuals this life?

We have already pointed out numerous instances of this,—he judged the [illegible] for scoffing at his sanctuary, [illegible] and destruction [illegible] ing [illegible] what it had done, Isa. x. 12-6; he [illegible] the Roman Empire under the sixth seal, for its paganism, Rev. vi. 15-17, and he is judging the Turkish Empire, under the sixth vial, by trending down Jerusalem and the Holy Land. He judged Pharaoh by saying he had made the Nile. Ezek. xxix. 3, 4. He also judged Nebuchadnezzar for pride and cruelty to the poor. Dan. iv. 27-31. He destroyed those of Israel who believed not after bringing them out of Egypt.

Will they be brought to judgment the second time? Where is the evidence to this effect?

Sodom and Gomorrha and the cities of the plain are set forth as an example, suffering the vengeance of eternal fire. Jude 6. The fire has long since gone out, but the effect of it will never end—what men say to the contrary, notwithstanding.

Before us is an article under the caption of "The unconditional abolishment of death for all men." After saying that all men are under the sentence of death,—death having passed upon all men, etc., etc. It says, "for whom then, is death abolished?" Ans. "For the race upon whom death had passed,—for all who are under the power of death. Christ has redeemed us from the curse of the law.... The curse is death. This [illegible] accomplished for us while we were yet sinners, and not for the good." For when we were without strength, in due time Christ died for the ungodly. But God commendeth his love toward us in that while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us.....and this work was done for us while we were yet sinners; consequently must have been unconditional, or not dependent on any act of the sinner, therefore universal. To abolish death, means to repeal, or to make void the power of death; to give life to the dead. This we have shown is unconditional, and therefore universal. Whatever has been purchased unconditionally for our race, will be bestowed upon them in a like, unconditional manner. What did Christ purchase for us by his death, while we were yet sinners? He purchased life for us, not eternal life, but simply life."

Of course the above is not intentionally a perversion of the Scriptures. But certainly it is a gross perversion; we have not often seen it equaled. And we hope in God that we may be able to show the truth of God in the premises, and prevent others being caught in this snare.

Error.

1. The word for, is a number of times employed to mean, instead of; we have already disproved [illegible] several times, as those interested can see by back numbers of this series.

2. It says, "Death is abolished for the race,".....for all who are under the power of death." Practically, all the proof of this is made to rest upon the inference that for means instead of. Let us look at this calmly. God threatened man with death; then sentenced him to death. Presently he declared that he would by no means clear the guilty."

To say that death has been unconditionally abolished for all men, is TO CHARGE GOD with violating his own law, and breaking his word of assurance that he WOULD NOT clear the guilty.

The facts that God instituted means by which guilt can be removed,—and that no instance of its removal is recorded in all his book, where the means for removal was not used, is proof that God has not changed his mind in this respect; therefore the INFERENCE that death is abolished for all is NOT TRUE.

And now as to the words "abolished death." Our author writes as follows:—"Christ has abolished death, (the death of Adam's race,) and brought life (for all men) and immortality (for the righteous) to light through the gospel." Let us turn to that Scripture and see if these parentheses of our author are warranted by it.

It will be conceded by the reasonable, without further argument, that if the apostle was not writing about all men, it is absolutely wrong for our author to read the words "all men" into the passage.

In 1 Tim. i. 9, 10 the apostle informs us that God had saved him and called them with an holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace which was given to us before the olden times; but now is manifested through the appearance of our Savior Christ Jesus, who has rendered death powerless, and who has ILLUSTRATED LIFE AND INCORRUPTIBILITY through the glad tidings; the good news [illegible] the world, Matt. xxv. 19—the gospel of the kingdom, Matt. xxiv. 14—the power of God unto salvation; Rom. i. 16; the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ, Acts viii. 12.

We impugn no motives, but it is a great misrepresentation of the truth to say that this Scripture teaches mere life for one class, and immortal life for another class.

The apostle refers to but one class of people,—the sinners who had been called by God's grace; and saved (by hope, of course—see Rom. viii. 24). He then goes on to state that the purpose and grace spoken of, and proleptically given, ages before, "is now made manifest by the appearing of our Savior Jesus Christ, who hath rendered death powerless, and illustrated (given an example of) life and incorruptibility, by the gospel or glad tidings.

Only ONE life is here introduced for ONE class, the class Paul and Timothy were in. And if you want to know what life that is, it is our INCORRUPTIBLE LIFE!!!

Let our author think of it,—Jesus Christ who abolished death IN HIMSELF,—in his own case, was rid of it, by dying; and the power of endless life having possessed him, he illustrated the life—incorruptible—he could die no more. And in 1 John i. 2 it says, the life was manifested, and we have seen it, and bear witness, and show unto you that eternal life, which was with the Father, and was manifested unto US. This clinches the nail as nothing else could.

This demonstrates the untruth of our author's strongest argument.

But we cannot stop here. Our author makes another great mistake concerning the law of Moses. He has gotten it mixed up with the law of sin and death till he cannot tell one from other. Why did he do this, when the key to the subject hangs close by the door?

He quotes Gal. iii. 13, "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us, as if that was all there was to it.

Why did he not quote the next words;—"for it is written, cursed is every one that hangeth on a tree." Why did he not then look up the place where it is thus written? Was he afraid this would disturb his equilibrium or disarrange his theory? God knows whether he knew too little of this matter, or only wanted what seemed to suit him; we leave him in the hand of him who knows.

He should have known from the first verses of the chapter that the Galatians had been bewitched by some one, or more, to Judaize so that they had forsaken the gospel for the law, after having suffered many things on account of their faith.

Paul re-assures them that those only who are of faith will be blessed with faithful Abraham; and no one can be justified by the works of the law; but the just shall live by faith.

He then tells them straight out, that Christ had redeemed us from the curse of the law, viz. being made a curse for us; as it is written (in Deut. xxi. 22, 23, and not in Gen. iii. 16-19) "cursed is every one that hangeth on a tree;" What for? That the blessing of Abraham might come on the Gentiles through Jesus Christ.

But how had Jesus being made a curse by hanging on a tree redeemed them from the curse of the law? The law excluded Gentiles from the covenants of promise. And the 24th verse explains that the law had been given as a schoolmaster till Christ should come, to whom the promises were made; and we learn from Col. ii. 14 that that handwriting of ordinances was blotted out, and nailed to the cross of Christ; and in Eph. ii. 14 that same handwriting of ordinances is called the middle wall of partition (between Jews and Gentiles) and was broken down, so that those who hitherto had been aliens from the commonwealth of Israel; strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope whatever and without God (ver. 12), can now be reconciled to God in one body with the Jews.

As sure as words of God mean what they say when things are called by their proper names, so sure is it, that the curse redeemed from, was that of the law of Moses; it cursed all under it who were not of faith, and held them under the power of death, for the reason, that they COULD NOT KEEP IT, Jesus only kept it. Ver. 10. And not a jot or tittle of it failed until he fulfilled it,—and then he removed it entirely.

Now where is our author to find LIFE SIMPLY, for all the race? It cannot be found in the Scriptures he [illegible] The assumption is that he hunt upon the strongest foundation he thought he had.

It is a serious and cruel thing to misdirect a person in temporal affairs; but how much more so in spiritual?

A Statement and an Appeal.

The Plymouth congregation still owes a few hundred dollars on its Church building. The members are all poor people. They are hindered very much in carrying on the work that might be and that ought to be done, from the fact of having to devote their energies to raising money to pay off this debt. Numbers have been forced by circumstances to move away, and this lays the burden on fewer shoulders.

The brethren and sisters are making a great effort to get the money to lift this debt this year, and it is an object to them to raise as much as is possible by June. Many brethren and sisters have in time past met with this Church, and know of their zeal and earnestness. Many others have read accounts from time to time of meetings held at this place, and work done for the Lord. The hospitality of the Plymouth Church is well known to hundreds. The brethren and sisters always have and shall ever give their homes and the best they have to those who may chose to visit and sojourn with them.

It may be that some who have met with the Plymouth brethren, or others who know of their work, would like to contribute of their means to aid in clearing this house of debt, thus enabling the friends to do the work that now languishes. Should there be any such if they will send to Brother E. K. Barnhill, Plymouth, Ind., he will, as Secretary of the Board of Trustees, make proper acknowledgement, and convey the money to the hands of the Treasurer.

Our Helping Fund.

We whose names are given herewith, believing that it is our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending THE RESTITUTION to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our names for the purpose of aiding the managers of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund to be applied as the doners request, (or when left to the publisher to decide) only for those who themselves state their circumstances and need, or whose case is presented by some one known to be trustworthy.

A Word of Appreciation.

Some time ago I asked the brotherhood through THE RESTITUTION how many copies of the pamphlet "The Reasons of My Withdrawal from the Evangelical Association," would be wanted. Letters came from all parts of the country, some containing money stating the number of copies desired, so that a second edition of 1000 was printed. I wish to state that this edition is nearly exhausted, there being only about 150 left. Those wishing copies better send their orders early, as they will soon be gone. I desire, by this means, to thank the brethren for their encouraging words and financial help. Trusting that the seed will fall in good soil and produce fruit unto eternal life. 25 pages, at 5 cents per copy. A. H. Zilmer, Plymouth, Ind.

A Practical Doctrine.

"Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord." I Cor. xv. 58.

We thus have the great doctrine of the resurrection in application to Christians set before us, by the unerring inspiration of one who wrote and spake as he was "moved by the Holy Ghost." We say Christians, since the reference is to them. What are we to do with this doctrine? The proper answer is that we are to believe it with all our might, mind and strength, and to believe it just as the Bible states it to us. We are to follow Paul's thoughts (see this entire chapter upon the resurrection, 1 Cor. xv. Editor.) or rather God's thoughts through his pen. We are to believe that when Christ comes, the "corruptible" will "put on incorruption," and the "mortal" will "put on immortality." We are to believe that the bodies of dead saints will then pass from "corruption" to "incorruption," from "dishonor" to "glory," from "weakness" to "power," and from being "natural" bodies to being "spiritual" bodies. We are to believe that these bodies will be like unto the "glorious body" of Christ. Phil. iii. 21, 22. We are to believe that Christians then living will, without death, undergo a similar change. We are to believe that when these things shall become facts, then will "be brought to pass the saying that is written. Death is swallowed up by victory." We are to believe that which in anticipation led Paul to exclaim: "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?"

And if asked for the reason of such a faith, it will be enough to reply that God has so taught us in his Word. "Let God," on this subject as on every other, "be true, but every man a liar" who contradicts him. God's Word has brought to us the resurrection hope: and what we are to do, whether meditating upon our sainted kindred dead and gone, or anticipating our own exit from the scenes of time, is to receive the comfort and cherish the hope, as we pursue life's track to the land of silence. Let us by faith see the light that shines across and beyond that land. God himself will in due season make real all that his Word affirms. Whatever mysteries may now overhang the resurrection of the dead, they will all be cleared up when Jesus Christ comes in his glory, and makes true what the great apostle to the Gentiles says on this subject.

Oh! if Christians would think of what God has revealed for their thinking, and so think as to give it the power of a present reality, however distant it may be in the future, what a change would be wrought in their experience! They would hardly recognize themselves as the same being. The fear of death would be gone, and the most glorious hope that ever animated any bosom would take its place. How much we loose by self-imposed ignorance and self-imposed stupidity! How much we lose by so looking at the things visible and temporal that we fail to see, as we might and should, the things invisible and eternal! How much we lose by giving such an ascendency to mere sense that is really almost dead! How much we lose by speculating where we ought to believe! Strange is it that the phantom of an hour should exclude from thought that vast and glorious eternity to which heaven so kindly solicits our eye. What a delusion for a soul to perpetrate against itself! Break their snare, reader, and "set your affection on things above, not on things on the earth."—Samuel T. Spear, D. D.

It is easy to sing, while at a good meeting, "There's sunshine in my heart today," but at home it is quite another thing. If we are in harmony with God, and our hearts are full of his love, we can carry the sunshine with us wherever we go; and of all places we should have the sunshine in our own homes. We must have a faith that "works by love" if we would be ready to meet Jesus in peace when he comes. He said, "By this, shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one for another."—E. B. Scott, in Our Hope.

The Burial of Moses.

By Nebo's lonely mountain,
On this side Jord'n's wave,
In a valley in the land of Moab,
There lies a lonely grave;
And no man knows that sepulchre,
And no man saw it e'er,
For the angels of God upturned the sod,
And laid the dead man there.

That was the grandest funeral
That ever passed on earth;
But no man heard the trampling,
Or saw the train go forth—
Noiselessly as the daylight
Comes back when night is done,
And the crimson streak on ocean's cheek
Grows into the great sun.

Oh, the spring-time
... verdure weaves
... on all the hills
... and leaves,
So silently down from the mountain crown
The great procession swept.

Perchance the bald, old eagle,
On gray Beth-Peor's height,
Out of his lofty eyry
Looked on the wondrous sight.
Perchance the lion stalking,
Still shuns that hallowed spot,
For beast and bird have seen and heard
That which man knoweth not.

But when the warrior dieth,
His comrades in the war,
With arms reversed and muffled drum,
Follow his funeral car;
They show the banners taken,
They tell his battles won,
And after him lead his masterless steed,
While peals the minute gun.

Amid the noblest of the land
We lay the sage to rest,
And give the hero up to honor'd place,
With costly marble dressed,
In the great minster transept
Where lights like glories fall,
And the organ rings, and the choir sings,
Along the emblazoned wall.

This was the truest warrior
That ever buckled sword;
This the most gifted poet
That ever breathed a word;
And never earth's philosopher
Traced with his golden pen,
On the deathless page, truths half so sage
As he wrote down for men.

And had he not high honor—
The hillside for a pall,
To lie in state while angels wait
With stars for tapers tall,
And the dark rock-pines, like tossing plumes,
Over his bier to wave,
And God's own hand, in that lonely land,
To lay him in the grave?

In that strange grave, without a name,
Whence his uncoffined clay
Shall break again, oh, wondrous thought!
Before the Judgment day,
And stand with glory wrapt around
On the hills he never trod,
And speak of the strife that won our life,
With the Incarnate Son of God.

O lonely grave, in Moab's land!
O dark Beth-Peor's hill!
Speak to these curious hearts of ours,
And teach them to be still.
God hath His mysteries of grave,
Ways that we cannot tell:
He hides them deep, like the hidden sleep
Of him he loved so well.

Notes By the Way.

My last notes related to my visit at Niagara Falls, N. Y. Having bid farewell to our Sisters Evangeline and Elizabeth Lent, I took the New York Central R. R. for New York City, a distance of five hundred miles, and arrived there at 8:45 P. M. My brother Samuel met me at the Grand Central depot. We then took the ferry boat across North River, to Jersey City, N. J., where my brother lives, and I remained with him during my stay in New York.

On Friday night a social meeting was announced to be held at the residence of William Donaldson and wife, in the city of Brooklyn. We then took [illegible] across North River to New York City, and then crossed the East River on the famous Suspension bridge, which connects New York with Brooklyn. We then met with quite a number of the Brooklyn congregation, and was cordially received by them.

A desire being expressed by many to learn the status of the household of faith scattered abroad, the evening was spent in listening to a running account of my work among the citizens of the Commonwealth of Israel scattered abroad both in the United States and Canada. And praise the Lord, my heart warms up with enthusiasm and love, when I recall the incidents which occurred, and the loving congratulations, and the sweet counsel I have had with these précious saints of God. There is a fellowship and a kinship existing among the believers of the grand old gospel of the kingdom, which cannot possibly exist among those who are strangers to the covenants of promise, and aliens to the Commonwealth of Israel. We realize that we have got something better than fiction and fables, therefore we can rejoice.

On invitation of Bro. Alex. Donaldson, I visited one of the largest Department stores in New York, where Bro. Donaldson holds the position of a superintendent. The first point myself and brother Samuel visited was the restaurant, located, I think, on the ninth floor of the building, where on invitation of Bro. Donaldson, we took dinner. The weather was wet, consequently the attendance was not as large as usual, nevertheless three thousand people took dinner there that day. One can imagine that a large amount of cooking and kitchen work has to be done to feed three thousand people. After dinner Bro. Donaldson took us into the kitchen, and introduced us to the man in charge, who showed us the system of cooking, the cooking ranges, the kettles, etc., where over thirty men cooks were employed. We went into the immense refrigerators where the meat is preserved, and then into the bakery, where bread, biscuits, cakes, pies, etc., are baked.

The dish washing department was quite interesting. The dishes are put on edge in large wire baskets, and lowered into a tank of boiling soap suds, and boiled there for a few moments, and then put into another tank of clear water boiling fiercely. They were then put into a drier, and dried immediately.

One hundred and twenty telephones were used in the building alone to give directions and orders in the various departments of the building. In another department they have glass cutting shops, where cut glass ware is prepared.

This store employs 4,200 hands. The daily expense of the store is $10,000.

I was introduced to the fire chief who showed me the system of extinguishing fires. He has the employees drilled as firemen.

I visited nearly every department in the store, but space would forbid a description of them.

One article which specially attracted my attention was the Gebhard Astronomical clock. I heard Mr. Gebhard explain the clock, which was about as follows: "The clock is encased in a massive oak case, and stands ten feet high, ten feet wide, and three feet deep. It weighs six thousand pounds. It consists of 18,000 parts, and displays twenty-six separate and distinct mechanical and astronomical movements, and all are propelled by one weight. The movements are so constructed that the hands and indicators all move forward at once at the end of every half minute, with the exception of the striking attachment. The clock shows four different kinds of time systems. Meantime, solar time, star (or sidereal) time, and decimal time.

In the center of the clock are ten dials, showing comparatively the time in ten of the principal cities of the world.

On the right hand of the clock proper, is a large globe which represents the earth revolving on its own axis in twenty-four hours from west to east. It has a hand which shows you the exact time at any point on earth, and the correct position of the earth to the sun. It has also an automatic calendar, showing at all times the day, date, month and year, changing automatically at the proper moment, indicating also the leap year changes. It shows also the chronological cycles. It keeps track also of the movable holidays, like Easter, etc. It also shows at all times when the sun rises and sets, and the length of the days. It has a moon on the clock, it has a light and a dark side, and grows light or dark according as the moon increases or diminishes. Opposite the moon is a barometer which indicates the weather. It represents also the planet system and its movements.

The striking apparatus is interesting. In announcing the first quarter of the hour, a child appears and strikes the anvil one time. On the half hour a youth appears, and strikes twice on a bell. On the third quarter a man appears and strikes the bell three times. At the complete hour old age appears and strikes the bell four times. Then appears another figure holding an hour glass and reverses the same for a new hour. Then a figure representing death, strikes the hour of the day. At twelve o'clock, twelve figures representing twelve apostles appear and bow in reverence to Jesus, except Judas, who fails to show respect, and at this time a cock crows three times.

At the end of each year, a bugler appears and announces the new year. Then the apostles take their place in a music box and play a sacred hymn.

Is it not true that knowledge is increasing?

On Sunday morning I preached to the Brooklyn church. This church is the continuation of the old Brooklyn church, to which Dr. John Thomas used to preach. After preaching, the communion was served in memory of Jesus.

In the afternoon the congregation met again in the parlors of Wm. Donaldson, when I again addressed them, and after which we enjoyed a pleasant social visit.

On Friday night I again preached in their hall. The hall was filled, members coming from Hoboken, and other parts. Members said it seemed like old times to hear the same things preached which Dr. John Thomas used to preach in their hearing.

Bro. Wm. Rennie spent much time in showing me points of interest in New York. He showed me the business done on Broadway, and entered the Stock Exchange, and Wall Street, which governs the financial world. Visited the United States Treasury, and the Government Assay, where the crude gold and silver is received and refined, and made up in gold and silver bricks. We witnessed the process of refining. The guide placed a gold brick in my hand weighing twenty pounds, and worthy $5,000.

On the outside of the Treasury building is a statue of Washington, erected on the spot where he first took the oath as President of the United States. We visited Bowling Green, Castle Garden, etc., and then took the boat for Coney Island, and stood on the beach of the old Atlantic Ocean, as the tide was coming in. It was grand to again hear the roar of the old ocean, and see those grand waves bent in fury upon the beach.

Bro. Rennie then took me to see the Grant monument, a massive structure built upon the banks of the beautiful Hudson River. The scenery up and down that grand river, is simply enchanting. We entered the structure and viewed the resting place of that renowned General and his wife.

I next went to Elizabeth, N. J., and visited our grand old Bro. John O. Woodruff, and Bro. Moore and wife, his son-in-law and daughter. My brother Samuel came to Elizabeth in the evening, and we stayed all night. You may be assured we had a pleasant visit.

My brother then took me on a drive to see the rich part of New York. I saw the residences of those great millionaires of New York. Also spent an enjoyable time in the Art Institute in Central Park. It would take more than the space of a whole paper to relate things of interest to be seen there.

In the Park I saw the great Egyptian Obelisk brought by Vanderbilt from Egypt. No doubt but that the eyes of Moses had often rested upon this ancient monument.

On Sunday morning I again preached to the Brooklyn church. In the afternoon, brother Samuel, myself, and a number of other members went to Newark, New Jersey, and I addressed the church in that city. Here I again had the pleasure of meeting again our venerable brother John O. Woodruff.

Myself and others then spent the evening with a member named Brown, in Jersey City.

In the morning my brother then escorted me to B. and O. R. R., when I started on my trip for Baltimore, Maryland.

In my next paper I will start my report from Baltimore, and give an account of an interesting experience of my work in old Virginia.

The Lord is with me and the work goes forth grandly. Praise ye the Lord. "Above all things have charity, which is the bond of perfectness."

"Comfort of the Scriptures."

The last time Jesus broke bread with his disciples he said, "With desire I have desired to eat this passover with you before I suffer." "For I say unto you, I will not any more eat thereof until it be fulfilled in the kingdom of God." Are we filled with that same strong desire to be shut in from the world around the table of the Lord? All through the week amid pleasures and trials, does our heart still long for the sacred hour of prayer where we can be with Jesus to worship our God in spirit and in truth? What a privilege to carry everything to God in prayer. Jesus told his disciples it was expedient that he should go away but he would send them a comforter, the Spirit of Truth. Instead of the personal presence of Jesus, there was to be the power of the Divine Spirit accompanying each of them wherever they went. But brethren, although we do not have this comforter, we do have the comfort of his Word, which is spirit and life unto us.

In whatever trouble, trial or perplexity we find ourselves, there is always a comforting message if we will but look for it. Hear Jesus, "Come unto me all ye that are weary and heavy laden, and I will give you rest, for my yoke is easy and my burden light." What a pleasing invitation and surely what a comfort it is that we can rest our burdens upon Jesus. "Ask and it shall be given you, seek and ye shall find, knock and it shall be opened unto you." For every one that asketh, receiveth, and he that seeketh, findeth, and to him that knocketh, it shall be opened." Have you ever been talking and had things said to hurt your feeling in regard to your Christian life, or your Christian hope? And did you think of the passage of Scripture in Matt., "Blessed are ye when men shall revile you and persecute you and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely for my sake. Rejoice and be exceeding glad, for great is your reward in heaven." And again "Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there will I be in the midst and that to bless. Let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering for he is faithful that promised." God hath said, "I will walk in them and walk in them and will be their God and they shall be his people." Truly our fellowship is with the Father and with his Son, Jesus Christ. "Rejoice inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings; that when his glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad also with exceeding joy." But the greatest comfort, the highest hope is, "Behold I come quickly and my reward is with me to give every man according as his work shall be. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout with the voice of the archangel and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first. Then we, which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air and so shall we ever be with the Lord." "Wherefore comfort one another with these words." God's book is full of these same kind messages, and if we are full of the Spirit and have studied the Word diligently, we will be able to remember the messages of love and comfort so that when our troubles and trials come upon us, although we will not be able to search for them in the Bible, they will be stored up in our minds and we will think of them in the most fitting time. Now our Lord Jesus Christ himself and God even our Father, which had loved us, and hath given us everlasting consolation and good hope through favor, comfort your hearts and stablish you in every good work.

Editor Restitution:

We enjoyed a visit recently from Brother W. H. Wilson, of Chicago, by which I trust all were benefitted. The circumstances were not as favorable as they might have been on account of the mud. It was rather unpleasant, particularly for those who are located quite a distance from Corinth though the attendance was quite as large as could be expected under the circumstances.

I would further state that we do not neglect the assembling of ourselves together. We meet on the first day of the week to break bread, and also for other religious services, and we think our meetings are quite enjoyable. Jesus has left us an encouraging promise. He said, "Where two or three are assembled in my name, I am in their midst."

Dear brethren, do not neglect this important duty; also do not neglect to watch and pray. Said Jesus, our dear Savior, "Watch and pray always that you may be accounted worthy to escape those things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of Man." Read Luke xxi. 25 to the end and conduct yourselves accordingly.

May God give us grace sufficient for our day, is my prayer. Grace be with thee.

The Bereans Column.

[Under this heading the society of "Bereans" of Illinois, will supply the copy, and endeavor to fill the space once a month.]

Dear Bereans:

When studying the precious promises our Savior has given us, the one found in Matt. xi. 28 should above all the rest carry comfort and conviction with it. "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Is not that sufficient proof of his interest in us? The trials and cares of our daily lives some times seem too heavy for our bearance, but how easy the yoke and light the burden in comparison to the ones borne by Christ when he paid the debt pronounced upon us in the garden of Eden. Dear Bereans, let us strive more earnestly to become like our perfect Pattern, and lead others to the sweet rest and peace, which comes to all who will lay their burdens at the feet of Jesus.

From your sister in the one hope.

[redacted]abeth Eaton.

Dear Bereans:

"Pray without ceasing, in everything give thanks, for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you." That this might sink deep into the heart of every Berean, as the Psalmist says, "The Lord is nigh unto all them that call upon him." What a consolation in time of trouble; what a joy in time of peace. Let us therefore come boldly to the throne of grace that we may obtain grace to help in time of need, as we see our Savior did on every occasion, and if it was necessary for him to go to the Lord for strength, how much more should we feel the need of strength from on high. In Psalms we find so much encouragement to put our trust in him, and he will direct our pathway. Also we find in Matt. xxi. 22, "All things whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive." "Watch ye therefore and pray always that ye may be counted worthy to escape all things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of Man, when he shall come to reward the worthy ones. But not as the hypocrits, for they love to pray standing in the synagogues and the corners of the streets. Rather thou enter into thy closets, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father in secret, and thy Father which is in secret shall reward thee openly." As he has promised to every one that seeks ye shall find, knock and it shall be opened unto you. We may rely upon his Word, for he is faithful that promised.

Your sister in the one hope.

Viola Eaton.

Dear Bereans:

It is now more than three months since we left Chicago and moved to Greene, N. Y., where we are living on a farm. I miss the Berean meetings very much and have met no Bereans here yet. In Matthew xix. 13, Jesus had a little child brought to him, and he put his hand on him and blessed him. His disciples rebuked him, but Jesus said, "Suffer the little children to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

Lynn Olmstead.

Dear Bereans:

Are we building on the only safe foundation? "Christ the solid rock." The Rock within whose shadows we may find rest, our safe abiding place. He will shield and protect us when the storms of life o'er take us, our shelter in life, in death and in the great hereafter. In him we find redemption, and through him we gain life and immortality.

Your sister [illegible]e of eternal life.

Alta Rogers.

Dear Bereans:

Let us train our hearts to faithfulness, though the tasks set for us may be hard, but we have the blessed hope that we shall see him face to face. "Thine eyes shall see the King in his beauty," has been the sweet endearing hope of many a way-worn traveler as the years of care and toil and travail sped on. And dear Bereans, let us cherish that blessed hope by watching and waiting for him.

Your sister in the blessed hope.

Myrtle Rogers.

Dear Bereans:

It seems to me a long while since I have had the pleasure of being with you, except in spirit. I never before realized so fully the meaning of the word "isolated." It means not merely that one is separated from brethren and friends; it means that he is involved in a struggle which he must carry on alone and unaided, except by him who is always ready to help his children. It means that there is lacking that fellowship with those of the one faith and hope, which gives enthusiasm and sustains courage. One is met on every hand by scoffers and pleasure seekers, and carelessness is apt to result. But still one need not lose courage. With his Bible before him to give him knowledge and the Savior beside him to give him strength, he may successfully meet these difficulties and gain new strength in overcoming them.

Your brother in hope.

CHRIST'S DEATH AND RESURRECTION.

When Christ was being tried before Pilate, the Jews decided that he should be crucified. They scourged him and stripped him of his clothing and then delivered him to be crucified. Jesus was crucified at a place called Golgotha. They placed him on the cross and drove nails through his hands and feet. Over his head was written, "This is Jesus the King of the Jews." Before he died he said, that in three days he would rise again. After he died some friends took him down from the cross and got permission to bury him. Three days after this, in the early morning, Mary Magdalene and the other Mary came to see the sepulchre. And there was a great earthquake and the women saw the angel of the Lord sitting on the stone he rolled away. The angel said to the women, "Fear not ye, for I know that ye seek Jesus which was crucified." Jesus had risen and was on his way to Galilee.

A Report.

To the brethren and sisters in Christ I will make a short report of our Sunday school and Church at Antioch, Ill. We meet every Sunday, and have preaching every four weeks. We have elected new officers for our school as follows: Jos. Williams Supt., W. D. Tilton Sec., Louise McRoberts Assistant Sec., John Porter Teacher Bible Class, Mrs. Chas. Williams Jr. Class Teacher, Grace Williams Organist, and Irvin McRoberts Chorister.

We had a short call from Brother L. E. Conner, as he was on a business trip. He was a welcome caller.

Dear brothers and sisters, may we all live so as we can all meet in the morning of the resurrection, is the prayer of your Brother in Christ.

Obituary.

Marion Lloyd Walker, eldest son of Sister Amy Walker, died at the home in Union Township, Marshall County, Ind., April 10, 1903, aged 14 years, 9 months, and 11 days, of pneumonia. His father died a few years since, and he being the oldest of the five children, and a bright, manly boy, he was naturally the one on whom his mother relied for help. The case is a very sad one, and our hearts go out in sympathy to Sister Walker in this new sorrow.

The funeral service was conducted by Bro. F. L. Austin, on April 13, at the home, after which he was brought to this city, and laid beside his father in Oak Hill Cemetery.

Died near Howe, Neb., on April 8th, 1903, Brother Lott Clover. He was born Jan. 2, 1823, in Indiana. Moved to Nebraska in 1865, and then to Kansas, where lived for a number of years, after which he returned to Nebraska.

I had been acquainted with Brother Clover for a number of years. Last June I was called upon to attend the funeral of his wife, and upon that occasion he requested me to deliver a similar discourse at his funeral. So last Thursday I performed that sad duty as best I could.

He died quite suddenly, without much suffering, was in his usual state of health in the evening and died the next morning.

May the reign of death soon end.

THE GOOD SHEPHERD.

John x. In this chapter Jesus uses the parable of the sheep and shepherd. The people could understand this, for in that country the shepherds led the sheep to the hills for pasture and at night brought them down to the sheepfold for protection; the shepherd went before the sheep and called them, and they followed him, they learned to know the voice of their shepherd and love him, and the shepherd loves his sheep. Away on the hills, day after day, alone with the sheep, he would learn each face, and know every one. Any one with love for the creatures that God has given us can appreciate this parable fully. Here each flock is kept within its enclosure, but there hundreds of flocks passing near each other can be kept separate by knowing their master's voice. O, what a grand comparison for all that love the voice of the great shepherd. We can be kept from harm, cannot be lost, if we listen for his voice, for his voice is calling today, just as true and tender as it was in Judea. My sheep know my voice, but a stranger they will not follow. The good shepherd giveth his life for his sheep; we know our Shepherd gave his life for us, he died that we might live. In the 16th verse he says, "Other sheep have I which are not of this fold," but he will gather all in one flock. Ezek. xxxiv., "For thus saith the Lord God, Behold I, even I, will both search my sheep and seek them out, and will deliver them out of all places where they have been scattered, and will bring them out from the people, and gather them from the countries, and will bring them to their own land, and there shall be one shepherd and one fold, no more scattered sheep, no more unfaithful shepherds, but one shepherd and one fold. The shepherd and sheep are mentioned many times in the Bible, because it was a familiar scene, and easy for the people to understand. A faithful shepherd would risk his life to protect his sheep, or to protect a lost one.

Late at night I saw the Shepherd
Toiling slow along the hill,
Through the flock below were gathered
In the fold so warm and still.

Just one tender lamb was missing,
When he called them all by name,
While the others heard and followed,
This one only never came.

Oft his voice rang through the darkness
Of that long, long night of pain;
Oft he vainly paused to listen
For an answering tone again.

But at last the shepherd found it,
Found it ere in sleep it died;
Took it in his loving bosom,
And his soul was satisfied.

The Lord knoweth those that are his own; if we listen to the voice of the world the Shepherd's voice grows fainter and fainter until it is not heard, and we are like sheep, scattered and lost. In his Word, his voice is calling and if we listen for the voice of our Shepherd, we will keep near him, we will not need to be sought for and be brought back. O keep near the good Shepherd, and he will lend us to pleasant pastures and beside still waters, for there shall be one shepherd and one fold.

NOTICE.

To the Bereans especially, or to any of the brethren.

It is the desire of many that Bro. S. J. Lindsay conduct a Bible School for at least ten days prior to the beginning of the next annual Conference to be held at Oregon, Ill., for the purpose of Bible drills or systematic Bible instruction. We all need such Not and instruction, and this letter is to all, and especially to those who may be missed by circular letter.

The plan is for those who take the work to take up lodging in the Conference hall, and do their own cooking and furnishing, thus making their stay as inexpensive as they please.

Oregon is a very pleasant city, located on the banks of Rock River, and an ideal place in leisure hours for an outing.

No tuition will be charged, as Bro. Lindsay has offered his services free for this time. Let us know in good season if you will come. For further particulars address the undersigned, Chairman Evangelist Committee, Illinois State Conference, at Lanark, Ill.

Your Brother in hope.

Popular Lectures by M. Joblin.

Brethren and Sisters, Have you loved ones who think sincerity will save them? Have you friends who think they worship acceptably while ignorant of God's promises? Have you acquaintances with false hopes of heaven, or who believe themselves immortal by nature, or who think their sins are forgiven, although they are ignorant of the Law of Pardon, or who have no use for a God who consigns sinners to Eternal Torment, and are ignorant of Jehovah's beneficent purpose to fill the earth with his glory and bestow Eternal Life upon believers of the Gospel, so they can enjoy it for ever? If so, send for Popular Lectures by Bro. Joblin, entitled:—"The Kingdom of God;" "Old Mother Earth to Be Born Again;" "Strangers from the Covenants of Promise;" "Vain Worship;" "No Immortality Out of Christ;" "Hope Begotten by the Resurrection of Christ;" "God's Love and Solicitude for Mankind;" and "What Shall We Do to be Saved?"

Faithful Service.

Not to be always waiting
Since other work to do,
But cheerfully to toil—the task
Which Christ has set for you:
And to bear the little crosses
Of humble, daily life,
With that same dauntless courage
You'd need for nobler strife:
And to share the yoke with Jesus
Wherever he may lead—
Whether in pleasant pastures
His tender flocks to feed;
Or whether upon the mountains
His blood-stains mark your way,
Only to follow him meekly,
And to follow all the day.
So, soul, you will be the winner,
When this day's work is done,
And better fitted for labor
When tomorrow gets the sun.

What Is Dying?

"I am standing upon the seashore. A ship at my side spreads her white sails to the morning breeze, and starts for the blue ocean. She is an object of beauty and strength, and I stand and watch her until at length, she hangs like a speck of white cloud just where the sea and sky come down to meet and mingle with each other. Then some one at my side says, 'There! She's gone!' Gone where? Gone from my sight—that is all. She is just as large in mast and hull and spar as she was when she left my side, and just as able to bear her load of living freight to the place of her destination. Her diminished size is in me, and not in her. And just at that moment when some one of my side says, 'There! She's gone!' there are other eyes that are watching her coming; and other voices ready to take up the glad shout, 'There she comes!' And that is dying."—Luther F. Beecher.

The above is taken from a Sunday School Teachers' Journal and is found in connection with the Easter lesson. It is a good thing to contrast some of these sayings with plain Bible truth as Bro. Moyer did that of the dying statement of Paul with that of Mr. Moody. The question for our readers to do is to decide which is truth and then act accordingly. Paul in this chap. 1Cor. xv. proves that Christ arose from the dead and therefore those who are his at his coming. Further he states that if Christ is not risen then they who sleep in Christ are perished, a very strong statement. Is it not in favor of extinction of life? The trouble with those who believe that "dying" is a flying away, is that they do not study the first lesson of the creation of Adam. He was made of the dust of the ground and God breathed into his nostrils or face the breath of life and man became a living soul. The mere fact that man received the breath of life did not make him immortal, but a living soul or person.

After Adam's disobedience God said, "Dust thou (Adam) art and unto dust shalt thou (Adam) return." Whatever God calls man in the second chapter of Genesis he calls him in the third. Adam is his name and he was formed or made of the dust of the ground. Dying in this connection does not mean a flying away, but a returning to the original elements. Did Paul mean this in our lesson? We shall see. The first man (Adam) is of the earth, earthy. The second man (Christ) is the Lord from heaven. In this the apostle is contrasting two men and their natures. One had been consigned to earth, the other had been raised from the dead to die no more. Now as is the earthy, such are they also that are earthy. And as is the heavenly, such are they also that are heavenly. Here he is contrasting those who belong to each of the Adams. The first man Adam was made a living soul the last Adam (Christ), a quickening spirit. Macknight says a vivifying spirit. One who could give life to those who believe in him. Now I submit this as a very plain statement. The first Adam cannot give more than he received, viz: life from the atmosphere, through generation. The second Adam can give eternal life, as he is a life-giving spirit. "Because I live, ye shall live also" is a grand truth. He alone can regenerate or give to his followers a resurrection life. Resurrection as we understand it, means to stand or stand again. In this life we are continually falling. Every motion in walking is a falling. If we overcome this falling, we partially stand or recover ourselves. Now our Christian walk is not so much unlike our natural walk. But in that better life we shall stand. We shall work and not weary, run and not faint. Our natures will then be perfect. Christ says, "I am the resurrection and the life. He that believeth in me though he were dead yet shall he live. Whosoever liveth (when I come to raise the dead) and believeth in me shall never die." This is the mystery that Paul declared to the church at Corinth. We shall not all die, but we shall all be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump.

Again, this same apostle says, "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord." Not a word in all these Scriptures that we shall receive life in any other way than through Christ at his coming, no immortal part to fly away, and remain conscious between death and the resurrection. We find strong expressions in the Scripture such as these: "The dead know not any thing." Man's thoughts perish at death. There is no knowledge in the grave. If Christ is not risen, they that sleep in Christ are perished. Wesley in his notes on this Scripture says, "Have lost their life and [illegible]." The [illegible] as dry branches to be gathered up and burned up. Tares which the harvesters will gather up and burn. Others who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of God and the glory of his power. They shall go away into age lasting punishment.

It is very popular to believe that at death we go immediately to our reward. Yet the truth lies in what God has said, "Ye shall surely die." And dying means an extinction of this life. A sleeping until Jesus shall come to awaken us. Lazarus said nothing of being conscious during the four days which he lay in the grave. Jesus said to Mary, "I have not yet ascended to my God and your God." Not a word about consciousness during death. Not one of all the millions who have fallen by the hand of death have communicated with the living. The tomb is as silent as death. Not an echo comes back. But the prophet expresses the truth when he says, "His sons come to honor and he knoweth it not; and they are brought low, and he perceiveth it not of them." No dear readers, you cannot believe in the Christ of the Bible and also believe the [illegible]'s death of [illegible]. Let us believe the truth as God expressed it, that the seed of the woman should bruise the serpent's head. If you want life everlasting take God at his Word, and believe that there is life only through Christ.

Your brother seeking for glory honor and eternal life.

Table Talk.

EASTER MORNING.

The brightest day in the Christian calendar is the day of Christ's resurrection. Other days may have been bright, and filled with bright prospects, but the day the Son of God broke the seal of the grave and came forth, helps more to make the Christians rejoice than all others. Till then death and the grave were the mighty conquerors of earth.

Millions had fallen at the hand of death and had been received into the silent, gloomy and hopeless halls of the grave. No hope appeared beyond. Philosophy would not look beyond the vail of death. Science could not invent an escape. The race seemed doomed. Only the divine Word gave any light, and even that was doubted by the most.

But praise the Lord! Jesus overcame death, and conquering the grave, came forth to give life to all the race. How changed the scene. Before all was dark, no light, no hope. Now the seal is broken, and light breaks in and hope is born. Jesus said, "Because I live, ye shall live also." Glorious assurance! Ye shall live because I live.

The voice that could hush the winds and calm the troubled waters, the same voice that could open one grave and call forth its occupant will speak again ere long with mighty power. The graves will be opened and the prisoners who have believed the gospel of the kingdom set free. Your loved one of mine, perhaps you and I. Not because we merit it, "Because I live," said Jesus.

By faith in Christ's words we can stand on the other side of the grave and looking back, can exclaim, "O grave, where is thy victory? O death, where is thy sting?" It will not long be a prospect but a realization. Brothers and sisters, how will you and I stand on the other side of the grave? How will that voice that calls forth the sleeping ones affect us? May we be found of the Lord ready to be accepted at that glorious morn, is my prayer. Amen.

H. JOHANSSEN.

Dear brothers and sisters:

How much we, as believers of the gospel, have to be thankful for on this celebration of the resurrection of Jesus. How many blessings we have in these evil days, when sin and corruption abounds on every hand. What [illegible] mind we enjoy by trusting [illegible] God; and above all, what a [illegible] we have. The promise is, [illegible] as he has gone into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." Yes, we know that we are watching and waiting for one who surely will come and will not tarry beyond the appointed time. And Jesus himself has told us to be always on the watch-tower; because at a time when ye think not the Son of Man cometh, and last coming suddenly, he should find us sleeping.

I have often thought, what a privilege it must have been for those who lived when Jesus was on earth before, to see him and talk to him and live with him. But I think now that we are living on the eve of a more glorious time than even the apostles did, for we may see him any day, and if once we meet his approving smile, we will never have to be parted from him; we will not only see him, but we shall be made like him. We will not have to witness his cruel sufferings and death, and his final ascension as they did. But he told his disciples before he went away, "If I go away I will come again and receive you unto myself, that where I am, there ye may be also." And, beloved, this promise was not only for them, but for all who love his appearing. When he comes, it will be with healing in his wings, which will establish peace on earth and good will toward men. I know we all want to be here when God's glory covers the earth, as waters now cover the sea. We look at nature now when everything seems to be awakening from a long winter sleep, and think nothing could be more beautiful. But we have hardly had time to acquaint ourselves with its grandeur, before everything begins to die and decay. The trees are stripped of their verdure, the ground laid bare, the flowers and fruits bitten and withered by frosts; all looks desolate and dreary again. But when Jesus comes and has set up his kingdom, and restored the earth to its Edenic beauty, it shall be one long eternal summer. Don't you all want to be with him here, brothers and sisters? I do. And we all can if we believe and obey his Word and live a godly life until he comes. We must be able to give an intelligent and satisfactory reason for this hope on which we base so much.

Oh, how thankful I am that I am beginning to realize more and more every day what God has done for us, unworthy though we are. Think of the love he had for us, that while we were yet in our sins, he gave his only Son to die in our behalf that we might be saved. Until his Word takes hold of our affections, and our everyday life is ruled by what we learn from him, it is impossible to grow in God's favor. And Paul tells us it is by this favor we are saved through faith, and that not ourselves, it is the gift of God. And when Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall we also appear with him in glory. This will be the grand consummation of our blessed hope, and when that time comes it will no longer be a hope, but a glorious realization. May it be the happy lot of every one here this morning to meet our blessed Lord with joy is my humble prayer. Amen.

EMMA LANG.

Dear brothers and sisters:

What a glorious day this is for us, when we can meet together to remember the resurrection of our Lord. Do we all realize that our hope of life, the only hope of immortality is based upon the great fact that Christ himself was raised from the dead to die no more? Jesus died for our sins and was raised for our justification. He was given to us as a second Adam and because he had no sin of his own the grave could not hold him, but he arose triumphant and has ascended to heaven to await his manifestation, and blessed be his holy name, he ever liveth to make intercession for us. He is with us today and knows with what thankful hearts we meet here to remember his victory over death, and to glorify God for his unspeakable gift. He says today, "I am he that liveth and was dead, and behold I am alive forever more, and have the keys of hades and the grave." And brethren, we have the blessed assurance that he who was lifted on the cross, and whose blood was shed for us is coming again to be glorified in his saints. At that time he was a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief, despised and rejected of men, wounded for our transgressions, bruised for our iniquities; but in the coming day he shall see the travail of his soul and shall be satisfied.

God sent his only begotten Son into the world to so suffer and die for us. What wondrous love from the Creator to a perishing world! What is the measure of our love in return? Does not such love demand our all? It may appear to us that we have little to offer God in return for his great love to us, but if we present our bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, we shall be accepted by him.

The hope of the believer is set upon the Lord Jesus Christ. Apart from him there is nothing to expect. Let us work in love for him, remembering that faith without works is dead. Now is the working time, but it will soon cease. How blessed to have filled up the time to his honor and glory, so that we may hear him say, "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter into the joy of your Lord."

Has unbelief crept into any heart here? Has the thought been whispered that Christ may not come, and have you grown weak and careless in consequence. O put it from you! Let not go of the only—the blessed hope. Could you give up your hope of seeing Jesus and of being made like him? The night may be dark and cold and cheerless, but the sun will warm and cheer all things by and by. The day will dawn. Let us wait in patience. How soon our King shall appear we cannot tell; then we shall hear the cry, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him." How will that cry affect us, brethren and sisters? Are we waiting with well-filled lamps, and are they trimmed and burning? Or are they flickering and just ready to go out? Will such a hope in view should we not be living epistles to Christ? Let us reciprocate his wondrous love, then when the cry is heard, and the Bridegroom comes, we will enter in, and ever be with the Lord and participate in all the joy and gladness.

And as we listen to the songs of praise here today they seem in such perfect unison with our hearts; but from here we look forward to that glorious day when we shall hear the new song, which shall resound through all the earth and make the arches of heaven ring. Glory, honor and power be to him that sitteth upon the throne and to the Lamb forevermore. It seems to me that I feel the great significance of the time which we are here to commemorate more fully than ever before. O may we ever keep in mind what it has done for us, and may the life which he has given us be spent in his service.

The presence of my parents and brothers and sisters is a matter of great thankfulness to me, and I know that the brethren will give them a hearty welcome in the name of the Lord, and help to build them up in their most holy faith. May they realize that it is indeed good to be here and meet with Christ. Let us draw nigh unto God through him and he has promised to draw nigh unto us. O for a closer walk with God, to learn and do his will. Praised be his holy name who has begotten us unto a hope of life eternal through the resurrection of his Son. Amen.

LUELLA SMITH.

"Publisheth Peace."

"How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace; that bringeth good tidings of good, that publisheth salvation, that saith unto Zion, thy God reigneth!" Isa. lii. 7.

I feel happy that it has fallen to my lot in the providence of God to wander among the Massanutton, Blue Ridge and Green Mountains in the grand old Statool Virginia, and "publish peace" to the inhabitants thereof, and proclaim "good tidings of good" things, and "publish salvation" to these people, and proclaim in their midst the coming glorious reign of Zion's glorious King in the heights of Zion.

The grand old "gospel of the kingdom," thrills the heart of believers as no other message can. It is a message of peace, it kindles music in the soul, it causes the heart to shout for joy, and be happy while in adversity. It lets the sunshine of God's love in, and peace and contentment reigns within. It makes believers love the brotherhood, and also anxious to publish glad tidings of good to sinners.

Should clouds of inky blackness temporarily obscure our vision, the sun of hope emerges from behind the cloud with a dazzling blaze of glory, and dispells the cloud, like the fog before the rising sun.

"Say unto Zion, thy God reigneth," in the person of his Son. "Yet have I set my king upon my holy hill of Zion." "Rejoice greatly, O daughter of Zion; shout, O daughter of Jerusalem; behold, thy King cometh unto thee; he is just, and having salvation."

It is a message of peace, even now it calms the troubled sea of life when its raging billows would overwhelm us, and its cares and vexations distract us. There is nothing but joy and peace in it, both now, and also when the Lord shall bring again Zion. "Thy watchmen shall lift up the voice; with the voice together shall they sing; for they shall see eye to eye when the Lord shall bring again Zion. Break forth into joy, sing together ye waste places of Jerusalem: for the Lord hath comforted his people, he hath redeemed Jerusalem." The poet caught the Spirit of the strain, when he sang:

Hail, sweetest, dearest tie that binds our glowing hearts in one,
Hail sacred hope that lifts our minds to fairer worlds divine.

It is not only a joyous and comforting hope, but also a purifying hope.

Listen: "He that hath this hope in him purifieth himself even as he is pure." Notice, it is he that "hath this hope in him,"—is a part of his being, as it were, and not him, who merely profess it, in which it has the above purifying effect.

It is to such an one a valuable treasure, which in his estimation, exceeds in value all other treasure. Says Jesus: "For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also." Hence, reasoning from cause to effect, it could not do otherwise than to direct and control his acts of life, because his heart is centered in that treasure.

Such an one grows in grace and in the knowledge of the truth. His growth may be compared to a little vine in the woods, which seeks greater light, and by its tendrils reaches out for the sturdy oak, and as its growth proceeds, gradually elevates itself into ever increasing light, until it reaches the top, and then drinks in the pure sunlight of heaven.

"The saving favor of God is manifested to all men, teaching us that renouncing impurity and worldly desires, we should live prudently, righteously and piously in the present age, waiting for the blessed hope, even the appearing of the glory of the great God, and our Savior Jesus Christ." Titus ii. 11-13.

The attitude of those whose treasure is centered in the blessed hope, is a prudent, righteous, and pious life in this present age. It would indeed be a very serious matter to profess the blessed hope, and then live in such a manner as to bring reproach upon it. God grant that none will do so.

Moses esteemed "the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures in Egypt," therefore it was his choice to "rather suffer affliction with the people of God than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season."

Alas! how many think otherwise, the pleasures of sin for a brief season has far more attractions for them, than the eternal riches of God. That is their treasure, therefore their heart is set on it. Those who thus choose will get their choice. They can't have the pleasures of sin and also the riches of God.

Beloved, let us be in earnest in publishing peace, and herald to the people good tidings of good, and earnestly proclaim the coming reign of Jesus, on Zion's Mount, for God has declared that he will set his King upon the holy hill of Zion, and that the law shall yet go forth from Zion, and the Word of the Lord from Jerusalem, and the people shall yet flow unto the house of the Lord and learn his ways.

I will shortly write out my report of my work in Virginia. God has a faithful people here, whose heart is set on the old gospel of the kingdom, and are anxiously waiting for the coming of the King in his glory.

We are now living in the last end of this Gentile age, when hope will soon be lost in sight. Oh what need there is that God's servants should be dead in earnest, and live pure and holy lives, that none may appear before Jesus when he comes, with hanging heads. Let us so live as to be approved, and go on ever rejoicing in hope of the glory of God.

God be with you all, dear ones in Christ.

"Quit You Like Men."

Never was there a time when all ministers and all men needed more to be well anchored. The atmosphere in many quarters is thickly befogged with doubts; there is a dangerous disposition to question the supreme infallibility of God's Word; there is a lowered estimate of the deadliness and doom of sin; and the currents of materialism and worldliness run fearfully strong. Every one of us is liable to adverse gales that may burst upon us at an unexpected moment. Trials and temptations come without warning; Satan, no more than a burglar, sends notice of his assault. As a vessel is often stripped of her canvas before the sailors have time to man her yards, so may it be with us. We may be taken all aback by the hurricane, and stripped of all our "top hampers," but if the soul is made fast to the Anchor sure and steadfast, we shall not suffer wreck. The unseen Christ—our Redeemer, Protector, Preserver—makes us outlive the tempest.—T. L. Cuyler, D. D.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, MAY 6, 1903.

WILL you please look up your account, and if you have not yet sent the money to renew your subscription for 1903, will you not kindly do so at once?

WILL some one who can kindly send us the present address of J. J. Hubbard, late of Kellogg, Kansas. Also we would like the address of Andrew Syme, late of Craigs, Ohio.

"MEN dare not, as bad as they are, appear open enemies to virtue; when, therefore, they persecute virtue, they pretend to think it counterfeit or else lay some crime to its charge."

THERE has been considerable fighting between the Turkish troops and the insurgents in Bulgaria, and many have been killed on both sides. What the outcome will be is beyond human knowledge.

THE concluding part of Bro. Joblin's articles on Substitution arrived too late for this issue, and will have to wait till next week. For a like reason the last part of Bro. Thomas' discussion will be given next issue.

WE are pleased to say that Brother and Sister Bradshaw, late of Alliance, Ohio, have come to reside in Cleveland where they can be with those of like precious faith, and the children can attend the Sunday School. We judge from their beaming faces on first days that the change is highly appreciated, after so long an isolation.

THE amounts sent in for our "Helping Fund" are far below what it takes to supply those who are unable to pay for THE RESTITUTION. Unless assistance can be given we will be compelled to discontinue the paper to a number of these poor brothers and sisters. We do not wish to do this, but there is a limit to our ability, and unless we can have aid it will have to be done. Perhaps when our generous friends understand the case, they will want to help in this work.

A CITY paper recently published a special from Battle Creek, Michigan, stating that "Mrs. Ellen G. White, the prophetess of the Seventh Day Adventists, has decreed that the Review and Herald office, recently destroyed by fire, shall not be rebuilt in Battle Creek, and that the publishing business and headquarters of the denomination must be removed to some place on the Atlantic coast. Mrs. White says the worst thing that could be done would be the rebuilding of the office in this city. The Lord has shown her this in a vision, she says. The Lord is displeased because the office has been doing commercial work for gain. The men who run the affairs here have become worldly. The burning of the office was the judgment of the Lord." One can hardly help wondering what the climate of the Atlantic coast may do for these worldly men; and whether they will take the change as a blessing, or as a curse; or why the prophetess did not get a message bidding her to turn these worldlings out, seeing she lived close by, and knew all about it quite a while. Strange things are charged up to God. The dispatch also adds that "there are 10,000 Adventists in the city, who according to Mrs. White, must scatter or be destroyed. Many of them will leave at once."

Russia Again.

Quite a ripple of excitement was caused in the world of nations last week when the representative of the United States sent a communication to Russia declaring that Russia must respect the treaty regarding the integrity of the Chinese empire, and at the same time advising China not to grant the demands made by Russia for sovreignty over Manchuria. As everyone knows Russia has been going quietly on with her work of "assimilation"—making Manchuria practically Russian. This has not been interfered with so long as no attempt was made to shut other nations out, and all were free to enter the ports at will; but when China was asked to exclude all others, and make over these provinces to Russia, then the United States showed its hand, and Russia at once withdrew or denied its demands.

This incident shows the power and importance of the United States in the affairs of the nations. No other nation—not even any combination of [na]tions [ex]cept our own, could have ca[used Ru]ssia to so promptly recede from her position. Had any other nation spoken it would have called for lengthy discussions, the appointment of commissions, and then many concessions on both sides, but with America speaking in positive terms, Russia at once comes down.

No one with a knowledge of Russian history, and knowing what her plans are, will suppose for a moment that she will clear out and leave that territory. Not a bit of it. She will stay right there, gradually getting more ships and soldiers on the scene. She will keep right on making Manchuria little by little so completely Russian, just as she has so much other territory, that it will be impossible to drive her out, and indeed there will cease to be an incentive to do so, as the whole country will then be Russian and not Chinese. Given time and the Czar's minions will have Manchuria, and be ready to "assimilate" further parts of China. Russia can get more by waiting than by a war that will involve all the nations.

The student of prophecy can watch these steps of the Northern Bear toward his destiny, which is written in the sure Word. Keep on the watch tower. Events move fast.

Retaliation.

"The noblest revenge we can take on our enemies is to do them a kindness; for, to return malice for malice, and injury for injury, will afford but a temporary gratification to the flesh, and our enemies will be rendered the more bitter against us. But to take the first opportunity of showing them how superior we are to them by doing them a kindness, or by rendering them a service, the sting of reproach will enter deeply into their souls; and while to us it will be a noble retaliation, our triumph will not unfrequently be rendered complete, not only by blotting out the malice that had otherwise stood against us, but by bringing repentant hearts to offer themselves at the shrine of friendship."

A Timely Warning.

Sister M. A. Woodward sends the following clipping, giving it the heading "A Timely Warning."

There are very few men more loved today or more capable of helping others by wise, kind, true words than F. B. Meyer, who recently returned to his work in London, after a trip to this country.

In a letter to the London Christian, he speaks with great appreciation of the marked kindness shown him while here, and adds, in a spirit of love and charity, that regarding the churches in America which it were well if we would heed. He says:

Nothing could have been more loving and courteous than the treatment which I have universally received, and there are in the churches of the United States of America thousands of the choicest souls that God ever made. But there are many lessons for us from the state of religion in the United States.

1. Let our ministers beware of drifting into preaching on social topics and questions of the day, apart from the person and work of the Savior.

2. Let us maintain the custom of expository and experimental preaching.

3. Let us not announce sensational subjects to draw congregations.

5. Let us be strict to keep outside of our churches exceptional ways of raising money.

5. Let us carefully maintain church discipline, and let people understand that if they want cards, ball, etc, they must disassociate themselves from our churches, and be one thing or the other. If they feel able to serve Christ in these things, let them stand or fall to their own Master, but let them do it apart from the church, lest they invalidate her testimony and impair her life.

6. Let us see to it that we act as light and salt on the movements of the time—not allowing the government of affairs to drift into the hands of irreligious and professional politicians.

The church has relaxed in both her doctrine and practice. She occupies a lower and broader platform than is meet; and having laid aside, as ultra and unnecessary much of what is forbidden to the carnal mind, she has enticed multitudes to join hands with her, whose hearts are not right with her Lord, and who would never have made a show of joining her, had she adhered to the faithfulness of her Lord's truth, and the holiness of her Lord's example. -Hugh McNeile.

What Think Ye of Christ?

"God who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in times past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom also he made the worlds, who being the brightness of his glory and the express image of his person, and upholding all things by the Word of his power, when he had by himself purged our sins sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high. Being made so much better than the angels, as he hath by inheritance obtained a more excellent name than they; for unto which of the angels said he at any time, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee? And again, I will be to him a Father and he shall be to me a Son? And again, when he bringeth in the first-begotten into the world he saith Let all the angels of God worship him,.....but unto the Son he saith thy throne O God is forever and ever." Heb. i. 1–8. In the 10th ver. God says, "And thou, Lord, in the beginning hast laid the foundation of the earth and the heavens are the works of thine hands." Please read carefully the whole chapter, also Col. i. 12–20. He says "it pleased the Father that in him should all fulness dwell." The disciple John says, "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God, all things were made by him, without him was not anything made that was made, he was in the world, and the world was made by him, and the world knew him not." Just the same as God the Father said, Who dare deny the Word of God so plainly spoken.

MRS. H. L. ISHAM.

Our Letter Drawer.

Dear ones of like precious faith:

We are nearer our home today than ever before and as

Our few revolving years,
How swift they glide away;
How short the time of life appears,
When past but as a day.

Lord through another year,
If thou permit my stay,
With watchful care may I pursue
The true and living way.

When we look around us and see the people so heedless and unconcerned about their eternal welfare, it makes one that knows the truth and wishes to obey it shudder, but [illegible] are people who know the truth who would rather be popular with the many than to humble themselves with the few. They tell us, O you can belong to our church and believe as you please, that is, if you keep your mouth shut about the promises made to the fathers and the personal coming of Christ and the immortality of the soul of man. If you say any thing about these things you will hurt some ones feelings. Tell them about the great battle to be fought and that the nations are preparing themselves for that great struggle. They think it of little force. I was talking with a church member not long ago about this great battle. He said, No I do not believe it. I told him that that was what the old prophet said, but, said he, The old prophecies were fulfilled and the young ones did not know anything, and off he went. So you see, if I was a member of his church there would be a wide difference of belief between us in regard to the prophecies, but to have every thing run smooth we must not contend for the truth as it is in Christ our Redeemer, our Elder Brother, our King, who will reign on David's throne in Mount Zion and in Jerusalem.

Let us all strive to enter in at the narrow gate into the city of pure gold where there will be no night, where death cannot enter, where God will wipe the tears from all eyes, where the saints will meet to part no more, and where we can clasp glad hands in that Eden home. May we work with the little band and guard against the worldly fame and keep ourselves from tempting things that so often leads mankind to sin, and may we fight the battles that are sure to win for our Redeemer and our King. While other churches are working for numbers and do not stop to think it is not all that call upon the Lord will enter into his reward, but those who do his will. Oh bring us into that blest fold where we will be with our King forevermore.

Your brother in hope.

Dear Brother Underwood:

Will you please give place in the paper the following. I will say to my many correspondents that my present and future address is Dorris, Okla. Should there be any of the brethren in Woodward or adjoining counties I would be pleased to correspond with them. I can give part of my time to the preaching of the Word if not too far away. Any questions relative to our new country cheerfully answered. I live on my claim fourteen miles south-west of Woodward City, eleven miles from Whitehead, my nearest R. R. Station. Any of the brethren wishing to visit us with a view of location or otherwise will be met at any stated time at either of the above points.

With love to the brethren, I am waiting the return of our blessed Lord from heaven.

Brother Underwood:

I have just been reading in our dear old paper so many good letters that I am so thankful for. I am all alone here and it gives me so much comfort to hear from so many dear ones of like precious faith. Oh, would to God that all the world could see as we do, and pray thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven. Oh how I long for that time. Dear ones, let us strive to be overcomers, it is all my hope and desire. I need your prayers, dear ones. May God ever bless all that write for his cause and kingdom.

From your sister in the one hope.

Brother Underwood:

It is with a heart full of thanksgiving and praise that I wish to add my testimony of God's wonderful love and goodness to me, with the rest of like precious faith. It has only been a few years since I was led into the wonderful light of the true gospel of the kingdom of God. For years I was blind, led by blind leaders, groping my way in darkness, unable to fathom the halo of mystery which encircle the religious systems of the day. The opportunities for isolated ones to work in the vineyard are very few, as sincerity is made the pre-requisite upon which eternal life depends, and not true knowledge and obedience. I find great need of resorting often to the secret chamber and telling it all to Jesus, and [illegible] for strength and help to [illegible] the manifold trials and t[illegible] the world and its doings. [illegible] suggested itself to my mind so [illegible] some of the dear ones, of like precious faith who are seeking homes in the west to come to this locality, Chico, Cal., as there are fine opportunities here for home-seekers. A very large grant of land is being divided up into small tracts and sold on easy terms. Our country is experiencing a great change in the way of prosperity and development. There are three of us here of the Abrahamic faith, and several more are quite interested and are studying with us, and we would be so glad to get enough together to get a church as we could do so much more work for our blessed Master.

Your sister in the one hope.

The 47th Annual Conference of the Church of God in Michigan, will be held (D. V.) at Dutton, Kent County, on Thursday evening, June 4, 1903, and continue over the following Sunday.

These meetings have been held so long that they have become an established fact in the minds of the brethren, and they expect the meeting as surely as the time comes. And then it seems we get so much real encouragement and enjoyment from them, it seems like a family reunion, where we can enjoy the blessed communion of those of like precious faith, so that we feel we would be lost without them, for from these gatherings we derive much strength if we come with the right spirit. All who can come should make a special effort to be there.

A programme will appear later.

Let us remember the words of Paul, in Heb. x. 25: "Not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is; but exhorting one another, and so much the more, as ye see the day approaching."

Dutton is situated on the Michigan Central R. R. ten miles south east of Grand Rapids.

Married.

We have received announcement cards telling of the marriage of Miss Nellie Grayce Smith and Mr. Will O. Bates, at the residence of the bride's aunt, Mrs. C. E. Slayter, in Chicago, on April 23, 1903.

Mr. Bates is in the employ of the Pennsylvania R. R. with headquarters at Van Wert, Ohio, where they expect to live.

The bride is the granddaughter of Sister Mary Watkins of this city, and has lived with her grandmother from infancy. She has grown to young womanhood here, and has lived so as to become one of the best known and respected girls of Plymouth. Always prominent in the Sunday School work and the Church choir, her presence and her voice will be missed, and we can but feel sad that she is gone from us. Her bright, sunny disposition cannot but make friends wherever her lot may be cast.

The last time she attended one of our meetings the closing song happened to be "Lord, abide with me," and our prayer is that the Father may be with and truly abide with our Grayce and her beloved husband, and finally save them in his everlasting kingdom.

Married by the writer, at the residence of the bride, on April 28, 1903, Mr. Marion Partlow and Mrs. Julia Ellenbaugh, both of Moriah, Ill. A few years ago, Bro. Hudler immersed both of these parties and they have been firm in the faith ever since, and we hope they will be faithful to the end and all meet in the kingdom of God.

A Statement and an Appeal.

[illegible] Plymouth congregation still [illegible] [illegible]ion building. The members are [illegible] poor people. They are hindered very much in carrying on the work that might be and that ought to be done, from the fact of having to devote their energies to raising money to pay off this debt. Numbers have been forced by circumstances to move away, and this lays the burden on fewer shoulders.

The brethren and sisters are making a great effort to get the money to lift this debt this year, and it is an object to them to raise as much as is possible by June. Many brethren and sisters have in time past met with this Church, and know of their zeal and earnestness. Many others have read accounts from time to time of meetings held at this place, and work done for the Lord. The hospitality of the Plymouth Church is well known to hundreds. The brethren and sisters always have and shall ever give their homes and the best they have to those who may chose to visit and sojourn with them.

It may be that some who have met with the Plymouth brethren, or others who know of their work, would like to contribute of their [illegible] to aid in clearing this house [illegible] us enabling the friends [illegible] that now languishes. Should there be any such if they will send to Brother E. K. Barnhill, Plymouth, Ind., he will, as Secretary of the Board of Trustees, make proper acknowledgement, and convey the money to the hands of the Treasurer.

A State Conference to be Held in Ohio.

The Conference Committee have decided to hold the Ohio State Conference at Cleveland, O., to begin Thursday evening June 4th, and continue over the following Sunday. The programme will be published later.

Why Preachers Fail.

Many preachers fail not because they lack knowledge, but because they lack unction. They are orthodox, but they never take fire when they preach. Their sermons are all brains and no blood. They have plenty of thought, but no feelings. The dinner they serve up to their people on Sunday is elaborately prepared but cold. No preacher is to be excused who does not as diligently study his manner as his matter. It was said of a certain preacher that he got his matter from God, and his manner from the devil.

Many a good sermon is spoiled by a cold delivery. Two men were addressing a large meeting at Exeter Hall; the one a D. D. and the other a workingman. The Doctor was polished and pompous in his style of oratory, and his words fell like drizzling rain upon the audience—they fairly shivered as he proceeded. Presently the workingman rose to speak. He told of his experience and spoke out of his convictions; he was on fire with his subject and his words fell like sparks among gunpowder—the people took fire and broke out in thunders of applause. Said a gentleman to a man sitting by his side, and who was applauding most vigorously, "What is he saying?" "Oh, I don't know, but look how he is saying it!" Now, much of the pulpit power under God depends on that element of enthusiasm. They make others feel who feel themselves. How can he plead for souls who neither knows nor feels the value of his own? How can he recommend a Savior to others who himself despises and rejects him?

The man who enters the ministry as a profession, as men do the law or the army, and goes through the routine of its duties with the coldness of a mere official, resembles the "ghastly form of a skeleton that in its cold and bony fingers holds a burning lamp." It is true that a man may hold out a light to others who himself does not see. It is true that he may stand like a lifeless finger-post pointing the way along the road where he neither leads nor follows. It is true that God, in his sovereign mercy, may bless others by one who is himself unblest. Yet commonly it happens that it is that which proceeds from the heart of the preacher that penetrates and affects the heart of the hearer, like a ball red hot from the cannon's mouth.—J. A. Soper.

Thoughts on the Kingdom.

If the eternal home of the saints is a sky-kingdom "beyond the bounds of time and space," why do the Scriptures never say so?

If the kingdom was set up at the first advent of Christ, why has mankind ever since been taught to pray, "Thy kingdom come?" Surely if that prayer means anything it means that the kingdom has not yet come.

If the kingdom has already been set up, as some assert, then Christ must be reigning on the earth, and the second advent is past; time has ended; the dead have been raised; the saints rewarded; the wicked punished; and pain and death are destroyed. But—is it true?

If the kingdom has been set up, what are all these other kingdoms doing in its territory? When the kingdom does come, all other kingdoms will cease to exist.

If there is no future kingdom, why are we still taught to pray, "Thy kingdom come?"—C. F. Ladd.

Spirituality.

Spirituality, therefore, is intense personal religion. It implies strong moral principle, purity of desires and affections, godliness in our intentions and ambitions, and self-sacrificing devotion to the service of God. A spiritual Christian will be a force in the world, a power for good among men. He brings God to men. His conduct appeals to the conscience of wicked men. His Christ-like disposition is a convincing argument for Christianity. Such a man also has hold on God in faith and prayer. He has power with God and therefore also with men and prevails with both. He prays in the Spirit; he sings in the Spirit; he worships in the Spirit. And, Spirit being the highest form of force, he exercises spiritual power, which is only another name for personal power sanctified to the good of others. Spirituality is therefore the great need of the day. It is the only sure antidote for the prevailing worldliness and materialism in the church and in the world, for it is the opposite of these world tendencies.—Evangelical Messenger.

Poetry.

He Has Come.

He has come! He has come! My Redeemer has come!
He has taken my heart as his own chosen home;
At last I have given the welcome he sought,
He has come, and his coming all gladness has brought.

He has come! He has come! My Love and my Lord!
Every thought of my being is swayed by his word;
He has come, and he rules in the realm of my soul,
And his sceptre is Love—oh, blessed control!

He has come! He has come! Oh, happiest heart!
He has given his word that he will not depart;
No trouble can enter, no evil can come
To the heart where the peace of God has its home.

He has come to abide, and holy must be
The place where my Lord deigns to banquet with me;
And this is my prayer, Lord, since thou art come,
Make meet for thy presence my heart as thy home.

Passing Events.

Watchmen, what of the night; we think we can see gleams of the morning's dawn. The Jews under the name of Zionists, have been gathering and forming societies in different parts of the world, for the purpose of getting a right and privilege to make a home in Palestine for some of their people; and until last year their expectations, apparently, were likely to be realized, but from some cause their hopes appeared to give way to fears of their cherished hopes not being realized for some time to come. Even a place of rest was refused them in the United State. Last summer a number of Jewish emigrants coming to this country were not allowed to land; but were turned back to Europe to endure the hardships they tried to escape from. But what follows in a very short time? Secretary Hay issues his note to the Powers, "that they shall see to it that the Jews residing in Roumania shall enjoy protection of life and property," where the dogs of war are liable to be let loose at any time, and the Czar of Russia follows in the beginning of this year, with a proclamation of civil and religious liberty to his Empire, which was little expected. And we hope the liberties granted will reach all classes, but some doubt of it including the Jews. "God's ways are higher than our ways." When the time comes for them to be gathered they will not have to purchase the privilege to occupy their own land. What says the Scriptures about the Zion movement, in Isa. lxvi. 7, 8, 9, 15, 16, 18-20. Please read all the chapter, "Before she travailed, she brought forth; before her pain came she was delivered of a man child. Who hath heard such a thing? Who hath seen such things? Shall the earth be made to bring forth in one day? or shall a nation be born at once? for as soon as Zion travailed she brought forth her children. Shall I bring to the birth, and not cause to bring forth? Saith the Lord; shall I cause to bring forth, and shut the womb? saith thy God. For, behold, the Lord will come with fire, and with his chariots like a whirlwind, to render his anger with fury, and his rebuke with flames of fire. For by fire and by his sword will the Lord plead with all flesh; and the slain of the Lord shall be many. For I know their works and their thoughts; it shall come, that I will gather all nations and tongues together; and they shall come, and see my glory. And I will set a sign among them, and I will send those that escape of them unto the nations, to Tarshish, Pul and Lud, that draw the bow, to Tubal, and Javin, to the isles afar off, that have not heard my fame, neither have seen my glory, and they shall declare my glory among the Gentiles. And they shall bring all your brethren for an offering unto the Lord out of all nations, upon horses, and in chariots, and in litters, and upon mules, and upon swift beasts, to my holy mountain Jerusalem saith the Lord. (Here is a gathering of the Jews in which all nations will gladly assist). Joel iii. 2 says I will gather all nations, and will bring them down into the valley of Jehoshaphat, and will plead with them there for my people and for my heritage Israel, whom they have scattered among the nations, and parted my land." If the present Zion movement is not what we are to look for, how are we to know it when it comes? if there is to be more than this movement. Brethren are you ready? The call may come when we least expect it, for the saints to be gathered. Have you received the earnest of your inheritance? Are you sealed with the holy spirit of promise? which is to raise you up at the last day, which is to be your life in the kingdom.

An Oration

Delivered at the Church of God, in Burr Oak, Ind., on Easter day, and published by request.

Tonight let our minds wander back o'er the footsteps of our Savior, as he sojourned upon earth among men. We see him grow up as a tender plant, and as a root out of dry ground, making of himself no reputation, and taking upon him the form of a servant, was made in the likeness of men. We see him despised and rejected of men, a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief. Although born in humility, although his mission was confined to a small country, and his public career lasted only for the brief space of three and one-half years, we see him despised and persecuted and finally put to a cruel and ignominious death on the cross.

He was oppressed and he was afflicted, yet he opened not his mouth. He is brought as a lamb to the slaughter and as a sheep before her shearers is dumb, so he opened not his mouth. He was taken from prison and from judgment, and for the transgression of my people was he stricken. He made his grave with the wicked and with the rich in his death, because he had done no violence, neither was deceit found in his mouth. But now the message bearer, Jesus the Holy One, the Savior of the world, is laid in the tomb, seemingly under the eternal power of that grim monster "death." The Master seemed to have lived in vain, and his message so lovingly given seemed to have been in vain.

But hark! We now hear the voice of the Father, the Creator of the world. He stretches forth his hand from behind the veil and gives unmistakable evidence that he is stronger than death. He bursts its bands asunder, and delivers his sleeping saint who has served him so faithfully and so lovingly.

It is done!
Far and wide beneath the sun,
Spreads a bliss no tongue can tell,
It has come, the day of wonders;
Louder than ten thousand thunders,
Hallelujahs roll and swell.

It is done.
King of kings the victory's won;
Hallelujahs roll and swell,
Voices loud as thunder,
Cry, Behold the day of wonders,
Christ has conquered death and hell.

We have now before us a different and more glorious scene of life. No more persecutions, no more trials and conflicts; no more suffering of death, for he says: The living One, I became dead, and behold! living am I to the ages of ages, and have the keys of death and of hades; and lo, I come to do thy will, O God. For thou hast loved the world that thou gavest to thine only begotten Son, that whosoever believest on him shall not perish but have everlasting life. Herein is true incomprehensible and marvellous love; not that we loved God, but that he loved us, and sent his Son to be the propitiation for our sins.

What a happy thought, to be assured by the Master himself, that if we believe and obey his commands we shall live forever amid all the glories of the coming age. When this mortal shall put on immortality, and this corruptible shall put on incorruption, then our bodies of humiliation shall be fashioned like unto his most glorious body. Hasten, oh hasten, and hail that glad day.

But some will say, what effect has Christ's death on the Church? We need not hesitate in answering. If Christ be not raised your faith is vain, ye are yet in your sins. Hence also they who fell asleep in Christ perished. If in this life in Christ we have hoped, and there is no more, we are of all men most to be pitied.

But now Christ has been raised from among the dead, a first fruit of those who have fallen asleep. For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead. For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ, shall all be made alive. For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ who is our life shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory. For he must reign until he hath put all enemies under his feet. The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death.

A bright and more perfect day will then be ushered in, illuminated by the Sun of Righteousness, who shall arise with healing in his wings, adorned with holiness to the Lord.

For that coming we wait, for that coming creation groans and travails in pain. For that coming Satan fears. To that most glorious day all things tend, the dark or the bright, the evil and the good. Meanwhile all is dark and evil. The Church, the lovely bride, has long waited for the coming Messiah. True the night is far spent, the day is at hand, and now how shall she count the hours? Ages after ages have passed, and still the widowed Church looks and longs for the coming Bridegroom. O, how shall she measure the time? She measures the midnight hours by the sure word of prophecy. She meditates and reads the passing time, and in reading she is cheered in her loneliness. She is waiting, only waiting for the night to end, for the dawn to come softly up, and the day star arise, and then shall be revilled one beautiful and glorious thought—

At last!
The Prince of life has come, the Church is glorified,
The sleepers have awoke, the living have been changed;
Death has at last been slain and the grave spoiled forever
At last.

At last!
The curse is rolled away, the serpent's trail effaced,
The desert smiles with green and blossoms like the rose,
'Tis more than Eden now. Earth has become as heaven
At last.

GEORGIE OSBORN.

A Guest at the Door.

In Holman Hunt's great picture, called "The Light of the World," we see one with patient, gentle face, standing at a door which is ivy-covered, as if long closed. Says Rev. J. R. Miller, "He is girt with the priestly breast-plate. He bears in his hand the lamp of truth. He stands and knocks. There is no answer, and he still stands and knocks. His eye tells of love. His face shows such patient, yearning tenderness. Still he knocks and as if he divined the thoughts of those within, he lovingly, slowly, emphatically repeats his thoughts, He that cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out. No answer from within, the door is still closed. He knocks again. At first the knocking was so loud it startled the inmates, but heedlessly they walked on, closing the ears to each echo of the hand outside, until the knocking grew so faint it was scarcely heeded. You wonder that the patient waiter outside is not [illegible] for a latch or knocker. O [illegible] enter as a welcome guest, [illegible] admitted. Do you see dear, wayward soul the meaning of the picture, Behold, I stand at the door and knock, if any man hear my voice and open the door, I will come in to him, and sup with him, and he with me. But he has been refused even admittance. No place in your heart for him. No room in the inn when a babe. No welcome in the city when a proclaimer of glad tidings, no place in our lives as the Savior of the world. The truest friend earth ever had, rejected, despised, refused. We would not treat a human friend thus, and they offer no power to save, and this one comes to us with power to transform us from this groaning period to one of endless peace, from this mortal, dying condition to undying life. The more abundant life presented to his true follower at his second appearing. Will we still turn from him, close the ear to the gentle knocking until, perhaps, life's summer days have flitted by—beat with age and sorrow? We look in vain for our friends of yore, where are they? All gone. Is it too late to open the door to this patient, long-tried guest? Earthly friends if treated thus would long ago have left us in disgust, but this ever faithful friend has never left the door, so anxious is he for your welfare, he knocks yet again, and at last from within comes the welcome hand upon the latch, and the sweet voice at the door is heard saying, Though your sins be as scarlet they shall be as white as snow.

Random Thoughts.—No. 8.

Having said as much as is necessary on the locality of the Kingdom of God I now proceed with the next item 2nd, The King or Head to the government. What will be the form of government? Will it be a Democracy? A Republic? A Monarchy? If a Monarchy, will it be an absolute Monarchy or a limited Monarchy?

We have various forms of government, and the head of these are called by different names, as President, King, Emperor, Czar, Sultan, etc., but the kingdom of God will be a Monarchy, an absolute Monarchy, and the Head will be a King—King of kings and Lord of lords. It will not be a Democracy or Republic.

Men may have different views of government, and some would prefer one form and others another, but man will have nothing to say as to the form of government in the kingdom of God. God himself has decided that. The people will not have to spend a large part of their time electioneering and wire-pulling every spring and fall. The politicians will not be required there. There will be no election days in the kingdom of God. God is doing that now. Now is the acceptable time, and today is the day of salvation. Known unto God are all his works from the beginning. He had his plans all made, and has been, and still is working them out. He has elected or chosen who should be the Great King in, or of his kingdom.

In years gone by there has been much discussion about election, but I say God did elect, choose and predetermine who should be King, and who should share with the King in the government.

The King must be a descendant of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. Also of David, and shall sit on David's throne. Isa. ix. 6, 7. "For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given: and the government shall be upon his shoulder; and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, the Mighty God, the Everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace. Of the increase of his government and of peace there there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to establish it, and to uphold it with judgment and with righteousness from henceforth even forever. The zeal of the Lord of hosts shall perform this." (Revised Version.) That Jesus is the One referred to in this passage there can be no doubt.

From Luke i. we learn where and how a child was born and how a Son is given, and the angel speaks of him as being the Son of God, and the Son of David, or at least of David as his father, and I take it that the angel knew that he was the seed of Abraham, and no one doubts, and from Luke i. and Matthew i. I see no reason to doubt the truth of what the angel said. He was frequently spoken of as the Son of David as well as the Son of God, and God from heaven speaks of him as his Son in whom he is well pleased, and advised they hear him. At his baptism and on the Mount of transfiguration many wonderful things are spoken of [illegible] His Father, God, sent him into the world with a most wonderfully good and great message concerning his kingdom, and to convince the people that he was sent by God, and was the Messiah, or God's Anointed, he had power to do many wonderful things. He could turn water into wine, could walk on the water and could say to the winds and waters, Peace, be still and they obey him! He cursed a fig-tree, caused a great draft of fishes, fed five thousand men with a small portion of bread and had more left than they had before they had eaten. Could cure all kinds of diseases, made the lame to walk, gave sight to the blind, made the deaf to hear, the dumb to speak. Could cast out demons, could raise the dead, and even on earth had power to forgive sins, and yet, through those who should have been the first to receive and welcome him, he was crucified and slain! But on the third day he rose again, or God raised him, or it was both, and after seeing and further teaching his disciples at times for forty days, he ascended up to heaven, but he will come again. He is the one God has appointed, ordained, and anointed to judge, rule and govern the world. He came and suffered, he will come and reign. He will have all power and authority in heaven, and on earth. All principalities and powers will be made subject to him. He will reign till he has put all enemies under his feet. He will bless his people, but his enemies shall lick the dust. He will care for the poor and needy, there will be no partiality with him. All his people with all their troubles may appeal to him, and he will heal them of all their infirmities. Are any deaf, or blind, or crippled, or sick, or dumb, or have they demons, as they deranged, etc., he will be able to heal, cure, and to remove all their infirmities.

There has been much said about divine healing, and many claim they can do it now, and if they can I wish they would; for there are plenty of cases; but I have never seen much of it done. They say a great deal about divine healing, but don't do it, while Jesus said but little, and advised others to say nothing, but he never failed to heal! and when he cured any one he cured them perfectly, at the time. No half-way work. If the people who now claim the po[illegible] would go to work and heal the afflicted, instead of saying so much. It would be better. Now the time will come when God's people will not be sick, but it will be after the Lord shall come. He will then save to the uttermost, and that he will be able to do it is proved by the fact that he did do such things at his first coming. The best way to prove you can do a thing, is to do it. This the Lord did time and again, he never failed, and even when the patient was dead it made no difference, he just said, "She sleepeth," and raised her up. Nothing is too hard for him, and he is God's anointed, to sit on the throne and judge or govern his people. Now what I have said about his healing and saving his people from all their infirmities, I mean the people, mortal people, who will then be subjects in the kingdom, not the saints, who will then be immortal beings, and will share with the Lord in the government, and this brings me to my 3rd point as to the rulers or officers to assist the King in his government. More anon.

Obituary.

I take this way of informing you of the death of Brother Henry Watkins which occurred in Houston, Texas, on the night of April 11, 1903. He was well known to many of THE RESTITUTION readers, as his home was formerly in Plymouth, Ind. He had been in very poor health for some time and was induced to seek a warmer climate in hope of finding relief, but as is so often the case, it was a failure, and death claims its victim.

He had been able to work until within a week of his death, and was able to be about the house and yard to the very last. Death came sudden and was a great shock to his wife and son. His life work is finished, he sleeps that dreamless sleep, freed from the pain and sorrows of this weary life, but we sorrow not as others who have no hope, for we know that God's promises are sure, and that he in his own good time will bring him again from the land of the enemy.

The groaning creation is waiting for the manifestation of the sons of God and this old earth groans under its burdens, but soon Jesus the Life-giver will come. Then will the earth cast out her dead and no more cover her slain, but as prince of peace he will fill the earth with glory and praise. Come Lord Jesus and come quickly. Our hearts go out to sister in sincere sympathy, left as she now is among strangers and in a strange land, but we know that she is not alone, for he who is faithful has said, I will never leave nor forsake thee. Let us abide in the Vine and fight the good fight that we may be able to sing the new song and to be made unto our God kings and priests; for worthy is he to receive power and riches and wisdom and strength and honor and glory and blessing. Yes, he the living Christ is worthy of all glory. He is death's Conqueror and the last enemy he will destroy is death, and then there will be no more death neither sorrow nor crying for the former things are passed away. Behold, I make all things new.

Praise God for such a hope.

BANNIE BARNHILL.

Mrs. Martha J. Harding was born in the State of Ohio, January 22, 1830. Came with her parents to Indiana in early childhood. She was married to Dr. E. N. Harding in 1849. Two years later they came to make their home in Rensselaer, where she continued to reside nearly all the time since, he having died several years ago. Five children survive her, Mrs. Jessie Grant, at whose home she died, Mrs. Carrie Tourney, Mrs. Eva Tynes, Mr. C. F. and W. W. Harding.

She united with the Church of God, at Rensselaer, in humble obedience to the faith of the gospel, in 1861. Her allegiance to the faith was ever firm and unwavering. She was an earnest worker in the cause of Christ in her modest and quiet way. Doing good to all as she had opportunity, ever ready to give a helping hand to the needy. Her faith was truly a "faith that works by love." All who knew her felt the influence of her devoted, patient, self-sacrificing Christian life.

After a long and painful illness, she peacefully fell asleep in Christ on Mar. 25, 1903. Her funeral was held in the church, and was attended by a large concourse of sorrowing friends, to whom the comfort of the blessed promises in the gospel were presented that we might not sorrow as others without hope. We laid her away in the cemetary to sleep that undisturbed sleep, until called by the blessed Life Giver, "at the resurrection of the just."

The World Before Moses.

Mr. H. T. Sell of Chicago, recently preached a sermon, at a church in Milwaukee, parts of which are here given:

We are interested in a look backward. How far can we go back and find a written record of the deeds of men? It is only within a comparatively few years that we could go back of 550 B. C. Indeed it had been confidently asserted that the art of writing was not known before about 600 B. C. How then could Moses have written his code of laws? How could the confident assertions in Genesis of workers in brass and iron, and of great empires 3800 B. C. be true?

This state of things was taken up and made much of by the hostile Bible critic. But now all is changed. The pick and spade in the hands of the excavator in the Bible lands has shown us a wonderful civilization antedating Moses and Abraham. That civilization had a high literary culture, with schools and colleges. Its commercial interests were large. Great caravans were in the road between Egypt and Babylon. Ships sailed through the Mediterranean sea, circumnavigated Africa and traded in the Persian gulf. There was also an efficient postal system.

The city of Nippur, fifty miles south east of old Babylon, has been in process of excavation since 1888. The most important discovery there is the temple library in 1900 with its 150,000 tablets on medicine, law, religion and mathematics. About 20,000 of these tablets have been removed and are now being deciphered. By means of these we shall be able to go still further back in the history of that old world.

Perhaps the most important discovery is that of the law code of Hammurabi, who lived in the time of Abraham. This was lately found at Qusa. A piece of diorite about seven feet high with a picture of the king on one side, and 282 of his laws on the other.

The code was pretty hard on judges and doctors. It says: "Any judge conducting a trial and rendering a written decision therein shall receive twelvefold punishment by reason of his decision, if the decision is subsequently proved to be erroneous." "If a surgeon makes a severe wound with the operating knife on a patient and the patient dies, or opens a tumor of the eye on any one and the eye is lost the surgeon shall have his hands cut off."

The code's most frequent punishment is death. Minor punishments are teeth knocked out, ears chopped off, and eyes put out. Of course there are certain provisions which are recognized in all codes of law where people live together and form a state. The social evil is sanctioned and provided for. A man may have a number of wives, provided the first one is the recognized legal wife.

The Mosaic code, with its lofty morality, its sanitary provisions, its cities of refuge, its appeal to God is so far in advance of the code of Hammurabi that it does not stand in the same category.

The reason for the destruction of this great civilization was because of its polytheism and immorality. We now see that all the Bible said of it is true, and in Abraham God sought to begin a new civilization.

To Australia.

Circuit tour tickets covering the railroad trip to the Pacific Coast and via the various trans-Pacific steamship lines to the far East, are each day becoming a feature of greater popularity to the traveling public. The Chicago & North-Western Ry., have recently announced the sale of tickets of this character to Sidney, Australia, and return, in connection with their overland Service to the Coast, tickets being good returning via the Royal Mail Line to Vancouver or via the Oceanic S. S. Co's Line, the direct route to San Francisco.

These circuit tour tickets are sold at very low rates. The trans-Pacific service has grown and improved very rapidly in recent years and tourists find the trip filled with scenes of picturesque interest not equaled in the old journeys made by tourists through England and on the continent.

The trans-continental train service and the trans-Pacific steamship service are of the highest possible character and the time required for making these journeys is much less than ever before.

The Holy Spirit, What is it?

It is an emanation from God. Did Jesus possess it? He evidently was endued with the Holy Spirit; and while teaching his loved apostles, preparing them for the work of proclaiming the gospel to the world, he promises them the Holy Spirit as a guide, a comforter in this mighty work. It was to direct, but was not to speek of itself. It was sent conjointly by the Father and Son. Hence the work of the apostles, thus inspired is the will and work of the Lord. See Heb. ii. 1-4. According to the will and power of God were they led, and strengthened, and directed in their work.

Spiritually born, what is it? The Word of the Lord to the Ruler who came to him by night wondrously answers this question. It is being born to immortal, spiritual life. It is the mortal putting on the immortal. See 1 Cor. xv. The resurrection of the Lord Jesus, and his life subsequent to that event verifies his word to Nicodemus. To him he said, "Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God." The order that he gave was first the water birth, then the Spirit birth. The water birth consummates the duty of the faithful obedient in putting on the saving name of the Lord Jesus. By thus being united to him who rose from the dead we receive the adoption of the sons. "And because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, saying, Abba Father." Thus are we made heirs of God through Christ. See Gal. iv. 7. Does this sending of his Spirit into your hearts constitute birth of the Spirit? No, for Jesus said, "The wind eth bloweth where it listoth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, or whither it goeth; so is every one that is born of the Spirit." He here asserts what he proves by his appearance before the apostles the day he rose from the dead, and again in eight days after. The doors were closed and he stood in their midst. Can you, my friend, so enter a house? No, but if born as he was from the dead to immortal life, you may do so; and greater things may his followers accomplish. Let us not forget that flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God, neither doth corruption inherit incorruption. But when this mortal shall have put on immortality the birth to victory will have been accomplished; and the victors like their Head, may go wheresoever it be needful, if it be within closed doors or a great distance; for as the wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh or whither it goeth; so is every one that is born of the Spirit.

MRS. E. R. BOYER.

Looking at things from the eyes of the fault-finder one would conclude that things were very bad in the church. The prayers of those who pray do not have the right ring and nearly everybody talks too much. The singing is wrong, and the preaching is not what it used to be. Things in the Bible appear doubtful and have a contradictory look. There is great trouble over where Cain got his wife, and if Lot's wife was turned to a pillar of salt, why is she not there yet? If Jonah was such a powerful preacher that he could turn a great city to repentance, why does it take so much preaching to get people to join the church now? What color were the serpents that stung the children of Israel, and how high was the pole upon which the serpent of brass was hung? These are some of the thoughts that enter the mind of one who is on the back-ground. Nothing is right to the man who is wrong himself.

"The World to Come and the Life Everlasting," is the name of a book of over 400 pages. The title page describes it as a Symposium of Writers on eternal life from the Bible Basis, and is selected from the works of a goodly number of Bible Students who have written during the past few years. It is compiled and published by Bro. John O. Woodruff, of Elizabeth, N. J., of whom it may be ordered. The paper and print are excellent, as is the durable cloth-binding. The price is $1.00, and considering the work as a whole it is very low, and we urge all who need a book on this subject to procure one without delay.

Society of Christian Endeavor, Denver, 1903.

The Passenger Department of the Chicago & North-Western Railway has issued a very interesting folder on the subject of the Christian Endeavor meeting to be held at Denver, July 9th to 13th, together with information as to reduced rates and sleeping car service, as well as a short description of the various points of interest in Colorado usually visited by tourists. Send 2-cent stamp to W. B. Kniskern, Passenger Traffic Manager, Chicago, for copy.—May 16.

NOTICE.

To the Bereans especially, or to any of the brethren.

It is the desire of many that Bro. S. J. Lindsay conduct a Bible School for at least ten days prior to the beginning of the next annual Conference to be held at Oregon, Ill., for the purpose of Bible drills or systematic Bible instruction. We all need such Normal instruction, and this letter is to all, and especially to those who may be missed by circular letter.

The plan is for those who take the work to take up lodging in the Conference hall, and do their own cooking and furnishing, thus making their stay as inexpensive as they please.

Oregon is a very pleasant city, located on the banks of Rock River, and an ideal place in leisure hours for an outing.

No tuition will be charged, as Bro. Lindsay has offered his services free for this time. Let us know in good season if you will come. For further particulars address the undersigned, Chairman Evangelist Committee, Illinois State Conference, at Lanark, Ill.

Your Brother in hope.

Our Helping Fund.

We whose names are given herewith, believing that it is our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending THE RESTITUTION to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our names for the purpose of aiding the managers of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund to be applied as the donors request, (or when left to the publisher to decide) only for those who themselves state their circumstances and need, or whose case is presented by some one known to be trustworthy.

A Word of Appreciation.

Some time ago I asked the brotherhood through THE RESTITUTION how many copies of the pamphlet "The Reasons of My Withdrawal from the Evangelical Association," would be wanted. Letters came from all parts of the country, some containing money stating the number of copies desired, so that a second edition of 1000 was printed. I wish to state that this edition is nearly exhausted, there being only about 150 left. Those wishing copies better send their orders early, as they will soon be gone. I desire, by this means, to thank the brethren for their encouraging words and financial help. Trusting that the seed will fall in good soil and produce fruit unto eternal life. 25 pages, at 5 cents per copy. A. H. Zilmer, Plymouth, Ind.

A third edition of the above named work is just out, and ready for delivery. This book has been before our readers so long now that its worth is well known. The author is Robert Ashcroft. The price for this edition is low so that the brethren and sisters can get it to lend to honest enquirers after truth. We hope there are a few who have not turned their ears from the truth to fables. The book will speak for itself in its unfoldings of the purposes and plans of Jehovah, regarding the near future of the earth and its inhabitants. All should be interested in these truths, and those who have never read this book will have a feast. Price 65 cents post paid. Send to this office for them, or orders can be sent to J. O. Popular Lectures by M. Joblin.

Brethren and Sisters, Have you loved ones who think sincerity will save them? Have you friends who think they worship acceptably while ignorant of God's promises? Have you acquaintances with false hopes of heaven, or who believe themselves immortal by nature, or who think their sins are forgiven, although they are ignorant of the Law of Pardon, or who have no use for a God who consigns sinners to Eternal Torment, and are ignorant of Jehovah's beneficent purpose to fill the earth with his glory and bestow Eternal Life upon believers in the Gospel, so they can enjoy it forever? If so, send for Popular Lectures by Bro. Joblin, entitled:—"The Kingdom of God;" "Old Mother Earth to Be Born Again;" "Strangers from the Covenants of Promise;" "Vain Worship;" "No Immortality Out of Christ;" "Hope Begotten by the Resurrection of Christ;" "God's Love and Solicitude for Mankind;" and "What Shall We Do to be Saved?"

Each Lecture of 16 pages $1 per 100 post free; or an assortment of the whole, same price. Address M. Joblin, 624 Woodland Av., Cleveland, O.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Immortality of Soul. No. 3.

Editor Sentinel:

I shall esteem it a favor if you will grant me room to reply to the letter of Mr. S. H. Thomas in the Sentinel of Feb. 21. I have read with considerable interest the several letters on the question of Biblical evidence concerning the immortality of the soul of man, and especially the letter referred to, and I want to say a few words on the question.

It is not wise to argue about apparent contradictory statements in the Word of God, since all facts that appear contradictory to a finite mind, blinded by prejudice and ignorance, are reconciled and harmonious in the infinite mind of God, and, in fact, his revelation does not come as an argument, but as a plain statement of fact of the past, present and future. And so I do not write this letter for the sake of argument, or for the sake of reconciling contradictory views, but simply to bring the evidence I now possess, and the evidence any careful reader of the Bible can possess, before those who, like Mr. Thomas, are searching for the truth. Remembering, then, that there is no defect in the revelation of God but in our own understanding, let us go to the Bible, reverently and devoutly, and ask the Holy Spirit to "guide us into all truth."

Mr. Thomas says, "Being deeply interested in the subject and believing as I do that the Bible is the Word of the living God, quite naturally I went to it for information on the subject, and failing to find satisfactory evidence there I put the question to your many intelligent readers,"—and I believe that he is sincere, and that we stand on common ground in believing that the Bible is the Word of God. And yet, I am surprised that he should completely overlook or ignore other direct statements upon the subject upon which he desires light, and quotes only those passages that declare apparently that the soul of the wicked man is destroyed and does not suffer eternal torment. For, whether intentionally or not, he upholds the doctrine of conditional immortality, and tries to show that the wicked are annihilated; upon this point, at least, he seems to have found "satisfactory evidence."

Let us look for a moment at this question from a standpoint other than that of the Bible. Both science and reason say that the soul can exist forever either in joy or in torment, for there is no doubt about the possibility of its so existing, and that immortality can be the lot of both the good and the bad. But neither science nor reason dogmatically says that the soul does so exist, for there is no evidence in nature or in mind from which the proof can be deductively formulated. All proof, then, along this line of argument is simply the result of inductive reasoning, which is very defective and inadequate at times, and yet in some cases it amounts to an actual demonstration, as for instance, the proof of the existence of such forces as gravitation, chemical affinity and electricity, and of such laws as show the conservation of energy, and the atomic and molecular construction of matter. We have never seen gravitation, nor chemical affinity, nor atoms, and yet science says they exist, believes that they do, and works upon that basis because certain results can be brought about only by certain causes. So also we reason that there is a God, that he is a Moral Ruler, that he governs by a system of rewards and punishments in a perfect moral government, that he can reveal to man the existence of such a government, that his revelations are true, and that they do not contradict each other, since they reveal God's mind and plan. And our reason finds its proof in the Word of God where just such a system is found.

Without discussing the views of pagan philosophers, or the belief of such men as Socrates and Plato in a future life, or the desire for immortality which is common to all mankind, or the common faith of men in a future existence, let us note that man is conscious of something within him that is identical with that same something of yesterday. Although the body changes and the molecular form is renewed every seven years, yet the error mains. The old man of 70 is conscious that through all the changes of life and through all its fortunes and misfortunes he is the same being he was at fifteen. He has not lost his identity even though the entire body has died time and again and the brain is no longer in structural form what it once was. Here is the ground for to know d[i]ffe proof of an immortal exis[t]ence in man. But to explain the common faith of mankind in the future existence of the soul, we must suppose that it is an instinctive faith, or an intuition of reason, or a truth given in an original revelation, for we must acknowledge that this universal faith is not based on any deduction or actual experience. Now, if it is an instinctive faith or an intuition of reason, then, as such, it must be common to all men, good and bad. If on the other hand, it is a truth given in an original revelation, then the revelation declares or implies that the soul of man is immortal, or it is not. What, then, does the Word of God say?

Mr. Thomas seems to believe that the revelation from God reveals simply a conditional immortality, i. e., the wicked shall be destroyed and only those who accept Christ shall live forever. No wonder his evidence is not satisfactory! If such be the case, what good is accomplished by Christ's dying on the cross? If the wicked are annihilated, of what value is death in saving sinners from the wrath of God? It becomes void in that respect, for the soul that ceases to exist at death cannot feel pain, and punishment can have no terrors for a wicked soul. The sinner can enjoy life here; death will end all; after that nothing! What moral force would such an end (if revelation reveals it) have upon the sinner if the prevailing belief in an everlasting hell has no better effect than it does now? Wherein does God's moral government consist? How are the wicked punished and the good rewarded? Where is the wrath to come? The good cannot be subjects of it since they are saved from it—the wicked surely cannot experience it, since they are not. The only result of the monstrous sin of rejecting Christ, the Savior of men, who opened his veins to save us from sin, is annihilation! Such a result belittles the work of Christ, and makes the cross the laughing stock of the world!

The Bible may not say in as many words that man has an immortal soul, it may not even imply it, but that would be no reason for declaring that he has not. But it does tell us very explicitly how to attain eternal life and how to avoid eternal death, whatever the conditions denoted by the words may be. Whether we know definitely or not if the soul is immortal, God has not left us in doubt as to how we may become immortal. His revelation assures us that we shall live forever.

In consulting the Word of God we must not overlook two facts. In the first place we must interpret the passage quoted in the light of the immediate context and also in the light of the larger context of the whole Bible. In violation of this law passages can be quoted to any purpose by any one. Satan, himself, quoted Scripture, but not with regard to the immediate context, nor the context of the whole Word of God. Secondly, we must notice the character of the person speaking and his authority. The words of Moses are of more weight than Aaron's; Job's were more important than those of his three friends; David has a clearer spiritual insight than any of the kings; Christ has no peer. Paul is inspired, and yet indicates what is simply his judgment (1 Cor. vii. 25) so that it will not be taken as binding. Clearly revelation is progressive. The vision that Paul had of Christ was of more import than the burning bush of Moses, so also the words of Christ as recorded by the evangelists are of more weight than the songs of David, and the evidences that the disciples offer of the resurrection are far more important than the prophecies of the same; so, also, Christ's words on the subject of eternal punishment are far above the prophecies of that event.

Now we note that science has no definition for life and none for death. Nor does the Bible define in an exact way physical life and death as distinguished from spiritual life and death. And yet there is a difference. We know that there is a spiritual life and death and that this spiritual death is the second death. We are also sure that a man can be spiritually dead while physically alive. Rom. viii. 6; Rev. iii. 1; 1 Tim. v. 6; Eph. ii. 1-5, and so also a man may have eternal life and yet be subject to physical death. John v. 12; iii. 14; John v. 24: xi. 3. The second death is vividly portrayed in Rev. ii. 11; xx. 6; xx. 14; xxi. 8.

And now let us look at the one-sided evidence that Mr. Thomas has adduced as proof of the destruction of the wicked. "The wages of sin is death." Rom. vi. 23. What kind of death? Not physical, surely, for those who are redeemed by Christ and have eternal must die that death also. It must mean, then, spiritual death. What this is we can't say positively because it is not defined. Perhaps Rom. viii. 6 will clear up the question: "For the mind of the flesh is death." Am. Rev. The reason is given in Rom. viii. 7, 8. If a man has no love he lives in death. 1 John iii. 14. This is separation from God, who is love. 2. "The soul that sinneth it shall die." The soul dies by sinning, i. e., it is separated from God and is made to endure suffering in contrast with the eternal life enjoyed by the redeemed, Rom. ii. 7. 3. Mal. iv. 1, and following, which is quoted, is not a prophesy of the final judgment and no exegete so takes it except by accommodation. This book is a prophecy concerning the future of the Jews and their enemies. Of the use made of the Psalms as prophecy for the final judgment, and of the use of Obadiah for the same purpose I need only point out that the context does not warrant such an application of Psa. xxxvii. 20, 38, and Oba. 15. But if Mr. Thomas insists that they do, we shall let them stand with all others he may bring of like character and place over against them Christ's own words and the fuller revelation of John.

In referring to certain Old Testament passages in which the Hebrew word "Nephesh" occurs, Mr. Thomas points out that the word is used with reference to man and beast alike and the translators are responsible for the difference ("soul" and "life") in the English version. That is, since the Hebrew word means the same thing in man and beast, man is no more immortal than the beast of the field. But now notice the triumph of argument. One method is used for the Old Testament and a diametrically different method is used for the New Testament. The word "Nephesh" in Hebrew must mean the same thing in Mr. Thomas' opinion, but the Greek word "aionion" can mean whatsoever he chooses in order to support his side. Of the adjective "aionion" in Matt. xxv. 46 he says it means simply "a period of time" according to the lexicographers and students, but my Liddle & Scott says it means "eternal," and so also two of my New Testament Lexicons. And if students think that it means simply a period of time, why did the "student" who translated the King James Version and the English Revision of 1881 and the American Revision of 1901 translate "aionion" "eternal" or "everlasting?" This word and the form from which it is derived "aion" are used wherever eternal or everlasting occur in the New Testament, (I have counted 110 different places), and where they are not used their common roots "ael" and "nidios" are. These are the most common Greek words to express the idea of eternity. Aionion is predicated of God, of Christ, of his Word, of life, of heaven, of life, of punishment, and is more used than the other words. In Matt. xxv. 46 "aionion" (eternal) punishment is the same as "aionion" (eternal) life. If "aionion" punishment is for a time, then on Mr. Thomas' method in regard to Nephesh, "aionion" life is for a time, the "aionion" God will some day cease to be, the "aionion" Christ will die again even though he overcame death, and the "aionion" inheritance is a myth. There is another expression besides "aionion" that is frequently used—"eis aiouas aionon"—which means literally to the ages of ages, which in English means "forever and ever." In Rev. xx. 10; xiv. 11; Matt. xviii. 8; xxv. 41; 2 Thes. i. 9; Matt. iii. 12, and Jude 7 will be found an answer to Mr. Thomas' view that the wicked are annihilated, and so also will Christ's own parable of Dives and Lazarus answer him.

With regard to the immortality of the soul read 1 Cor. xv. and especially v. 53 and 54. Even though this chapter does not expressly state that the unrepentant sinner is immortal yet it would be unwise to say that he is not—a most unwarranted "argumentum e silentio" in view of the passages given above. But all things are in God's hands and he has shown us the way—that is enough—the way of the wicked shall not be the way of the believer.—Harry H. Price, Pastor Dover M. P. Church.

Editor Sentinel:

Seeing of late several letters in the Sentinel in relation to the immortality of the soul, and having made the Bible, that "book of books," a careful study for over fifty years exclusive of almost every thing else save my profession, and being deeply interested I shall esteem it a great favor if you will grant me space to reply to the letter of Mr. Harry H. Price, Pastor Dover M. P. Church.

I may say I am much pleased with his second paragraph beginning with the words, "It is not wise to argue, etc." in which he says, "The revelation of God does not come to us as an argument, but as a plain statement of facts of the past, present and future." I am somewhat surprised then that he has not given us the evidence of facts in relation to this important and interesting subject, but instead gives nearly two columns of inference and assumption, with a "look at the question from a standpoint other than the Bible." Would it not have been wiser and more consistent if Mr. Price had confined himself to the plain statements of the Bible, as he admits that the Word of God is not an argument, but a plain statement of facts, of which he surely cannot be ignorant; for as "Ignorantia legis neminem excusat," or ignorance of the law excuses no one, so ignorance of the Word will excuse no one in the day of reckoning.

I therefore take pleasure in calling the attention of your many readers to some of the Biblical statements of facts on this question. The first statement I shall call attention to is Gen. ii. 17. But of the tree of knowledge of good and evil thou shalt not eat of it, for in the day thou eatest thereof dying thou shalt surely die [margin], or as Webster renders it, "Thou shalt become a son of death." Would God have made such a statement to a being that could not die? The nature of the death is set forth in the 3rd chapter 19th verse, "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken; for dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return." 930 years after Adam died as God had said, literally returned to dust again. Do not the above facts prove that Adam was not immortal? If any think otherwise then note the fact that a flaming sword was placed to guard the tree of life lest Adam put forth his hand and take of the tree of life and eat and live forever. Gen. iii. 22-24. It is a fact then that he was mortal, a son of death, and could not live forever unless he partook of the tree of life. Let us turn to Eccl. iii. 19, 20, for another fact, "That which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts * * * as one dieth so dieth the other, yea they have all one ruah, breath or spirit so that a man hath no pre-eminence above a beast, all go unto one place, all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again." Man then hath no pre-eminence in death above a beast. If man is in any sense immortal, so is the beast, if the beast is mortal so is man. What a glorious fact that Jesus Christ has come, who is the resurrection and the life, and has "abolished death and brought life and immortality to light through the gospel." Those therefore who seek for immortality in God's appointed way will live again, and God will render unto them eternal life. See Rom. ii. 6, 7. Surely a man is not required to seek for immortality if he already has it, and note, only unto those who seek for it does God render eternal life. This is in harmony with the fact that the wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life. Rom. vi. 23. No criticism can destroy the literal meaning of this passage, for if eternal life means an actual existence—a living forever, then death must mean the opposite, otherwise the beauty and force of the antithesis or contrast would be destroyed. Such has been the dealings of God in the past with Israel and the nations. "Life and good, death and evil." Deut. xxx. 15-19. I have called the attention of your readers to only a few of the many plain statements, and facts with which the Scriptures abound showing that man is by virtue of his creation mortal, therefore instead of the wicked suffering unending torments in a theological hell, they will be destroyed, cease to exist, become as though they had not been, while the righteous will be raised from the dead to incorruptibility and life, and exist forever in the golden age that is coming. Whoever thinks that this is throwing a cap to the world of ungodly must remember that it is "the goodness of God that leadeth to reformation" and not fear of punishment.

Mr. Price referring to the passages quoted by Mr. Thomas, says, "He quoted only those passages that declare apparently that the soul of the wicked does not suffer eternal torment." Is not "apparently" a happy word for Mr. Price by which to pass over the plain statements cited by Mr. Thomas? What of Matt. x. 28, "But fear him who can utterly destroy both soul and body in Gehenna" (Diaglott). Does not such a passage say as plainly as language can say it that the soul can be utterly destroyed? Will Mr. Price apply that word "apparently" to the passage quoted above?

Again Mr. Price says of Mr. Thomas, "Whether intentionally or not he upholds the doctrine of conditional immortality and tries to show that the wicked are annihilated," (destroyed is the Bible word). Does he not actually show it? Listen to David. Psa. cxiv. 20. The Lord preserveth all them that love him, but all the wicked will he destroy. Comment is unnecessary. Mr. Thomas undoubtedly holds the doctrine of conditional immortality, for if there is one point of doctrine unmistakably taught in the Bible it is that immortality is an endowment of God to be bestowed upon those who seek for it, and to none others. See Rom. ii. 6-10.

Again, Mr. Price says, Both science and reason say that the soul can exist forever in joy or in torment, for there is no doubt about the possibility of its so existing, and that immortality can be the lot of both the good and the bad." It is positively certain that the soul cannot so exist if it is not immortal, and Mr. Price has not nor cannot cite a passage to show that man has an immortal soul. In fact he admits that the "Bible may not in as many words say that man has an immortal soul, it may not imply it." He then says "that would be no reason for declaring he had not." Pray then where does Mr. Price find evidence that man has an immortal soul? He does not find it in the Bible if it may not infer it. Not in science surely, for science calls a halt at the portal of the grave. It cannot pierce the darkness of the future, and Paul instructs Timothy to avoid profane and vain babblings, and oppositions of science falsely so-called, which some professing erred concerning the faith, (1 Tim. vi. 20, 21) and reason unenlightened by the Word of God cannot guide us, for it is written, I will destroy the wisdom of the wise (1 Cor. i. 19) and Pope says, "reason is sure to err." Not only so, but Mr. Price himself wisely says, "The revelation of God is a plain statement of fact of the past, present and future." We heartily concur with this remark and therefore I unhesitatingly say that man is mortal, that immortality is an endowment of God to be bestowed upon those who wisely seek for it.

Again Mr. Price says, "Mr. Thomas seems to believe that the revelation of God simply teaches a conditional immortality, i. e., the wicked shall be destroyed and only those who accept Christ shall live forever." I am pleased to know that Mr. Thomas is so in accord with the Scriptures, which say, "The Lord preserveth all them that love him, but all the wicked will he destroy." Psa. cxiv. 20. "The wicked are reserved to the day of destruction." Job xxi. 30. "Broad is the way that leadeth to destruction, and many go in thereat; because strait is the gate, and narrow is the way that leadeth unto life and few there be that find it." Matt. vii. 13, 14. Mr. Price continues "No wonder his evidence is not satisfactory." Indeed! The evidence that the wicked will be destroyed, and only those who accept Christ will live forever, was satisfactory. It was the evidence that man was possessed of an immortal soul, or that man by nature is immortal that was not satisfactory. I trust Mr. Price will stand corrected. He further says, "If such be the case, what good is accomplished by Christ's dying on the cross? If the wicked are annihilated—destroyed—of what value is his death in saving sinners from the wrath to come?" What! would the everlasting torment of the wicked enhance the value of Christ's death? Perish the thought. Has Mr. Price spoken advisedly? Must that monstrous doctrine of eternal torment of the wicked be true in order that good be accomplished by Christ's dying on the cross? Heaven forbid. Is it possible there live but a man claiming to be enlightened by the Word of God who believes that the destruction of the wicked would "belittle the work of Christ and make the cross of Christ the laughing stock of the world?" Must the wicked suffer eternal torments that the righteous may have eternal life? Again I say, perish the thought. Have your many readers ever considered what is involved in this horrid pagan dogma of eternal torments? The blush of virgin purity, and the strength of youth whose transgressions have been few in number if they die suddenly without repentance must suffer, both as to time and extent, the same torments as the gray haired old man whose transgressions have been many and cruel. Does the thought honor our God whose "ways are equal?" It is not even a step in an advance of that early Calvinistic teaching, "that there are babes in hell a span long." Or the teaching of Dr. Benson, a Methodist commentator, who says, "God is present in hell in his infinite justice and Almighty wrath as an unfathomable sea of liquid fire where the wicked must drink in everlasting torture * * * he will exert all his divine attributes to make them as wretched as the capacity will admit!"

Another of America's most eminent divines speaking of the fire of hell says, "How would your heart sink to know that you must endure it forever! That after millions of millions of ages your torment would be no nearer an end than when it began. But your torments in hell will be immensely greater than this represents. After your godly parents shall have seen you lie in hell millions of ages in torment day and night they will not begin to pity then; they will praise God that his justice appears in the eternity of your misery." Such has been the utterances of those whose minds have been darkened by the ignorance that is in

READ the notice in another column of the English pamphlet on Prophetic Times. It will surely interest you.

DO NOT neglect to take notice of the time and place appointed for the different Conferences. Begin now and arrange to be there and help.

IF each one would look up his account, and in case he is owing on his subscription, will at once renew, we will esteem the favor highly. A number seem to have forgotten us.

BECAUSE there was no good place to divide, we give Bro. Thomas a large space in this issue, for the conclusion of his discussion on the immortality question. Generally such long articles are not read like shorter ones are, but we trust no one will miss reading this on this account, as it is very plain and clear.

Substitution. No. 8.

We now propose to examine some statements made by the writer of the article of The Atonement. He truly says:—"The life lost by the transgression was blood life." Man had no other life to lose. He then adds:—

"Therefore a blood life must be given as a substitute for it.

Where is his authority for this, "therefore?"—where can we read that any substitute is wanted at all?

We submit, that in the nature of things, in order to CONDEMN SIN in the flesh of Jesus, his flesh must be sinful, inasmuch as he was made of a woman, whose flesh was sinful flesh, as proven by the fact that he was made under the law.

That his flesh being in this way or sense under condemnation it is dishonoring to God to say he accepted a condemned thing as a substitute.

That the fact that it required the blood of the covenant to bring again from the dead our Lord Jesus, is infallible proof that he died as one of us, and not as a substitute; and

That the statement, "That a blood life must be given as a substitute," is a subterfuge to round out a theory; which has no foundation in truth; and we think we can make this reasonably clear to our readers.

It appears to us that the writer has a very poor estimate of the mental calibre and moral principles of our readers, when he expects them to accept his bare assertions as the truth in the premises, and proceeds without further ado to supply the substitute his theory calls for in order to redeem it (man's blood life) from death.

He continues:—"Now, in order to meet this [supposed] demand in order for man's redemption, Christ came into the world and took upon him the likeness of sinful flesh, that for sin he might condemn sin in the flesh."

What was our author thinking about, when he wrote the words, "Therefore a blood life must be given as a substitute for it?"

It was MAN who lost his blood life.

If a blood-life Substitute be found, —who is to get it?

Is man who lost it, to get it?

If so, seeing it is to be UNCONDITIONALLY restored, was he wrongfully deprived of it?

If so, and that too, by a process that involved excessive toil to gain bread from a ground cursed for his sake, and a generally disordered nature, and sickness and sorrow, and pain and a thousand other ills?

Yes; if this be so, is not man entitled to HEAVY DAMAGES?

Would it not be a fearful AGGRAVATION of the wrong, to be put off with the same kind of a life as that which he was wrongfully deprived of, and which would be just as liable to be lost again by the same painful process?

Man was JUSTLY deprived of life or he was NOT. Which was it? Could a God holy, just and good, do wrong? If not man was justly deprived of life!

So, what our writer says, represents the God who was just to man, as being unjust to himself, by unconditionally restoring that forfeited life, -as restoring it without repentance, and violating his own law, and practically teaching us that we may do the same with impunity, notwithstanding his declaration, that he would by "no means clear the guilty."

Without fear of successful contradiction we here and now say, that NOT A PARTICLE OF MAN'S GUILT could be removed by the substitute suggested by the writer, or any other. We challenge proof of pardon without the divine means to that end, being used by the guilty!

Practically we are asked to believe that God resorted to an expedient, or shift, when he found himself confronted unexpectedly with a great difficulty, some neat arrangement that would enable him to change his course toward man, while yet appearing to be carrying out his original purpose. It fairly well represents what a man might do in a strait: but God's ways are not as man's ways. He is never in a strait. He sees the end from the beginning,—lays his plans, and never changes them.

The writer says, "The death incurred by the transgression was eternal."

We reply:—God DIDN'T threaten man with eternal death. It surely would have been put on record as a warning for us, if he did.

The promise of a redeemer from death immediately after sinning, is absolute proof that God never threatened, or sentenced man to eternal death. Who can imagine the All Wise, All powerful One threatening eternal death, and as soon as sinners had to be dealt with, instituting means that would prevent it from being eternal?

The writer says:—"In this edict there was no limitation: it leaves the man eternally dead."

We reply, GOD KNEW better than our writer; when to show man that death was not of necessity eternal.

The writer has shown us what he would have done, if he had had the management of the matter. He would have shown them what he would do for them providing they sinned, and had to die, showing that he rather expected they would sin,—and, if they would not have taken this as the next thing to a premium for doing as they please, it would not have corresponded with man's subsequent history! How unlike the God who made the man?

He continues: "And the only possible chance for his release, was to have another life just as equivalent to the one which he had lost, put in its stead!"

Reader, does it not make you feel rather qualmish when you find a writer in one minute declaring that the death incurred was, ETERNAL, and in the next, discovers just one chance of a RELEASE from ETERNAL DEATH?

The writer goes on to say, "All the blood life there was, was in Adam and Eve.....And all the blood life to be restored through Christ, was in him who did no sin.....Therefore it must meet the demand of the law, and relieved the Adamic blood life from the death state, giving all of Adam's offspring a right to life from the dead," etc.

The writer has a wonderful faculty for making Scripture of his own whenever he finds it hard to unite the parts of his theory with words of the Spirit. The prominent therefore at the beginning of the article is the corner stone of the structure, but his therefore's also enter largely into the construction of the walls; the Scriptures of truth, however, are quoted, when they appear to favor his doctrine. Take Romans v. 18 for example,

"Therefore as by the offence of one judgment came upon all men to condemnation; even so by the righteousness of one the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life."

Here is supposed to be the free life, —the blood life unconditionally bestowed upon all the race. It certainly says, "By the righteousness of one the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life." Why did not the writer PROVE that that free gift was the gift of blood life?

We answer, because verses 15 and 16 show that the gracious GIFT in question, is one NOT universally bestowed through Jesus Christ, as death universally ensued from Adam's transgression. It says ver. 16: "And NOT as through one having sinned, is the free gift. For indeed, the sentence was from one [offence] to condemnation; but the gracious gift is from many offences to righteousness." Here the Adamic and Anointed states are contrasted. In the first a penalty was inflicted on the guilty for one offence; in the other free grace abounded notwithstanding many offences,—to put men into a process by which they can become RIGHTEOUS, not to restore mere blood life. "NOT as through one having sinned, is the free gift; for indeed the sentence was from one to condemnation; BUT the gracious gift is from MANY offences [individual offence] to RIGHTEOUSNESS, not to blood life. Note the contrast! It is not release from death through Adam merely to blood life, the apostle is speaking of, but release from their own sins, justification from their own sins,—and the first verse of the chapter tells on what principle they had been constituted righteous.

Says he, "Having been justified, therefore, BY FAITH, we have peace with God, through our Lord Jesus Christ," etc., "By grace are we saved through faith."

Our writer ought to be able to see (as he is wresting Rom. v. 18 from its connection, to support his theory, when the 17th verse distinctly shows that those who receive the gracious gift BEGIN IN LIFE merely through the Anointed Jesus. Not exist in blood life merely.

But lest he may dispute still further, we prove to him what the GIFT of God is; not gifts. In the very next chapter it says, "The wages of sin is death, but the GIFT of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord;" justification is the means to that end. There are no two salvations, as claimed by him.

1 Tim. iv. 10, is supposed to favor the doctrine we oppose. He quotes Greek freely and of course knows that the Greek word soter rendered savior in this passage,' means savior, and also preserver. He is aware that Savior—"Savior of all men," is not in harmony with the words of the Lord, "He that believeth not shall be condemned;" nor does it harmonize with the statement of the same Paul, who wrote Rom. i. 16, that "the GOSPEL of Christ is the power of God unto salvation to every one who believes it," and says nothing of others.

If our writer had proven before this, that his theory of the blood-life were true,—then he could consistently select the word savior in reference to preserver,—but not otherwise.

God does preserve all men, and causes the sun to shine on the evil and the good; but especially does he preserve believers. Says Job vii. 20, "O thou preserver of men,"—this embraces all men. Nehemiah ix. 6, declares him to be the preserver of the heavens, earth, seas and all things therein," and the Psalmist says, "O Lord, thou preservest man and beast." But where does the special preservation appear? Why he "preserveth the way of his saints." Prov. ii. 8. And "He preserveth all them that love him," Psa. cxv. 20; and in perfect agreement with 1 Tim. iv. 10 we read in Psa. xxxi. 23, "For the Lord preserveth the faithful." This is OVER and ABOVE the general preservation. And in the immediate context of this much used passage, "Savior of all men," we see that it is godliness that is "profitable for the life that now is, and that which is to come." We say with perfect confidence judging from 1 Tim. iv. that Paul knew nothing at all about our writer's second class salvation.

Further, the writer says, "If the blood life of Christ is not sufficient to restore all the blood life which was sacrificed in the transgression, it is not equally valuable with the first Adam's blood life. And as it is as valuable, it necessarily follows that it purchased back from death all the life that was lost in Adam's transgression, THEREFORE all mankind will be raised out of the death which they die in Adam." 1 Tim. ii. 5, 6 is then quoted to show there is a ransom for all, but not from the death following our actual sins. This teaches ransom for all, and not for all.

We think we never saw presumption equal to this! Without one Scriptural warrant, he expects us to believe what he can only sustain by his own therefores, or deductions from false premises. Having already proven that Christ had no blood with which to purchase mortal or blood-life after paying the debt of nature, and ratifying the covenant, "we refer the reader to past numbers, to refresh their memories, and then CONSIDER:—

1. That it is claimed that Christ's blood releases ALL from death in Adam.

2. That the blood of Christ does not release actual sinners.

3. That every one of the race has ACTUALLY SINNED.

4. That as all have actually sinned, unpardoned sinners are held in death, and this conflicts with paragraph 1.

From this it is seen that another attempt to improve upon God's plan has failed. And yet thousands without careful investigation embrace this self-destructive theory; because it deludes people with the idea that they can enjoy the pleasures of sin, and after all come off fairly well. A most dangerous doctrine. Are we not constantly blaming other religionists for depending upon isolated passages to establish their doctrine?

The writer is laboring for those in the congregation of the dead, and catering to the flesh of the living, (not intentionally we presume) but all the same he is catering to the flesh. The flesh will be glad of the baseless offers made, to have its fill of sin's pleasures, and after all attain to the great salvation. May he be granted repentance for going beyond the Lord's commission, if indeed he be in the Anointed, and preach life everlasting to those around him perishing for lack of knowledge. This has GOD'S SIGNATURE to it.

After a brief review of one more passage from our author we will close this series.

He says, "Now, as Christ had a blood life just equal in value to the life of the first Adam, he could, and did, lay it down to death, and left it there, to meet the demand of the law, that otherwise would hold man eternally in death," etc., etc.

He evidently thinks he has furnished Bible proof of these positive claims and assurances by Lev. xvii. 10 14 and Gen. ix. 3 6, but we leave our readers to look that up, and re read the article itself, if interested.

After quoting the above lines we were glad we did not know the writer. It is so wide of the truth that our plainness of speech respecting it may have been mistaken for personal feeling, had we been acquainted with him or her. But now, as to the supplement to the gospel of the kingdom. We distinctly hold that we cannot read about the blood-life salvation in the Scriptures, and therefore they are myths, inventions, plausible, but gratuitous, unproved assumptions. Of course if the initial fallacy be taken for granted the false conclusion has the appearance of sound logic; but if the initial fallacy be detected the whole argument falls to pieces.

Take notice that the blood or life of Christ, is treated as something distinct from the Christ as a whole, or his complete personality,—something treated abstractly. We hold that there could scarcely be a greater fallacy than that, because the life-principle in man, beasts and plants is the same, and no one can tell us what it is; we can only know that God is its source.

Does our writer want us to believe that this life principle from God, DIED; "and will eternally remain" in death to meet the demand of the law, and fully redeem the entire human family, sinners and all," as he claims? If so, has he not waded beyond his depth?

Do we not all live and move and have our being in God? Does he mean what he says? If so, does he know what he means? These are serious questions he ought to have asked himself, before he taught a theory and tried to palm it off upon God. We do not for a moment suppose he intended to do this. But the article proves he did it. God has not revealed it, and hence he is not to be charged with it

If he replies, that it is blood-life he is speaking of, or that it was the blood or life that was left in death, we do not see how that helps the matter. It was the breath of lives that caused man to become a living soul. And the Psalmist says respecting both man and beasts, "Thou takest away their breath THEY DIE;" it is not their breath that dies.

And now as to the blood; he truly says, "the life of the flesh is the blood. Does he mean by this that the blood which is the life of the flesh, died and was left in death, and will eternally remain there to meet the demands of the law?

If so, we are tempted to demand of him where he was religiously educated, and what kind of a text book he uses? The idea that blood, which is the life of the flesh, has an existence of its own, and can die, and remain dead, is too silly for anything; but when to this it is added that DEAD blood eternally remains in death or is held in death eternally, to meet the demands of the law, we have to give it up; but oh, say:—were they not easily met!!! Dead life, or dead blood!!!

We know the writer did not mean that at all. He must have said that, because he did not know what else to say. And what we are saying, is with the hope that he will after this, find out what he means before he says it, and not belog the minds of the simple worse than they are.

There are parts of the article which show that he is capable of doing better than that. If he had not been switched off on to a side track, he we would have known from the word of the Spirit that

It was himself that Christ sacrificed, Heb. ix. 25; and that

It was Christ that was offered, Heb. ix. 28, and that

It was his body which was given for us. Luke xxii. 19. And then he would not have made such egregious mistakes. He would have known, too, that the laying down of his life implied the whole of his organic and conscious existence, and not an entity that he could leave behind to all eternity.

Verily that teacher, who ever he may be, needs to be taught first principles awhile yet.

The glorious Lord from heaven said: "I am he that liveth, and was dead; and behold I AM ALIVE for evermore."

The writer should see from that that Christ's life never died; he was deprived of it.

Christ's blood never died, therefore Christ's life or blood cannot remain dead; therefore, Christ's dead life or dead blood does not meet the demand of the law; therefore, Christ's dead life or blood does not redeem the entire human family; therefore,

The modern supplemental gospellers will have to revise their wholesystem, because

Christ who died, did not remain DEAD, therefore he did not die a substitutionary death; therefore, on our writer's own principle, we have established evidence of his mistake. Besides that, he should know that [illegible] Adam the person that sinned, and not his life.

Adam the person that was condemned, not his life.

Adam in person that we are mortal in, not his life; and therefore

Adam the second, who died DEAD NOW, He died as a substitute, and will have to remain dead to meet the demands of the law, on our writer's own presentation.

The writer is different from the rest of us if he does not know to his sorrow that his mortality in Adam affects the whole physical constitution and hourly warns him of what is coming.

We, two months or so ago, had the effect of the teaching we oppose sadly illustrated. We had pointed out the way of life to a person, and it was thankfully received, but after realizing how it took him out of the world both religious and secular, it was too narrow a way for him, and so wrote to us, saying he may not become one of the little flock, but expected to be in the large one.

We close this series of articles with the fervent prayer that what of truth they contain may help some to keep in the narrow way of life, and be prepared to meet him who went away promising to come again; and also praying that whatever may have been said amiss might be forgiven through Jesus' dear name.

A World of Dirt.

When I first learned that this earth was to be the future heaven of God's redeemed ones, I was a very little girl, not more than four or five years old, and of course there were many problems that troubled my childish brain, as to how it was to be made like the garden of the Lord, "A thing of beauty and a joy forever." Among all these problems, the most troublesome was, what would become of the dirt? Our home was a rude log-cabin, with two living rooms, a low attic bedroom upstairs, and a clapboard pantry at one side of the porch. There were five of us children, and our continual tramping out and in, deposited a great deal of clay and sand on the neatly scrubbed floors. It floated up and covered the puncheons above, it hid on the joists, it intruded into the precious book-case. The mud that had been daubed into the cracks between the logs, stirred by restless mice, fell out and the dear, feeble mother was forced to battle constantly with broom, duster and scrubbing-brush, that our home might be a sweet, inviting one. How we dreaded the cleaning days, especially the ones when the puncheons above had to be taken up, the dirt knocked from each separately, the rafters swept and the displaced things moved back! We could not do much to help, and we could not stay indoors with the dirt falling down on our heads, so there was nothing else to do but to take refuge with nature, with her bubbling streamlets, her birds and her flowers.

Would it be this way in the kingdom? Would the blue and the yellow clays fasten themselves to our shoes and weight us down? Would we sink in quagmires? Would impassable roads keep us away from coveted pleasures? Would dismal swamps always be? Would unsightly lumber piles, forever spoil the loveliness of our towns? Would our country highways be as devoid of beauty as now?

I had not learned then the wonderful possibilities of a world of dirt; I had not seen the delightful parks of Chicago, New York and Philadelphia, with their hot-houses of tropical plants; had not read of terraced mountains, irrigated valleys, groves of orange and lemon trees; nor of the marvelous gardens of flowers that the hand of man has created here and there.

But little as I still know; small as has been the extent of my travels, I have grasped enough to see that no heaven is possible without material things. The orthodox world may not think so, and may imagine that by emigrating to some other planet they can get away from dirt, but the aerolites that fall through our atmosphere and find a resting place on our soil, prove that other worlds are formed of the same elements as our own.

It is impossible to conceive of a heaven without trees and flowers, and not a tree can grow, not a plant can spring up without the ever ubiquitous dirt. It is the sands, the clays, the mucks, with their varied relatives, that are God's store-houses of beauty of wealth and of life. Oxygen, hydrogen, nitrogen, silicon, carbon, iron, and over so many other elements may enter into their formation, but it does not matter, it is from these sands and clays that our grasses, our grains, our fruits, our cotton, our [illegible] Mo[illegible] wood, our stone, our brick and all animals—we ourselves included are "only a second-hand product of the soil." "Dust we are and unto dust we return." The same elements enter into our composition as those that form the soil, binding us to it in a sort of brotherhood, that we may not, cannot break. Sneer at this earth as man may it is his home, and it is good enough, too good for him in his sinful state.

Take away the curse, let thorns and briers no longer grow, remove all noxious weeds, let the earth bring forth her increase, and sin and pain and death be no more, would it not be a delightful place? No cyclones to spread devastation and death, no blizzards to darken the air and chill the form, no intense heat, no storms of sand, no awful floods, no sinking islands, no volcanoes, no earthquakes, it will be a heaven indeed, a fit abode for God's saved ones.

On Education.

The difference between "cramming" and "educating" is aptly set forth as follows: "Crammed" minds are filled with thoughts as a jug is filled with water. "Educated" minds contain knowledge as a vital force, ready to direct tongue, hand, foot, heart, when ever and wherever an opportunity for taking advantage of an incident or doing a proper thing presents itself. The crammed man is the man who has a pen, but does not know how to write; has an axe, but has not learned to chop. The educated man is the man who has a pen and knows how to use it; has an axe and has learned to swing it.

Poetry.

The Coming Day.

Oh, the day of joy that's coming,
When the reign of sin is o'er,
And on earth renewed and ransomed,
Paradise shall bloom once more.

Coming, coming, surely coming!
Christ shall reign as Prince of Peace,
And through all his vast dominion,
Strife and wrong and sorrow cease.

Right and truth and truth forever
Fill the world with love and light,
And the reign of wrong and error
Vanish in an endless night.

Eyes that wept shall shine with rapture,
Hearts once broken sing for joy,
And the peace that passeth telling
Fill each soul without alloy.

Table Talk.

"Watch ye, stand fast in the faith." To stand fast is to be strongly fortified, to remain firm, and we must be rooted and grounded in the truth. To be able to stand fast in the faith, we should often exhort each other to watch and be sober, and stand fast in the faith once delivered to the saints. Paul also exhorts to stand fast in one spirit, with one mind striving together for the faith of the gospel, for there is one faith, one Lord, one baptism. We were at one time alienated from the life of God through ignorance, our understanding being darkened, but now being enlightened, we need no longer be tossed to and fro and carried about by every wind of doctrine, for having the knowledge of the faith of the gospel, let us keep in memory this gospel which we have received, and wherein we stand, and by which we are saved. We ought to give the more earnest heed to the things we have learned, lest at any time we should let them slip, for how shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation. Peter says, I will not be negligent to put you always in remembrance of these things, though ye know them, yea, I think it meet as long as I am in this tabernacle to stir you up by putting you in remembrance, for we have not followed cunningly devised fables when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eye-witnesses of his majesty. It will help us greatly to read often the testimony of the disciples, and the sure Word of prophecy which came not in old time by the will of man, but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the holy spirit. When we think of the hope set before us in the gospel, the hope of soon seeing Jesus come to establish God's glorious kingdom on the earth, that righteousness may cover it as the waters cover the sea, when Jesus shall be King of kings and Lord of lords, and shall reign from the river to the ends of the earth, when he shall be the Wonderful, the Counsellor, the mighty Lord from heaven, when the sleeping saints shall be called to a glorious resurrection from the dead, and those that are alive shall be changed from mortal to immortality, and all be caught up together to meet him and be forever with him, joint heirs with him to all his honor and glory and power. It would seem that we would hardly need to be exhorted to watch and stand fast in the faith, but alas, although the spirit is willing the flesh is weak, and it is a constant warfare between the flesh and the spirit. Now the works of the flesh are idolatry, hatred, wrath, strife, heresies, envyings and such like and are to be overcome, and the fruits of the spirit cultivated, which are love, joy, peace, long suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance, and we will endeavor to walk worthy of God, who has called us to his kingdom and glory. We will not be ashamed of the gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth. And to aid us, we shall need to put on the whole armor of God, having our loins girt about with truth, and having on the breastplate of righteousness and our feet shod with the preparation of the gospel, that we may be able to withstand in the evil day, and having done all to stand. Oh; Church of God, built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ being the chief corner stone, let us continue to exhort to watchfulness, to continue in the faith, grounded and settled, and be not moved away from the hope of the gospel, be rooted and built up in him; not established in the faith, and when Jesus who is our life shall appear, we shall appear with him in glory. Amen.

Crystals and the Resurrection.

Chemicals, in crystallizing, take beautiful forms, but no two take the same form, and the crystal formed by one chemical can never be mistaken for that of another. The God of order made them so. There is no wild jumbling of matter in his works, no putting together of things by chance. And it must be so in the formation of our bodies. The elements that make us what we are, are put together differently in each separate person, and being so put together they cannot by any possibility form any other person in the universe. We cannot explain how it is, but we know that it is in this difference of formation that our individuality inheres. And when the trumpet sounds and the dead are called, the elements that have made up Abraham, or David, or Job, will not be mixed, for Job said, "Thou wilt call and I will answer. Thou wilt have a desire unto the works of thine hands." He was sure that in his own flesh "he should see God, should see for himself and his eyes behold, and not another." And we may be just as sure that it will not be a newly created man or woman that will take our place in the kingdom, but that we ourselves shall be there to know God to enjoy. As Christ was raised with the same body that he bore down into death, so will we also be raised with the same bodies,—not corruptible, not subject to death, but made incorruptible and immortal.

S. ROXANA WINE.

Obituary.

The funeral services of Roxana Jane DeMont were held at the home of her father, Charles DeMont, in Rochester, April 28, 1903.

Sister DeMont was a grandchild of George DeMont deceased, once well known to the brethren at Argos and Plymouth. Sister DeMont was a victim of that fell destroyer, consumption, dying at the age of seventeen. By the writer she was instructed in the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus the Christ and buried with him in baptism in the summer of 1902. Subject, "Life only in Christ." John v. 26, "For as the Father hath life in himself so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself." Future life is attainable in one of two ways, 1st either a prolongation or continuity of the present life, 2nd, or a restoration of life to the dead and translation to the living saints. The first is shown to be false, both by human observation and divine revelation. The second is made the basis of future life as attested by holy prophets, Christ and the apostles.

J. F. WAGONER.

Whether "the best fruit is plucked first" or not, many of us have learned from the school of affliction, that for such a sorrow as is here, so immeasurable and far reaching, silence, time and God are the only medicine.

If human beings can form a correct judgment of their fellow creatures, Marion Leroy Walker was surely a good boy. Good in every acceptation of the term. His cheerful willingness to work for others, his upright disposition and his gentle manners endeared him to us all. His manly bearing and honesty of heart often attracted the notice of teachers and associates. Naturally, we, his friends deeply grieve for one so dear and excellent, but we let hope and faith mingle with our sorrow and look to the future where sundered ties of earth are reunited. The gate that Loy passed through he will leave open for us to follow.

Marion Leroy Walker was born in Green Township, Marshall Co., Ind., June 20, 1888. He was the oldest child of Thomas M. and M. Amy Walker. In 1900 his parents moved to Plymouth, Ind., where Loy lived ten years. After his father's death which occurred three years ago last February, he with his mother and the remainder of the family moved to their present home in Union Township, Oct. 20, 1900, where he died with acute pleurisy, Apr. 11, 1903. There is one thing that softens the sharpness of such a bereavement as this. It is the reflection that Loy was pure and "of such is the kingdom of heaven." It is well with the child.

We live in a world where we must take the bitter with the sweet, where solemn shadows are continually falling upon our path—shadows that teach us the insecurity of all temporal blessings and warn us that here "there is no abiding stay."

Be brave, be good, be happy—this is life.
Loy teaches in death, we teach in life.
We should not sit for the dead
But bravely live for [illegible]
[illegible]

The above is the notice which Sister Walker handed the writer for the funeral of her much loved boy, Apr. 18. It not only indicates the things relative to the life and death of Loy, but also reveals much of the comfort and consolation which the Christian enjoys in such trying hours. Surely the hope of the Christian is "an anchor of the soul both sure and steadfast." Oh that blessed day of resurrection! What latent joys await that day. What glories to be revealed when the shouts of the Lord shall call from the dusty tomb those who sleep in him. Surely the whole creation groans awaiting the revelations of that morn. May the joys of this future triumph continue to comfort our esteemed Sister as she continues bravely living for the living.

F. L. AUSTIN.

Brother and Sister D. E. Vanvactor of Argos, Ind., buried an infant son on the evening of April 21, 1903. The fond wish of their hearts was seemingly about to be realized, when they were given to remember that death ever awaits the children of man. May their anticipated joys which were turned to grief be realized with even greater love in "the ages to come," through "the exceeding riches of his grace" in his kindness toward us through Christ Jesus.

When we see a precious blossom,
That we tended with such care,
Ruddy taken from our bosom,
How our hearts almost despair.

Round his little grave we linger,
Till the setting sun is low,
Feeling all our hopes have perished,

Dear household of like precious faith:

It is a long time since I have written to the dear paper more than to renew my subscription, and I can never do without the paper, for we are isolated from all of like precious faith. Except the funeral sermon of my son preached by Bro. Foore for my own dear son, two years ago, I have not heard more in almost eleven years. We are well as usual at present and although we have had a great deal of trouble the last five years, I thank the Lord that it was not any worse. My prayer is that the Lord will soon come.

Yours in hope.

The 47th Annual Conference of the Church of God in Michigan, will be held (D. V.) at Dutton, Kent County, on Thursday evening, June 4, 1903, and continue over the following Sunday.

These meetings have been held so long that they have become an established fact in the minds of the brethren, and they expect the meeting as surely as the time comes. And then it seems we get so much real encouragement and enjoyment from them, it seems like a family reunion, where we can enjoy the blessed communion of those of like precious faith, so that we feel we would be lost without them, for from these gatherings we derive much strength if we come with the right spirit. All who can come should make a special effort to be there.

A programme will appear later.

Let us remember the words of Paul, in Heb. x. 25: "Not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is; but exhorting one another, and so much the more, as ye see the day approaching."

Dutton is situated on the Michigan Central R. R. ten miles south east of Grand Rapids.

The Quarterly Conference of the Churches of God in the State of Indiana, will convene at Antioch Church, five miles south of Plymouth, and three miles north of Argos, at 10 o'clock a. m. on Saturday, June 13, 1903, and continue over Sunday.

The "June Meeting" at old Antioch is a familiar term, not only to the faithful in the state of Indiana, but in many other states. Fond recollections cluster about this place. It has been the gathering place of brethren and sisters of the Abrahamic faith for many years. We make this call knowing that many are looking forward to this annual feast of spiritual good things.

Let us come together, brethren and sisters, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, for the edifying of one another in love. Let it be understood that we shall, as much as practicable, remain at the Church during the entire day on Saturday and Sunday, so that we may spend as much of the time as is possible in Christian fellowship.

A programme will be prepared and published later.

MRS. LYDIA RAILSBACK, Sec.

If you are abiding in Christ you are reproducing yourself in thousands of instances when you are wholly unaware of it. Out of the personal relationship between the soul and Christ come the fruits of holy living. The vine does not bear fruit of itself; it bears fruit through its branches. Our unconscious influence thus becomes far more fruitful than our conscious influence. In the last great day many will bewail that they have accomplished so little, and looking at the scanty results, will say, "When saw we thee hungry, and fed thee? or athirst, and gave thee drink?" to find that unconsciously their lives had abounded in fruits well pleasing in the Master's sight. It is from such holy lives as this that is derived our Master's highest joy. It is when the whole body of Christ becomes instinct with his Spirit, that the world is made conscious of his divine headship over the church.—Bishop Hendrix

A Word of Appreciation.

Some time ago I asked the brotherhood through THE RESTITUTION how many copies of the pamphlet "The Reasons of My Withdrawal from the Evangelical Association," would be wanted. Letters came from all parts of the country, some containing money stating the number of copies desired, so that a second edition of 1000 was printed. I wish to state that this edition is nearly exhausted, there being only about 150 left. Those wishing copies better send their orders early, as they will soon be gone. I desire, by this means, to thank the brethren for their encouraging words and financial help. Trusting that the seed will fall in good soil and produce fruit unto eternal life. 28 pages, at 5 cents per copy. A. H. ZILMER, Plymouth, Ind.

NOTICE,

To the Persons especially, or to any of the brethren.

It is the desire of many that Bro. S. J. Lindsay conduct a Bible School for at least ten days prior to the beginning of the next annual Conference to be held at Oregon, Ill., for the purpose of Bible drills or systematic Bible instruction. We all need such Normal instruction, and this letter is to all, and especially to those who may be missed by circular letter.

The plan is for those who take the work to take up lodging in the Conference hall, and do their own cooking and furnishing, thus making their stay as inexpensive as they please.

Oregon is a very pleasant city, located on the banks of Rock River, and an ideal place in leisure hours for an outing.

No tuition will be charged, as Bro. Lindsay has offered his services free for this time. Let us know in good season if you will come. For further particulars address the undersigned, Chairman Evangelist Committee, Illinois State Conference, at Lanark, Ill.

"The World to Come and the Life Everlasting," is the name of a book of over 400 pages. The title page describes it as a Symposium of Writers on eternal life from the Bible Basis, and is selected from the works of a goodly number of Bible Students who have written during the past few years. It is compiled and published by Bro. John O. Woodruff, of Elizabeth, N. J., of whom it may be ordered. The paper and print are excellent, as is the durable cloth-binding. The price is $1.00, and considering the work as a whole it is very low, and we urge all who need a book on this subject to procure one without delay.

Scriptures Opened.

A third edition of the above named work is just out, and ready for delivery. This book has been before our readers so long now that its worth is well known. The author is Robert Ashcroft. The price for this edition is put low so that the brethren and sisters can get it to lend to honest enquirers after truth. We hope there are a few who have not turned their ears from the truth to fables. The book will speak for itself in its unfoldings of the purposes and plans of Jehovah, regarding the near future of the earth and its inhabitants. All should be interested in these truths, and those who have never read this book will have a feast. Price 65 cents post paid. Send to this office for them, or orders can be sent to J. O. Woodruff, Elizabeth N. J.

Immortality of Soul.

them. It almost chills the blood in ones veins to read such blasphemy and cruelty attributed to a God of justice, love and mercy. It is a pleasure to call the attention of your readers to the contrast of such teaching with that of eminent men and noted scholars, whose minds were enlightened by the Word of truth. Dr. Whedon a Methodist commentator says, "The wages of sin—the hire which the master sin pays to his servants is death, and this death the antithesis of eternal life, and measured by it in duration is eternal death—death that has no resurrection."

Dr. Watson the Methodist commentator says in his Instites Vol. 2, "Some suppose * * the soul is naturally immortal, which is contradicted by the Bible, in which our immortality as a gift dependent on the will of the giver."

Olshausen says, "The Bible knows not either the expression immortality of the soul, or the modern doctrine of immortality * * The doctrine of the immortality of the soul, and the name are alike unknown in the entire Bible."

Dr. Proudfoot remarks, "That best and brightest of revelations * * (the Bible) announces not an immortal soul, but an immortal man" (at the resurrection).

Martin Luther said: "I permit the Pope to make articles of faith for himself, and his faithful, such as the soul is immortal with all those monstrous opinions found in the Roman dung hill of decretals." Archdeacon Blackburn of the Church of England says, "All those fine spun notions of immortality of the soul, and all the artificial deductions from that principle, teach nothing but the art of blowing scholastic bubbles."

Such are the deliverances of men of note in their day, who evidently understood whereof they spoke, and who were not afraid to express their opinion. I esteem it an honor to be found in such good company.

Mr. Price says, "Man can be spiritually dead and while yet physically alive" and cites Rom. viii. 6; Rev. iii. 1; 1 Tim. v. 16; Eph. ii. 11, as proof. We take no exceptions; they have no bearing on the question under consideration has man an immortal soul, or is he by nature immortal? While the passages he cites in Rev. ii. 11; xx. 6; xx. 44; xxi. 8, teach the final destruction of all to whom they refer, if the English language can teach it.

Refering to Mal. iii. 4; Psa. xxxvii. 20 and Oba. 16, cited by Mr. Thomas, Mr. Price says of Mal. iii. 4, "It is not a prophecy of the final judgment, and no exegete so takes it except by accommodation." It matters not whether it applies to the final judgment, or the judgment of the Jewish "cosmos," or world which ended at the destruction of Jerusalem, the facts portrayed will be the same, the destruction of the wicked, and glory, honor and life for the righteous. Of Psa. xxxvii. 20 he says, "The context does not warrant such an application as Mr. Thomas has given it, "I am much surprised at this remark, and will quote the context which most emphatically warrants the construction given the passage by Mr. Thomas. "Such as be blessed of him shall inherit the earth, and they that be cursed of him shall be cut off." The learned Bishop Horsely and biblical critic, translates the passage, "The rebellious shall be destroyed together, the posterity of the wicked shall be cut off." Dr. Kennicott a Hebrew scholar, in his note on this passage, says, "The wicked and all his race shall be destroyed."

Mr. Price closes his remarks on these passages, "But if Mr. Thomas insists that they do warrant the construction he has put upon them, I shall let them stand with all others of like character which he may bring, and place over against them Christ's own words." Indeed, what can Mr. Price do but let them stand? They are plain statements of the Bible which no fallacious reasoning can set aside. As God says by Isaiah, "He that hath my Word let him speak my Word faithfully, what is the chaff to the wheat, saith the Lord."

We concur with Mr. Price that "a man may be spiritually dead while physically alive." The passage quoted in this connection, so far as they have any bearing on the subject show plainly that only the righteous have eternal or aonion life. For example 1 John v. 12. He that hath the Son hath life—"zoe"—eternal life, and he that hath not the Son hath not eternal life. The life referred to here is zoe eternal life, and not psuche animal life.

Surely a man must be mentally blind that does not see that Rev. ii. 11; xx. 6; xx. 14 and xxi. 8 emphatically teach that the wages of sin is death, not spiritual death but absolute destruction of being—a death from which there is no redemption—that the judgment depicted is final. With one citation we will pass them without comment. "He that overcometh shall inherit all things, but the fearful and unbelieving * * * shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death."

Again Mr. Price says in reference to the Greek word aionion, that "Mr. Thomas in order to support his side says that "nephesh" in Hebrew must mean the same thing and is used with reference to man and beast alike, but the Greek word aionion can mean whatsoever he chooses in order to support his side." "Of the adjective aionion Matt. xxv. 46, he says it means simply 'a period of time' according to lexicographers and students, but my Liddle & Scott says it means eternal."

This is a misrepresentation, I hope it was not intentional. The Hebrew word "nephesh" is applied to man or beast as stated by Mr. Thomas, and never signifies soul or spirit as the spiritual part of man, but is expressive of creatures endowed with animal life in any of its varied gradations. Mr. Thomas made no claim that the word aionion "can mean whatsoever he chooses in order to support his side," neith r does he say himself, nor claim that lexicographers and students say that it means "simply" a period of time, but he does say that it means "a period of time" which is correct.

Mr. Price continues, "My Liddle & Scott says it means eternal." My Liddle & Scott says of "aion" the noun from which the adjective aonion is formed, means, "life time, a space, or period of time, a generation, an age, forever." The adjective aionion, lasting, eternal. My Greek and English lexicon by Thomas Dix Hincks, professor of Hebrew, gives the meaning of the noun aion, a period of time, an age, eternity. Aionion, eternity, the times since the beginning of the world. My Greek and English New Testament, the Emphatic Diaglott, gives the meaning of aion, an indefinite period of time, past, present or future, which in the common version is often improperly rendered world, always, forever. The adjective form of the word aionios is found 75 times and is applied to zoe-life, 45 times. Eternal or everlasting as generally understood is an improper translation of aionios. Being an adjective and derived from the noun aion age, it cannot properly go beyond, or rise higher in its meaning. Mr. Price must have known this when he accused Mr. Thomas of making the word aionion mean whatsoever he chose in order to support his side.

It is a well known fact that aion and aionion when used with relation to time, are governed as to duration by that to which they are applied. Mr. Price is quite correct in saying that "aionion is predicated of God, of Christ, of his Word, of true believers of life, of punishment," because in their nature they are all deathless or unending, and therefore, or because of that, the word means eternal; hence when predicated of the life, zoe of true believers it is eternal life, and predicated of the punishment, which is death of the finally impenitent, it is eternal punishment, because there is no abrogation or release. But when predicated of that which cannot live or continue forever, the word is limited by the duration of that to which it is applied; therefore there is no danger that Mr. Prices' "Aionion God will sometime cease to be, or that the aionion inheritance is a myth. Even our word forever does not either in the Bible or common usage mean unending, but is limited by that to which it is applied. Jonah says, "The earth with her bars was about me forever," yet it was only three days.

But Mr. Price is not satisfied unless the wicked live forever, or have eternal life as well as the righteous, but the wicked must be tormented, and so cites Matt. xxv. 46 which reads, "And these shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal." Paul says, "The wages of sin is death," and Mr. Price must have overlooked the fact, that our laws inflict death as the greatest punishment for heinous crimes, and so death is the everlasting punishment spoken of in the passage in Matt. for the reason there is no release, and in harmony with this, we are told that "all the wicked will he destroyed," punished with everlasting destruction. As the Bible cannot contradict itself everlasting punishment cannot mean everlasting torment. But let us examine this passage a little more carefully. The Greek word "kolasis" rendered punishment, in this passage is derived from koluzoo, which signifies to cut off, as pruning a tree, or cutting off from life, as a branch cut off from a tree is cut off from life and perishes; therefore my Greek and English New Testament, the Emphatic Diaglott, renders this passage, "These (the wicked) shall go forth to the aionion cutting off, but the righteous to aionion life, thus preserving the force and beauty of the antithesis; the righteous go to the life of the age, the wicked to the cutting off of the age.

In reference to the immortality of the soul, Mr. Price says, "Let us look at this question from a standpoint other than the Bible." We will follow him for a little. Parkhurst, a distinguished Hebrew lexicographer, says, "As a noun, Nephes has been supposed to signify the spiritual part of man, or what we commonly call his soul. I must for myself confess that I can find no passage where it undoubtedly has this meaning. Though it is found in the Hebrew text four hundred and seventy-five times."

McCulloch says in his able work on the Credulity of the Scriptures, "There is no word in the Hebrew language that signifies either soul or spirit in the technical sense in which we use the terms as implying something distinct from the body."

Mureaux, the historian says, "Not a single one of the many sciences in which we surpass the Blackfoot Indians, can throw the smallest light on the state of the soul after the animal life is extinct. In truth, all the philosophers, ancient and modern, who have attempted without the light of Revelation to prove the immortality of man, from Plato down to Franklin appear to us to have failed deplorably. Moses Stuart says, The light of nature can never scatter the darkness in question. The light has never yet sufficed to make even the question clear to any portion of our benighted race whether the soul of man be immortal." Such are the expressions of learned and noted men of the past, yet Mr. Price is bold enough to affirm that "science and reason say that the soul can exist forever either in joy or in torment." Let us turn away from such fallacy to the Word of God.

The Rev. H. N. Wollaston Church of England clergyman delivered a sermon in Trinity church, East Melbourne on the punishment of the wicked in which he said, "The doctrine of the eternal life of pain and suffering for the human family is based entirely upon the belief that the human soul is created immortal, incapable of death and destruction. I affirm without fear of contradiction that this popular and common belief in the immortality of the human soul is not supported by a single text, or a single line or word in the whole Bible, from the first of Genesis to the last of Revelations. I will go further than this, and say advisedly, that we have overwhelming evidence in the pages of Holy Writ that the human soul is not by creation immortal—that it is not the condition of his being that man should live forever in either heaven or hell." The dogma is of Platonic origin. Plato taught that the human soul could not die, or be destroyed. The first Christian writer that introduced it into the church was Clement Athenagorus, a Greek by birth, who died about A. D. 200. As I have said, Plato was among the first, if not the first, Greek philosopher who taught it, and Archbishop Whately says, It does not appear that the heathen philosophers, the originators of this dogma of inherent immortality had much success in impressing it upon the great masses of the people. The lamentation of a Greek poet over his friend which I subjoin strikingly illustrates what I have been saying.

The meanest herb we trample in the field,
Or in the garden nurture, when its leaf
In Autumn dies, foreclades another Spring,
And from brief slumber wakes to life again.
Man wakes no more,—man peerless, valiant, wise
Once chilled to death, sleeps hopeless in the dust,
A long, unbroken, never-ending sleep

The Greek poet felt this and not understanding that Jesus Christ abolished death and brought life and immortality to light through the gospel for those who seek for it, he naturally believed that man "once chilled to death, sleeps hopeless in the dust, a long unbroken, never-ending sleep."

In conclusion, I will say, Let no man imagine himself immortal, for God only hath immortality, but those who seek for it in his appointed way he will bring back from the death state to eternal life at the return of Christ, and associated with him will reign as kings and priests on the earth (see Rev. v. 10) in the kingdom of God during the Messianic age; then the tabernacle of God shall be with men and he will dwell with them and they shall be his people * * And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes, and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain, for the former things are passed away. Rev. xxi. 3, 4.

Popular Lectures by M. Joblin.

Brethren and Sisters, Have you loved ones who think sincerity will save them? Have you friends who think they worship acceptably while ignorant of God's promises? Have you acquaintances with false hopes of heaven, or who believe themselves immortal by nature, or who think their sins are forgiven, although they are ignorant of the Law of Pardon, or who have no use for a God who consigns sinners to Eternal Torment, and are ignorant of Jehovah's beneficent purpose to fill the earth with his glory and bestow Eternal Life upon believers of the Gospel, so they can enjoy it for ever? If so, send for Popular Lectures by Bro. Joblin; entitled:—"The Kingdom of God;" "Old Mother Earth to Be Born Again;" "Strangers from the Covenants of Promise;" "Vain Worship;" "No Immortality Out of Christ;" "Hope Begotten by the Resurrection of Christ;" "God's Love and Solicitude for Mankind;" and "What Shall We Do to be Saved?"

Poetry.

He's Coming.

O watchman on the mountain height,
Proclaim the coming day;
Behold the spires of golden fire
Point upward for away.

O watchman, bid the sleeping church
Awake, arise, and pray;
The heavenly Bridegroom soon will come;
And now is on his way.

Coming, yes, he's coming,
The Day-spring from on high;
Coming, yes, he's coming,
The hour is drawing nigh.

Coming, yes, he's coming,
Let all the ransomed sing;
The hills are bright with holy light,
All hail the coming King.

Christ in the Revelation. No. 6.

To the church in Thyatira our Lord represents himself as the "Son of God, who hath his eyes like unto a flame of fire, and his feet like fine brass." A flame of fire illuminates every thing in its presence. The same is true of the eyes of our Lord by virtue of the Father having engraven in him perfect vision symbolized by seven eyes. Zech. iii. 9.

"And his feet like fine brass." Brass is an alloy of copper and zinc; copper being the larger constituent. It is claimed, and seemingly with good reason, that copper is the right translation of the word rendered brass in most places in the Bible. See Deut. viii. 9, "A land whose stones are iron, and out of whose hills thou mayest dig brass." Brass being a compound composition is not a natural product, but copper is. Therefore it is copper that is said to be dug out of the hills. Its extreme ductility made its application almost universal among the ancients.

In strength and usefulness consists the likeness of this metal to the feet of our Lord, and in the mirror-like beauty of the metal when "burned in a furnace." "How beautiful are the feet of them that preach the gospel of peace, and bring glad tidings of good things?" Rom. x. 15. This is more abundantly applicable to our Lord than to any other one of our race.

How beautiful were those feet of the Master to the bereaved widow of Nain, and to blind Bartimeus. In his footsteps the blind receive their sight and the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, the deaf hear and the dead are raised up. And the poor have the gospel preached to them. How beautiful will be his feet when "He shall judge the people with righteousness, and the poor with judgment." When, The mountains bring peace to the people, and the little hills by righteousness .....and when he shall break in pieces the oppressor. But the strength of the metal represented in the feet will appear when he goes forth as the Lord's Anointed, as predicted in the ode of Habakkuk. "And his brightness was as the light; he had horns [illegible] his hand (symbols of power) and there was the hiding of his power. Before him went the pestilence, and burning coals went forth at his feet. Thou wentest forth for the salvation of thy people, for salvation with thine Anointed. Thou didst cleave the rivers of the earth. Margin of verse 9, Thou didst walk through the sea with thine horses, through the heap of deep waters."

Fault is found with the church, (v. 20), Because thou sufferest that woman Jezebel, which calleth herself a prophetess, to teach and seduce my servants to commit fornication, and to eat things sacrificed unto idols. The original Jezebel, the wife of Ahab, and daughter of Ethbaal, king of the Zidonians, is the prototype of the modern Jezebel. The germ of this Thyatiran Jezebel, was the lying apostles of the church of Ephesus; and the blasphemers of Smyrna were of the same root; and by the time of the church of Pergamos they were joined with the State. Thus committing spiritual fornication, and were able to put to death, (Antipas) the faithful witness, [illegible] they also eat things sacrificed unto idols; proving that they are the same stock as Jezebel of Thyatira. The chronology of the death of those witnesses who Antipas represents, is plainly seen by the orthodox edicts of Theodocius A. D. 380 Gibbon Vol. III. p. 81. Thus, "Let us believe the sole deity of the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost, under an equal Majesty and a pious Trinity. We authorize the followers of this doctrine to assume the title of Catholic Christians; and we judge that all others are extravagant madmen, we brand them with the infamous name of heretics." Here we have the mark of orthodoxy, (the mark of the beast) all that refuse it are heretics. This is not only so with the mother of harlots, but holds good with her daughters. On account of the rejection of this doctrine of the Trinity, Maximus was the first among the Christian princes who shed the blood of his Christian subjects on account of their religious opinions. A. D. 385. Gibbon Vol. III. p. 93. By the sentence of the Praetorian praefect seven persons were tortured, condemned and executed. The first of these was Priscillian himself, bishop of Avila in Spain; who adorned the advantages of birth and fortune by the accomplishments of eloquence and learning. Two presbyters and two deacons accompanied their beloved master in his death, which they esteemed as a glorious martyrdom; and the number of religious victims was completed by the execution of Latronia, a poet, who rivaled the fame of the ancients; and of Eucherein a noble matron of Bordeaux, the widow of the orator Delphidius. Gibbon Vol. III. p. 94. As an illustration of how Jezebel is mentioned in the message to the church of Thyatira, I will give a quotation from Barnes on the Revelation. In 1532 after the Reformation had broken out, we find Pope Hadrian saying, in a missive addressed to the Diet at Nuremberg, "The heretics Huss and Jerome are now alive again in the person of Martin Luther." On the same principle Jezebel is alive again in the Papacy. The truth of which will appear by examining the likeness between the two Jezebels. In the first instance Jezebel had all the reckless and licentious habits of an oriental queen, and her marriage with Ahab was in violation of the law of God by Moses; and marks a turning point in the history of Israel in the direction of apostasy from God to idolatry. The same is true of the Jezebel of Thyatira, who in the days of Constantine was united to the state, and thereby committed spiritual fornication, and soon became a worshiper of idols. Said union of church and state was a turning point in the development of the apostasy; and greatly accelerated her downward course and soon laid the foundation for the appearance of the man of sin, in error, darkness and superstitution.

In the second place Jezebel slew the prophets of the Lord, in her zeal to establish the worship of Baal. 1 Kings xviii. 18. In like manner the modern Jezebel has declared the true worshipers heretics, and has slain them by the thousands. In the third place there is a likeness between the two Jezebels; when Ahab wanted the vineyard of Naboth, Jezebel in Ahab's name wrote letters saying to the elders and nobles, "Proclaim a fast, and set Naboth on high among the people; and set two men, sons of Belial, before him, saying, Thou didst blaspheme God and the king. And carry him out, and stone him, that he may die." 2 Kings xxi. 9-10. In like manner the modern Jezebel branded as heretics and blasphemers those that refused to do her bidding; and then turned them over to the state officials to be executed, and confiscated their property.

Again there is a parallel or a likeness between the two as type and ante-type. Jezebel died a violent death as foretold by the prophet, being thrown down from an upstairs window by the order of Jehu, and was trampled to death under the feet of his horses. And in the Rev. xvii. and xviii. we have the account of the judgment of the harlot—modern Jezebel in whom was found the blood of the prophets and of the saints. In their lives and in their deaths, they both are alike. See Rev. xviii. 21, "And a mighty angel took up a stone like a great mill stone, and cast it into the sea, saying, Thus with violence shall that great city Babylon be thrown down, and be found no more at all." Also Jezebel was not found when sought for, because she was eaten by the dogs. By verse 23 we learn that Jezebel has children; and in chapter xvii. the scarlet woman is said to be, "The mother of harlots."

Wisdom of Seirach.

PROLOGUE.

Since there are many and great things that have been given us through the law and the prophets and those who followed after them, for which it is befitting to praise Israel for chastening-instruction and wisdom, and since it is befitting that not only those who read should become exact in their knowledge of them, but that lovers of learning should be able to be truly useful to those outside both as readers and writers, my grandfather Jeesous who had given himself in more than an ordinary way to the reading of the law and the prophets and the rest of the books of the fathers, and had made himself proficient by sufficient exercise in them, was led to compose in writing some of the things pertaining to chastening-instruction and wisdom, that lovers of learning and those who had become devoted to these things might thereby be promoted through the lawful way of living.

Be exhorted then with true thought and attention to do the reading, and to make due allowance for some of the readings which have been laboriously made, in respect to which we may think that they do not have the same force according to the interpretation; for these things when spoken with their own Hebrew words do not have the like forceful expression also when led over into another tongue; and not only these writings, but also the law and the prophets and the rest of the books have no little difference when spoken in their own tongue.

For when I had arrived in Egypt in the thirty-eighth year of the reign of Energetes (benefactor) as king, and had spent some time with them and found no little difference of chastening-instruction, I set myself to bring to bear some most necessary dispatch and love of labor in translating this book, and did accordingly bring to bear much wakefulness and exact knowledge during that interval of time in conducting the book to an end and giving it out also for those who desire to be lovers of learning in their sojourning, though already furnished with the ethical usages to pass their lives in law.

INTRODUCTORY COMMENT TO WISDOM OF SEIRACH.

While I consider portions of this book oracular, and while this seems to have been the thought also of the ancient Israelites in making the book canonical, much of it does not rise higher than what we now denominate ethical instruction in the every day affairs and walks of life; but it is so well thought out and fundamental that very much of it is applicable today as when first written and published for the conduct of the individual in his relations to the family the state and God's universal kingdom of righteousness. The general reader will therefore be profited, I think, in a careful consideration of this old book of wisdom that has so long lain in the dust of uncanonical obscurity and theological prohibition.

WISDOM OF SEIRACH. CHAPTER 1.

1. All wisdom is from the Lord and with him it is forever.

2. The sand of the seas and drops of rain and the days of an aeon-age who will number them?

3. The height of the heavens and the breadth of the earth and an abyss and depth and wisdom who will trace them out?

4. Before them all was wisdom generated and an understanding that is of thoughtfulness is from an aeon-age.

6. Wisdom's root to whom hath it been revealed? And who hath comprehended its subtilties?

8. One is wise, exceedingly to be feared, the Lord seated upon his throne.

9. He generated it (wisdom) and knew and numbered it and poured it out upon all his works.

10. With all flesh is it and he hath supplied it to those who love him.

11. Fear of the Lord is a glory and boast and rejoicing and a victorious crown of gladness.

12. Fear of the Lord will delight one's heart and will give rejoicing and joy and length of days.

13. For the one who feareth the Lord it will be well in last experiences and in a day of his end he will find favor.

14. A beginning of wisdom is to fear the Lord, and with faithful ones it hath been generated for them in the womb.

15. And in the midst of men hath he laid a foundation for its nest for an aeon-age and it will have been entrusted to their seed.

16. To fear the Lord is a satiety of wisdom and he intoxicated them with its fruits.

17. All its house will he fill with its very desirable things and its receptacles from its generic products.

18. A crown of victory is fear of the Lord that maketh peace to flourish and healings health.

19. And he saw and numbered it; he showered out exact knowledge and understanding's way of knowing; and he exalted the glory of those who get control of it.

20. Wisdom's root is to fear the Lord and its branches length of days.

22. Unjust passion will not be able to be justified; for the inclination of one's passion is his smiting.

23 Until due time will a forbearing man refrain, and later rejoicing will yield to him.

24. Until due time will he hide his words, and lips of faithful ones will discourse his understanding.

25. A parable of exact knowledge is in treasures of wisdom; but respect for God is an abomination to an obdurate sinner.

26. Hast thou longed for wisdom, watch to keep in mind commandments, and the Lord will supply thee with it.

27. For fear of the Lord is wisdom and chastening-instruction; and that which satisfieth him is faith and meekness.

28. Do not distrust fear of the Lord, and do not come unto him with a double heart.

29. Do not make answer with mouths of men, and give heed to thy lips.

30. Do not exact thyself lest thou fall, and lead upon thy soul dishonor, and the Lord uncover thy hidden thoughts and cast thee down in the midst of a synagogue, because thou hast not come with fear of the Lord, and thy heart is full of deceit.

COMMENT.

While there is a similarity between this book and the one of Salomoon that we have been considering, there is observable at once a marked difference in the way the two writers treat and speak of wisdom. Salomoon is inclined to personify it, while Seirach is inclined as we moderns are to treat it as an abstract principle.

The weakness of all mediaval theology has been its tendency to interpret a trope or a metaphor literally and to exalt an attribute like wisdom or truth or the expression or the expression of it in "the word" for instance into a person. God as a person is more than all his attributes and so is any person; for it is in personality that they all inhere and from which they proceed. Attributes and powers may and do proceed from personality or a person; but personality itself never. The glory of any and all personality is its immutability. And it is in this and this alone that immortality inheres and becomes possible and probable to the finite mind. While revelation iterates and reiterates the mortality of the soul, it sustains the idea of man's immortality not by perpetuating the soul or natural life, but by reincorporating the ego or the person in a new life, another and higher in its functions; but the soul life and the spiritual life are both as much in this body of flesh at the same time as analogously the caterpillar and the butterfly are in the cocoon where the caterpillar dies and whence the butterfly emerges.

In the accounting of God the "old man" has died already, but only in the accounting not in reality. Hence the individual struggle that Paul makes so vivid in "when I would do good evil is present with me." We are learning in this experience ourselves to account the higher spiritual life as God accounts it even to the extent of utter abnegation and martyrdom if necessary to gain it. "In Christ" as the new generic father or "last Adam" and as a free gift of grace we have been begotten and our ego or personality is in the new germinal life, the growth of which we can promote or hinder as we can the natural or soul life. With Christ we ultimately die to the soul life and are buried (unless translated) and are "awakened" or "rise" with the new spiritual body or are reincorporated analogously and as truly as the butterfly is a reincorporation of the caterpillar. We are clothed now with justification and at the resurrection "ependued" or "clothed upon" with our spiritual body and thus our immortality is "perfected" or made complete.

Let us see if this "wisdom of Seirach" will in our day and generation promote our growth in grace and spiritual life.

UNITY.—PSALM CXXXIII.

"Behold, how good and how pleasant for brethren to dwell together in unity."

Behold, see, look, consider. How good, how pleasant. It is not merely good and pleasant. We are called upon to take particular notice that there is a superior degree of the good and the pleasant. It is not only good and pleasant to behold, to look upon, to consider deeply, but it is beyond the ordinary good and pleasant for the brethren who participate. It is the precious ointment. It is smooth, soothing, cooling, healing. The precious ointment made the dry, stiff, stubborn, straggling hair soft, pliable and fragrant. Brethren living daily, according to the gospel of the kingdom, denying natural desires, living soberly, righteously, godly, "keeping the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace." Such brethren present to the onlooker a good and pleasant sight.

THE WISDOM OF THE GOSPEL.

The gospel wisely used and administered, enables the brethren to dwell together in good and pleasant unity, and like the desirable effect of the ointment on the hair and beard, such unity is peaceable, gentle, easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality and hypocrisy.

Unity, good and pleasant unity among brethren is like the dew on Hermon, and the dew that descended on the mountains of Zion. It purifies, it refreshes, it promotes growth, it strengthens, it cheers, it beautifies the brethren, it answers the fervent affectionate prayer of our blessed Lord in John xvii. Unity good and pleasant among brethren glorifies God. Unity is the bulwark of the Church of God, the pillar and ground of the truth. Brethren dwelling together in unity enable God to work in them to will and to do his good pleasure, without murmurings and disputes, blameless and harmless, the sons of God,—shining as lights in the world, holding forth the Word of life. Brethren, beloved in the Lord, let us desire and strive to dwell in unity for it is good and pleasant. Unity is not only good and pleasant to behold, but it is a power, it commands the attention of those who look, it commands respect, it demands, so to speak, and obtains

The Restitution.

"The Restitution of all things Which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets."

VOLUME LII. Read PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, MAY 20, 1903. NUMBER 19.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to the end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

a place, a recognition, it has an influence, a godly influence on those who come in contact with it, it has a power far and wide among men, and as united brethren in Christ Jesus, we have a power with God and a power from God, indeed the unity is good and pleasant because it is a union of the living and true God, his Son the Lord Jesus Christ, and the Church of God. Brethren dwelling in unity command the blessing of the Lord, even life forevermore. Therefore, Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity.

P. NEILL.

UNITY.

From the word "unity" we take our lesson for this Easter morning. What does the word, unity, mean? United. United, and in what should we be united? Where there is unity there is strength. In many things where there is unity there are great sins committed, which we see daily. Where wicked men combine and make wicked devices come to pass. But we take this word from the Word of God, and in it we should be firmly united. It is from one of David's beautiful Psalms as he thought on the goodness of God in his deep meditation, saying, Behold, how good it is for brethren to dwell together in unity. Our minds should be fully united on the central things of the gospel, for those things are left for our admonition. In Hebrews xiii. 1, it says, Let brotherly love continue, and if we are not in the bonds of brotherly love, or of the love of God we will soon be led from the influence of his grace, and be separated from that power that binds our hearts together as one family. Unity gives pleasure in these sayings if we diligently keep his ways and his commands. "Then I will command my blessings upon you in the sixth year, and it shall bring forth fruit for three years." So those that obeyed the Lord should reap plentifully in earthly things and in the end life eternal, which is far beyond all earthly things. Should we, at this evil day, look for God's blessing on our labors, when the hearts of the nations are become corrupted before him continually and there is no fear of him before their eyes. In Psalm xlii. 8, is cheer for the believers in his over-ruling power. The Lord will command his loving kindness to all his true followers.

M. ELIZABETH KNOWLES.

A Statement and an Appeal.

The Plymouth congregation still owes a few hundred dollars on its Church building. The members are all poor people. They are hindered very much in carrying on the work that might be and that ought to be done, from the fact of having to devote their energies to raising money to pay off this debt. Numbers have been forced by circumstances to move away, and this lays the burden on fewer shoulders.

The brethren and sisters are making a great effort to get the money to lift this debt this year, and it is an object to them to raise as much as is possible by June. Many brethren and sisters have in time past met with this Church, and know of their zeal and earnestness. Many others have read accounts from time to time of meetings held at this place, and work done for the Lord. The hospitality of the Plymouth Church is well known to hundreds. The brethren and sisters always have and shall ever give their homes and the best they have to those who may chose to visit and sojourn with them.

It may be that some who have met with the Plymouth brethren, or others who know of their work, would like to contribute of their means to aid in clearing this house of debt, thus enabling the friends to do the work that now languishes. Should there be any such if they will send to Brother E. K. Barnhill, Plymouth, Ind., he will, as Secretary of the Board of Trustees, make proper acknowledgement, and convey the money to the hands of the Treasurer.

HE who can take advice is sometimes superior to him who cangive it.

"BETTER to be defeated fighting for your principles than to succeed by abandoning them."

READ the notice in another column of the English pamphlet on Prophetic Times. It will surely interest you.

STUDY is a restraint, compelling one if he would learn anything, to concentrate the forces of thought, and to bridle the caprices of fancy.

IF each one would look up his account, and in case he is owing on his subscription, will at once renew, we will esteem the favor highly. A number seem to have forgotten us.

"VIRTUE is the free choice of the right, Love the free embrace of the heart; Grace the free motion of the limbs; Genius the free bold flight of thought; and Eloquence its free and fervent utterance."

THE sappling green and tender, will yield readily to the wind and sun, and the hand of the trainer. The grown tree resists the storm, and 'tis well with it if it be not torn up by the roots. The aged trunk, dried to the core, spreads out its branches and perishes. This is human like.

IT is stated on high authority that the words, "which strain at a gnat, and swallow a camel," contain a misprint which was passed over in the edition of 1611, and has been retained. The Diaglott reads "Filter out," the Revised reads "strain out." This brings out a different sense entirely.

"It is manifest from the Oracles of God that he teaches men as they teach one another, not by precept only, but by example, type, or representation also. This is apparent from the many visions seen by the prophets, who, in describing what they saw, delineate it and paint it, as it were, on the minds of those who read their descriptions; so that in this way the visions are transferred from their minds to them."

JUST after we suspended the discussion on "Israel in Egypt—How long," some weeks ago, we received two articles, one from B. W. Waggoner of Los Angeles, Cal., and one from W. H. Case of Buffalo, N. Y. This last was written at the instance of Bro. W. P. Kerr, he being a member of a Bible class conducted by Mr. Case, and the class having recently studied this subject. We give these two articles place, one this week and the other next, so that our readers may have the benefit of the study of these two writers.

WE call special attention to the notice withdrawing the appointment for the Ohio Conference. This is done on account of the severe illness of Brother Joblin, whose physician orders complete rest and quiet. This is quite a disappointment to our Ohio brethren who have counted on this meeting so much. We hope that the needed rest and proper care will restore Brother Joblin to a degree of health that will enable them to hold the meeting later on, and that he may be spared for the work till the Lord comes.

Kindness.

"Would it not please you to pick up a string of pearls, drops of gold, diamonds, and precious stones, as you pass along the streets? It would make you feel happy for a month to come. Such happiness you can give to others. How, do you ask? By dropping sweet words, kind remarks, and pleasant smiles as you pass along. These are true pearls and precious stones, which can never be lost; of which none can deprive you; speak to that orphan child; see the diamonds drop from her cheeks. Take the hand of that friendless boy; bright pearls flash from his eyes. Smile on the sad and dejected; a joy suffuses his cheek more brilliant than the most precious of stones. By the wayside, mid the city's din, and at the fireside of the poor, drop words and smiles to cheer and bless. You will feel happier when resting upon your pillow at the close of the day, than if you had picked up a score of perishing diamonds. The latter fade and crumble in time—the former grow brighter with age, and produce higher reflections for ever."

Religion at Home.

Paul says, "Let them learn first to show piety at home." That sort that only shines abroad is a suspicious sort. One of the holiest sanctuaries on earth is home. The family altar is more venerable than any altar in the cathedral, or anywhereelse. The principle of love which is to be carried through the universe is first unfolded in the family."

The Revealed Will of God.

What a condescension on the part of the Eternal One to reveal himself to his creatures of dust who live upon this planet, and in whose sight "the inhabitants thereof are as grasshoppers." Isa. xl. 22.

When we consider the mighty works of God, the everlasting hills, the boundless ocean, the sun and moon, and the innumerable stars that silently testify to God's omnipotence and wisdom, we can say with the Psalmist, "When I consider thy heavens, the work of thy fingers, the moon and the stars which thou hast ordained, what is man, that thou art mindful of him, and the Son of Man that thou visitest him." Psa. viii. 3, 4.

Not only has God been pleased to reveal his will unto man, but he has marvellously preserved that revelation from the hands of those who would destroy it.

During the dark ages, when sin and superstition were so great that scarcely a glimmer of the light of the world was seen, and when every possible means were used to destroy the Word of God by wicked men, God preserved his own Word, and at the present time the Bible is scattered broadcast over the whole civilized world. As Moses said to Israel, so say we, the Word of God is not far off, but "The Word is very nigh unto thee, in thy mouth, and in thy heart, that thou mayest do it." Deut. xxx. 11-14.

What excuse, then, can we have for neglecting it? It is the only guide we have for obtaining that great salvation which God has promised to those who know him and keep his commandments. Apart from that book we are absolutely without any hope, without any knowledge of God, with no knowledge of our own origin, nature or destiny.

But the Scriptures enlighten our minds, and give knowledge to the ignorant, and as David declares the entrance of "thy Word giveth light, it giveth understanding unto the simple." Psa. cxix. 130.

"The Word of God is able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus." 2 Tim. iii. 15, the advice of Jesus himself to those who seek for eternal life, is "Search the Scriptures." John v. 39.

No other book can be compared to the Bible for the importance of its message, and the extent of its information. To study it is the most profitable exercise under the sun, and will yield in this life an endless store of knowledge and wisdom, and if its precepts are faithfully kept, the reward will be a life beyond the grave which shall never end. Other subjects and other pursuits are profitable only for a short space of time, and in the end are but vanity, but the Word of the Lord endureth forever. 1 Peter i. 25.

Palestine Home Jews' one Hope.

Regarding the recent massacre of Jews in Kishinev, Bessarabia, Russia, the Chicago Tribune of May 17, says:

It is hard to glean the exact truth about the attack on the Jews at Kishinev from the flood of contradictory reports emanating from the different sources. The immediate cause of the riot is reported to be the control of trade and employment by the Jews, who in retaliation for earlier attacks discriminated against the peasants and other laboring classes. At bottom it probably originated in the religious fanaticism to which the peasantry of southern Russia are prone, and which finds its expression in fearful excesses.

To the mujik of southern Russia the Jew is anathema. The mujik is steeped in medieval superstition, and willingly believes lies that are circulated by fanatical agitators, including the story that the Jewish passover is celebrated by the sacrifice of Christian children. The mob which committed the atrocities at Kishinov was composed of such people, urged on by fanatical and ignorant leaders, who found in the prosperity and industry of the Jews excuse for the plunder of the Ghetto. With the sack of the first house and the exchange of the first blows the fanatical spirit of the mob turned to frenzy. All the pent up race hatred and religious prejudices found vent in the slaughter of the defenseless objects of their attack.

Whether the Jews actually control the trade and employment of Kishinev is immaterial. It is obvious that they were not so much in control that they could do any thing in their own defense. They were at the mercy of the murderers.

Any measures that may or can be taken by our government to stop the persecution of the Jews in Russia, or to provide for their succor will be approved by the people without regard to party, race or religion. The popular measures that have been or may be taken for their relief should meet with a prompt and generous response."

In London a mass meeting of Jews was held on May 16, and the story of the outrages was told, many prominent men being on the platform. The account says:

A resolution declaring that the only practical solution of the Jewish question was the provision for a legally assured home in Palestine, and pledging support to Dr. Theodore Herzl, president of the Palestine association and leader of the Zionist movement, was greeted with prolonged applause.

Sir Francis Montefiore, who presided, said the anti-Semitic feeling in Russia was so strong that the conditions were worse than in the middle ages.

Leopold Greenberg, the author, created a sensation by moving a resolution containing this statement: Wherever we look throughout the world, whether at the steps now being taken in America, or the still further narrow avenue of escape of our brethren, or at the British alien commission, every where we see signs of that disease, anti-Semitism, wherefore we contend that Zionism is the only cure."

Israel Zangwell, the author, spoke in favor of the resolution, which was passed.

In many cities of this country meetings were held Sunday, in which the universal cry was for a home where they can be free from such persecution, and all declare that an independent home is Palestine is the only solution of the problem.

M. M. Maugasarian in his lecture on Sunday before the Independent Religious society in Chicago, said: "After 2000 years of Christianity, there is still persecution in the world. The significant thing is that these persecutions are confined to Christian and Mohammedan countries. The Armenians were persecuted in Turkey because they were Christians; the Jews are persecuted in Russia because they are not Christians. As there were political reasons for the slaughter of the Christians in Turkey, there are commercial reasons for the Russian outrages against the Jews. The Jews in Russia live as a separate people, and their exclusive religious practices are looked on with suspicion by the multitude."

Europe Waits on Russia's Policy.

Under the above heading a cable dispatch from London to the Chicago Tribune says:

"No definite indication has come yet of what the effect will be of the important recent developments in the complicated situation which at best is described as the general political crisis. There is not the slightest sign of what Russia will do in the far east and it is impossible to estimate how serious will be the spread of the Balkan troubles.

The position taken by the American government in regard to the enforcement of Russia's pledges in Manchuria has the heartiest support in this country officially as well as among the people. Sneers are no longer heard in England or on the continent against the new diplomacy whereof America is the chief exponent. The wholesome discovery has been made that there is one nation which will not tolerate deception or evasion of its pledges by any power with which it has dealings. Certain countries, even the greatest, have been weak enough to submit to impositions of this kind because of the dread of danger in enforcing simple rights. This has so encouraged one or two powers to profit by chicanery that they actually feel aggrieved when called to account.

The resignation of the Bulgarian cabinet raises a serious difficulty for Russia. In the Balkan situation the Danefi ministry virtually have acted on Russian orders. They certainly have shown great skill in holding the principality well in check, although the population is overwhelmingly in favor of open cooperation with the Macedonian insurgents. Prince Ferdinand, whose position is the most difficult, is consulting the leaders of the Stambuloff party, which strongly resents Russian domination. It would not be possible long to avert an open breach between Turkey and Bulgaria with such a minister in power. Russia declares she would'nt raise a finger in behalf of Bulgaria under such circumstances. It is certain she wouldn't allow the Sultan to annex the province if he conquered it, as undoubtedly he could do.

The whole situation in Macedonia, Bulgaria and Turkey is well-nigh intolerable, and unless the strain is quickly relieved serious bloodshed cannot be avoided. The decisive element in the crisis is Russia's secret design, and there is nothing to indicate what this may be. It is possible Russia herself does not know."

Dear Brethren in Michigan:

Please let me call your attention to a very important subject. Our annual Conference has been called by our worthy secretary, to convene June 4. If I am not mistaken, this is the 47th annual gathering in Michigan, without one break. It is for each individual member to determine whether it will be a success or a flat failure.

There are a few who are always ready, even at a sacrifice and expense, to be present and work, God knows who they are and will reward their faithfulness. If we want the cause of truth to die, just begin now to formulate excuses to stay at home and your wishes will certainly be realized. The Church of God is the custodian of the truth, the pillar and ground of the faith. Let each member stop and think. Our stewardship is soon to be called for, will it be said of us "Well done good and faithful servant?" Have we the interest in the truth that those faithful souls had who organized the Conference so many years ago. WE are they now, Brothers Hoyt, Simonds, Miller, Cheesebrough, L. H. Chase, O. R. L. Crozier? All sleeping, except Brother Crozier, who, in his good old age is still clinging to the blessed hope, and loves it as well as he did fifty years ago. We trust "faithful until death" is written opposite each of their names. Who of us will stand in the same ranks when we have to give in our account? He that is faithful in little will be faithful in much. It may seem a little part of a life of faithfulness to attend these annual gatherings, but it is here we meet and hear each others words of cheer; here we should get strength for the days of trial for the coming year; here the business of the year is done. Will you help bear the burden and be here? Let each brother and sister begin now, today to make the necessary preparations to be at the first meeting, and do not say, as is too often said: "We will try and be there for Sunday." You are needed at the business meetings Friday and Saturday. If the cause we hold sacred survives and grows in Michigan its friends must work harder than they ever have before. Our Lord said, you remember, once in picturing human character "They all began with one accord to make excuses." Dear brethren, for our own soul's sake let us not be among that number. Go work in my vineyard, give all diligence, is God's will concerning his children.

Submitted in love for truth's sake.

B. W. WOODWARD.

Notice.

The members of the Association of Believers of the Church of God, will meet on Saturday, June 20, 1903, at Felida, Washington, to elect officers and to transact any other business that may come up before the Society.

Now dear brethren, of our most holy faith, let us go to this meeting, which will be held in connection with the N. W. Conference, determined to do for the Master all that it is in our power to do.

This notice is late because I have just returned from a visit to the East and did not know where the Conference would be held. Hoping it will appear in time, I am yours for the truth.

Obituary.

Again our hearts are brought to sorrow with our much loved and much bereaved Sister in Christ, Mrs. Sally Deemer, and her family. Her mother, a sister, a daughter and a son, all laid away within four short years. Four weary journeys to the same lone yard, four sad farewells to her loved ones as they were taken one by one through the doors of the grave from which of itself there remains no echo, and no hope. Surely the travails of some are great. For you, and yours, loved Sister our hearts beat in sympathy. With you we mentally return to the still rooms of your home, and there breathe earnest prayers to him who also loves, for succor and support, and in these twilight communions with our Father the thoughts come rushing to our minds that soon, yes soon, shall be hurried in the "manifestations of sons of God," when creation itself shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the sons of God. Glorious future. Lord, keep us to that day. May God's promises and love support you till that day. And to you whom love's attachments had bound to him, now deceased, we pray look to and follow him.

John L. Deemer was born in Marshall County, Indiana, April 4th, 1836 Died May 10, 1903, aged 67 years, 1 month and 6 days.

F. L. AUSTIN.

Belt Wilson Orr, grandson of Sister Lorena Daily of Rockford, Illinois, became sick with an attack of Pneumonia on Sunday, May 3, and died Sunday, May 10, aged fourteen years, five days. Belt had been the comfort of his grandmother for the greatest part of his life, his mother having died while he was still in infancy. Interment took place at the old cemetery at Antioch where a great number of sorrowing friends met to pay their last sad respects to one they had known but to love. May God give his comfort to Sister Daily in her hour of sorrow.

Sarah Frederick was born in Wayne Co., Ohio, Aug. 8, 1849. Died at her home in Mcrseville, May 10, 1903, after a lingering illness with the dread disease, consumption. Age 53 years, 9 months, 1 days.

In 1866 she was united in marriage with John Rupp. To them was born one daughter, now Mrs. Roberts. In 1873 she was married to John Deitrick. This union was blessed with three children, one son, Ira, and two daughters, one who died in infancy, and Addie, now the wife of John Robinson.

At an early age she was baptized and became a member of the Adventist Church, of which she remained a consistent member until her death. She was a devoted wife, an affectionate mother and a kind friend and neighbor. She leaves to mourn her loss, besides her husband and children five brothers, four sisters and eight grandchildren.

At the request of friends the 8th chapter of Romans was read and the writer spoke from the subject matter found in 1 Cor. xv: Interment was made at the Union Church, near Plum River.

> Now is done thy long day's work;
> Fold thy palms across thy breast.
> Fold thine arms, turn to thy rest.

S. J. LINDSAY.

Mary L. Dickson, wife of Elias Dickson died May 4th, 1903, in the old home where she had lived for 62 years near Rutland, Ind. Her maiden name was Thompson, being the daughter of William and Nancy Thompson. She was born in Bracken County, Kentucky, September 27, 1813, being at the time of her death, 89 years, 7 months and 7 days old. She came with her parents to Indiana about the year 1810, settling near Connersville, where they remained until 1836, when her parents, all of their children and grandchildren came to Marshall County and settled near Maxenceuckee Lake. In the spring of 1841 she was married to Elias Dickson and moved on to the farm where she died, having lived there continually for 62 years.

She was a true Christian woman having joined the church over 70 years ago. She was a woman without enemies. Brother F. L. Austin, of Argos, conducted the funeral services at the residence on May 5th, after which she was laid to rest in the Bucklew cemetery, there to await the return of the Savior to raise the dead and reward the saints.

Zionism.

Of all the "isms" that we hear about there is none so interesting to the Bible reader as "Zionism," which is a name for the idea now cherished by many Hebrews that their scattered nation will soon be allowed to come together and reestablish a Jewish state in the land of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob.

The poorer Jews have always been harried and persecuted by European nations, and recently their richer brethren, the Jewish bankers and merchants of Germany and France, have been ridiculed and insulted as never before. The result is that a great many Hebrews in every land have turned their eyes yearningly to the Promised Land in which their nation originated.

There are already in Palestine more than thirty colonies of Russian and Roumanian Jews, and these are growing every year. All over Europe and in America are members of a great society, the "Zionists," who are planning, writing, speaking, and working to spread the idea that the Jews are to be brought together again in their own old home land.

Five years ago there was a meeting of Jews from every land to talk over this project. This was the first of the series of stirring gatherings known as Zionist Congresses. Dr. Max Nordau, who was present, spoke of the occasion afterward in these glowing words:

"It seemed as if we were witnessing a miracle which affected ourselves and everything around us. We felt ourselves part and parcel of a fairy tale, in which we saw our brethren thousands of years buried, again become flesh and blood;" or as another member said: "The long-gone past rolled back in mighty waves of overwhelming emotion, for led by modern men, by men who are far from vaporing sentimentality, this rejoined family took together, with lifted hand, the ancient oath. 'If I forget thee, O Jerusalem, let my right hand forget its cunning.' It was evident that not only was the Jewish nation still alive, but that the vital spark in Israel was the feeling of nationality joined to love of Palestine." The chief aim of the movement was formulated at the first Congress in these words which form the main item of the Zionist program, "Zionism strives to procure for the Jewish people an openly recognized and legally assured home in Palestine," the whole idea of which may be said to be embodied in the legend of the Zionist medal which was designed by the renowned Jewish sculptor, Beer. It is that of a poor, wandering family, father, mother with a babe at her breast, and two other children besides, the eldest of whom, a boy, has already a wanderer's staff in his hand. This group is meant to represent the whole "tribe of the wandering foot and weary breast." To them, in their hopelessness and dejection, an angel appears, in the shape of a graceful female figure, representing Zionism or "the national idea," who lays her right hand on the shoulder of the dejected man, and with her left points eastward, where the Sun of hope may be seen rising on their ancient fatherland, on the other side of the Mediterranean Sea. On the other side of this medal are words in Hebrew, taken from Ezek. XXXVII. "Behold, I will take the children of Israel from the midst of the nations,.....and will bring them to their own land."

Smile When Meeting Another.

Why do we not always smile when we meet the eye of a fellow-being? That is true recognition which ought to pass from soul to soul constantly. Little children in simple communities do this involuntarily, unconsciously. The honest-hearted German peasant does it. It is like magical sunlight all through that simple land,—the perpetual greeting on the right hand and on the left between strangers as they pass by each other, never without a smile. This, then, is the fine art of smiling, like all fine arts, true art, perfection of art, the simplest following of nature.—Helent Hunt.

Young man, I say to you, looking back to the past, and standing as I do now under the arch of the bow, one end of which rests in darkness, and the other on the sunny slopes of paradise, I say unto you, beware, touch not the accursed thing! and may God forbid that you should suffer as I have suffered, or be called to fight as I have fought for body and for soul.—*John B. Psalms xci. 1 and xxvii. 5.

In the secret of his presence how my soul delights to hide;
Oh how precious are the lessons which I learn at Jesus side.
Earthly cares can never vex me, neither trials lay me low;
For when distrest comes to tempt me, to the secret place I go.
When my soul is faint and thirsty, 'neath the shadow of his wing,
There is cool and pleasant shelter, and a fresh and crystal spring;
And my Savior eats beside me, as we hold communion sweet.
If I tried I could not tell you what he says when thus we meet,
Only this I know, I tell him all my doubts and griefs and fears.
O, how patiently he listens, and my drooping soul he cheers.
Would you like to know the sweetness of the secret of the Lord,
Go and hide beneath his shadow, and feel his sweet reward;
And whenever you leave the silence of that happy meeting place,
Be sure you bear the image of the Master in your face.

Sojourning of the Children of Israel.

Editor Restitution:

Noticing the efforts made to get at a clear understanding of the passages relating to the time of sojourning of the children of Israel in Egypt, and in the earnest desire that we may come to a knowledge of the truth, these words are written.

We know that all Scripture given by inspiration of God is profitable, and that "holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Spirit." We expect then, when the truth is unfolded, to find a perfect harmony in the words spoken or written by men through whom God has spoken. It could not be otherwise, for it is by the one spirit of truth that all have spoken; and by the same Spirit we are to be guided into all truth.

Paul in writing to the Galatians says, Gal. iii. 17, "And this I say, that the covenant was confirmed before of God in Christ, the law, which was four hundred and thirty years after, cannot disannul, that it should make the promise of none effect." Turning to Exodus xii. 40-41 we read: "Now the sojourning of the children of Israel, who dwelt in Egypt, was four hundred and thirty years. And it came to pass at the end of four hundred and thirty years, even the self same day it came to pass, that all the hosts of the Lord went out from the land of Egypt." Turning again to Gen. xv. 13, we read, "And he (God) said unto Abram, know of a surety that thy seed shall be a stranger in a land not theirs, and they shall serve them; and they shall afflict them four hundred years."

Here are three statements all of which the 430 years in Galatians, the 430 years in Exodus and the 400 years of Genesis, end at the same time, i. e. at the giving of the law. Then it is evident that 430 years previous to this time the covenant was confirmed, and at the same time began the sojournings of the children of Israel; also that 400 years before this they began their servitude in a land not theirs.

Now let us see if we cannot find the beginning. In Gen. xxx. 25, we read: "And it came to pass, when Rachel had borne Joseph that Jacob said unto Laban, send me away that I may go unto mine own place, and to my country." Laban was not willing to let him [go] and so arrangements were made [that] Jacob was to receive wages [for] service. Turning to Gen. xxxi. [we] see that he served six years for [the] cattle. Joseph at this time was accordingly six years old. At the age of seventeen he was sold by his brethren unto the Ishmaelites who brought him into Egypt and sold him to Potiphar. In the course of time he was brought before Pharaoh to interpret the dreams which the magicians were unable to interpret. And God showed Pharaoh by the mouth of Joseph the times of plenty and of famine which were to come upon Egypt. Thereupon Pharaoh appointed Joseph ruler over all the land of Egypt. Gen. xli. 46 says: "And Joseph was thirty years old when he stood before Pharaoh, king of Egypt."

The years of plenty passed, according to the Word of God, and the years of famine came on, "and the dearth was in all lands." Gen. xli. 54. Now when Jacob saw there was corn in Egypt he was pressed to send his sons into Egypt to buy corn that they might live and not die. When they had appeared before Joseph at their second trip and he has revealed himself unto them, he says unto them, Gen. xlv. 6, "For these two years hath the famine been in the land; and yet there are five years in the which there shall neither be earing nor harvest." And he said unto them, "Haste ye, and go up to my father, and say unto him, Thus saith thy son Joseph, God hath made me Lord of all Egypt; come down unto me, tarry not," etc. Gen. xlv. 9, etc. Going on to Gen. xlvi. 5-7 we read, "And Jacob rose up from Beersheba; and the sons of Israel carried Jacob their father, and their little ones and their wives, in the wagons which Pharaoh had sent to carry them  and all his seed brought he with him into Egypt."

This was in the second year of the famine or nine years from the time Joseph was appointed lord over all Egypt. Thus we see that Joseph was 30 years of age at the time Jacob and "all his seed" entered into the land of Egypt.

Joseph "took some of his brethren, even five men, and presented them unto Pharaoh." Gen. xlvii. 2 6. And Pharaoh said unto them, "What is your occupation? And they said unto him thy servants are shepherds, both we, and also our fathers." After relating the reasons for their coming and making their petition to be allowed to dwell in Goshen, Pharaoh says unto Joseph (verse 6), "The land is before thee; in the best of the land make thy father and brethren to dwell, in the land of Goshen let them dwell; and if thou knowest any men of activity among them, then make them rulers over my cattle." Jacob at this time was 130 years old.

Here then is the beginning of the time when they were "strangers in a land that is not theirs." Note the expression, "land that is not theirs," and compare with the expression "into the land which he sware unto thy fathers to give thee," etc.

We find the children here strangers; we see they are to be made rulers over Pharaoh's cattle, that they are to serve him afterwards when there arises "a new king over Egypt, which knew not Joseph" their affliction begins. And according to the Word of God, they are strangers; they are to serve them; and they shall afflict them; and this condition of things is to last 400 years. Then they shall be brought again into their own land.

Joseph at this time, was 30 years old, as we have before seen. Now, just 30 years before this we shall find the "covenant" referred to, and also the period of time from which the sojourn of 430 years of the children of Israel is dated.

Let us bear in mind that when God speaks of the "children of Israel" he speaks of them collectively, as a unit, as the whole twelve and their seed. When any part of them are spoken of they are given by their individual names.

After Jacob left Esau he journeyed to Succoth, built him a house, and made booths, afterwards going to Shalem, a city of Shechem, where he bought a parcel of a field and erected an altar calling it Elelohe Israel. After the slaying of Hamor and Shechem, and all the males of the city by Simeon and Levi, because of their conduct toward Dinah, Leah's daughter, "God said unto Jacob, Arise, go up to Bethel and dwell there; and make there an altar unto God, that appeared unto thee when thou fleddest from the face of Esau thy brother."  "So Jacob came to Luz, which is in the land of Canaan, that is Bethel, he and all the people that were with him." Gen. xxxv. 1, 6.

Here, where God had appeared to him on his way to Padan-aram, where the promises had before been given that "in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed." There again God appears unto him before he journeys toward Ephrath, and says unto him, "Thy name is Jacob, thy name shall not be called any more Jacob, but Israel shall be thy name; and he called his name Israel." Gen. xxxv. 10. And God renewed unto Jacob or Israel, the "covenant," he had made with Abraham and Isaac, and which had before been given to Jacob as he journeyed toward Padan-aram. Notice, that here is where God "called his name Israel." "And Jacob called the name of the place where God spoke with him, Bethel. And they journeyed from Bethel; and there was but a little way to come to Ephrath; and Rachael travailed and she had hard labor, and it came to pass that the mid-wife said unto her, Fear not, thou shalt have this son also. And it came to pass as her soul was in departing, (for she died) that she called his name Benoni; but his father called him Benjamin." Gen. xxxv. 15 18. At the birth of Benjamin, the list of Jacob's twelve sons is completed. After this they are known, collectively, as the children of Israel; before this they were called the "sons of Jacob."

Here, then, the sojournings of the "children of Israel" began. Here also, we find the covenant which God made with Abraham renewed unto Jacob. He was not known by the name of Israel, when God appeared to him on the way to Padan-aram. When he came out of the Padan-aram, before he met Esau his brother, the man, or angel with whom he wrestled told him, "Thy name shall be no more called Jacob, but Israel." But that was not the time, for Joseph was but six years old, which would make it 33 years from the time that they began to be strangers in a "land that is not theirs," and further the "children of Israel" were not complete, as there were but eleven, Benjamin not being born. But here we find all the conditions met, God "called his name Israel;" Benjamin is born and the list is completed; and the covenant has been renewed. Thus the 430 years sojourning begins.

The chronology given in the Bible shows that it was 3 years from the time Jacob erected an altar on the parcel of a field in Shalem, a city of Shechem, to the birth of Benjamin; this makes Joseph at this time 9 years old—just thirty years from the time the seed of Abraham began their stay of 400 years in a land "not theirs;" and just 430 years from "the law."

Thus we see how beautiful and accurate, and altogether true are the words of Paul when he says: "And this I say, that the covenant that was confirmed before of God in Christ, the law, which was four hundred and thirty years after, cannot disannul that it should make the promise of none effect."

Oh, that we may stand fast, holding to the Word of truth; that it may indeed be a lamp to our feet. And having our understanding enlightened by the Spirit of truth we shall press on until we all reach the fulness of the stature of Christ Jesus, speaking the same things; one in love, in spirit, and in truth. Yours in love,

BEVERLY W. WAGGONER.

Temptation.

The Savior has left us an example to follow when we are tempted; and the apostle James has given us the law whereby we may know when we are tempted: "But every man is tempted when he is drawn away of his own lust and enticed, and lust when it is conceived bringeth forth sin, and sin when it is finished bringeth forth death." James i. 14-15.

Paul tells us in Hebrews that Christ was "tempted in all points like us, yet without sin." Heb. iv. 15.

By these testimonies we can understand how Christ was tempted, as given in the allegory illustrating the wilderness through which all his disciples have to pass, a journey through the present world fraught with wild beasts, hungering or desiring to be fed with that bread of life which no disciple can do without, and live a true Christian life.

Christ, when he was baptized was acknowledged by a voice from heaven to be God's Son, which was witnessed by the descent of the spirit upon him in the form of a dove. "Then was Jesus led up of the spirit into the wilderness to be tempted of the devil, and when he had fasted forty days and forty nights, he was afterwards a hungered; and when the tempter came unto him he said, If thou be the Son of God, command that these stones be made bread. But he answered, and said, It is written, Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. Then the devil taketh him up into the holy city, and setteth him on a pinnacle of the temple, and saith to him, If thou be the Son of God cast thyself down; for it is written, He shall give his angels charge concerning thee; and in their hands they shall bear thee up, lest at any time thou dash thy foot against a stone. Jesus saith to him again, Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God. Again the devil taketh him up into an exceeding high mountain and sheweth him all the kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them, and saith unto him, All these things will I give thee if thou wilt fall down and worship me. Then said Jesus unto him, Get thee hence, Satan; for it is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve. Then the devil leaveth him, and behold, angels came and ministered to him. Matt. iv. 1-12.

Paul teaches us in Rom. vii. that we have a law in our flesh warring against the law of God, constantly leading us astray, which is the law of the flesh that tempts us to do the things which is written thou shalt not do.

Christ was led of the spirit into the wilderness representing the journey from Egypt to the Holy Land, tempted as was Aaron when he made the calf; and we are told that many of them gave way to the tempter and their carcasses fell in the wilderness. So with us, if we give way to our temptations, for when we have risen with him from the watery grave we are under obligations to do as he did, by walking in a new life. He fasted forty days and nights representing the forty years in the wilderness being fed by manna, by miraculous power. So we must be fed by the bread that came down from heaven, which is Christ. He afterwards a hungered. Hunger is a desire emanating from the flesh, and as Christ was tempted in all points like us, after fasting so long food would naturally be what he would lust after. It was this lust that is termed Satan or the devil, knowing that he had the power to turn stones into bread, he was prompted by hunger to do it, but that being a fleshly lust he had no right to use that power to gratify lust, so he meets the prompting by a command of God. So we should meet all our promptings by "thus it is written," "And whatsoever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus; giving thanks to God and the Father by him." Col. iii. 17. Then he was taken into the Holy City and placed on a pinnacle of the temple, tried again and told by Satan that it was written that his angels would protect him. This was a lesson to teach us to guard against presumptuousness, not to use any of the privileges bestowed upon us for naught, although we may have it in our power to vainly perform any act that is not to the glory of God and to supply necessary wants, we are to refrain from doing such things. Then he took him up into a high mountain and showed him all the grandeur and beauties of the world, and proposed to give them all to Christ if he would only worship him. This is so wonderfully prevalent in our day that its magnitude can scarcely be comprehended, not only in the outside world but in the professed Church also. We see the politician falling down and worshiping the saloon element, the trusts, the tariff, the gold and silver, and almost anything that offers in order to get office and prestige with men, and in the church we see not only the laity, but the preachers savoring of the things of the world, like Peter, Matt. xiv. 23. We see them going to fairs, theaters, horse races, and hear of them attending bull fights like the gladiators of Rome, giving way to the lusts of the flesh by following the fashions of the world, which the Scriptures say, "Thou shalt not do."

After the devil failed in all his trials he left him and angels ministered to him. So, if we overcome and are accepted of him, will not only be ministered to by angels, but we will be "equal to the angels." Luke xx. 36. "For the grace of God that bringeth salvation appeareth to all men, teaching us that denying ungodliness and worldly lusts we should live soberly, righteously and godly in this present world, looking for that blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Lord Jesus Christ, who gave himself for us that he might redeem us from all iniquity and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works." Titus ii. 11-14.

C. P. GRAHAM.

Law of God and Moses one Law.

To this some will shake their heads and say no, but to us it seems a strong clear Bible statement of fact, and hits at the bottom of a long contention that has and yet is, separating very friends and brethren. Then "to the law and to the testimony." Which by the way has no reference whatever to the "Decalogue" as that says not one word about "Wizards that peep and that mutter," which the prophet was instructing against, but the law does say something about them. See Lev. xix. 31; xx. 6. Then to the Bible for proof of our proposition. "And he (Ezra) was a ready scribe in the law of Moses, which the Lord God of Israel had given. For Ezra had prepared his heart to seek the law of the Lord, and to do it." Unto Ezra, the priest, a scribe of the law of the God of heaven. "Thou art sent of the king, and of his seven counsellors to enquire concerning Judah and Jerusalem, according to the law of thy God which is in thine hand." And the king's decree was that whatsoever Ezra, the priest, the scribe of the law of the God of heaven, shall require of you, it shall be done speedily. Herein the book of Ezra, 7th chapter the law of Moses and the law of God, and the law of the Lord, are used interchangeably. The scribe reading in the book of the law of God and of Moses day by day for seven days. This was at the feast of tabernacles, and was a very copious law indeed. For confirmation of what has been cited we refer the interested reader to the 8th chapter of Nehemiah which is very pointed and clear, and in perfect harmony with the foregoing testimony. And in Luke second chapter we find that the law of the Lord, and that of Moses are spoken of as one and the same law. And if this fails to establish our task and make good our proposition it must be because the law of the Lord and the law of God are not equal. Near the close of the Old Testament record, the Lord has caused his servant Malachi to testify in our behalf, by saying, Remember ye the law of Moses my servant, which I commanded unto him in Horeb for all Israel with the statutes and judgments. Now go back to Horeb, Deut. iv. 5, and look for this law of Moses, which the Lord tells Israel to remember with the statutes and judgments, and if you fail to find the Decalogue, I surely will think it is your fault. Look here, the Lord commanded the law of Moses in Horeb for all Israel, and tells somebody to remember it. He also there and then tells somebody—all Israel, to remember the sabbath day. Now is one requirement as good, as broad and long as the other? If not, why not?

Now another clincher or two and we will submit our case to the candid reader. Paul to the Hebrews says, He that despised or violated Moses' law died without mercy under two or three witnesses, x. 28. Now turn back to Deut. xvii. 2-7, and you will find the Decalogue is involved and violated in this violation of the law of Moses Paul refers to. Thus showing conclusively that the law of Moses embraced and included the Decalogue. For the law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ. What law was given by Moses? Let the Master answer. Did not Moses give you the law, and yet none of you keepeth the law? Why go ye about to kill me? That law that said, "Thou shalt not kill," is the one referred to evidently. I understand that all the old law was God's law, as he was its author. And it was all Moses' law as he was its mediator and leader of Israel. Now my good brethren, I submit this case to your honest judgment. If I have made my case well and fairly please admit it. If not, will you please be kind enough to show me my mistake—the error of my way, and thus save a soul from death, and hide a multitude of sins.

Yours as ever with kind regards to all.

T. E. ADAMS.

Dear Restitution:

The word of the Lord came unto Jonah the second time, saying, Arise, go unto Nineveh, that great city, and preach unto it the preaching that I bid thee. Jonah 3.

No doubt there is a little of this lesson for us. We have many wicked cities in this country; yes, and no doubt other countries could have use for it, but there so many of us like Jonah. When the command comes we want to sail the other way, our courage fails. Oh, how I wish I had more courage. I always do try to say a word when I can, but I am so easy put off. I am in bed now not able to be up, only bolstered up. I have been very poorly ever since mother died, and finally am down with nervous prostration. If I have ever spoken a word to cheer some one, or cause him to repent, I would not like Jonah be angry with God for forgiving him, for I would love to see all come to the truth and be saved.

I have been reading my paper, and it is about all I can do, as I cannot hold a book long, but THE RESTITUTION I can read and re-read. Pray for me that what little strength I yet have may not fail, and that I may have an abundant entrance into that glorious city, in God's own good time.

Your Sister.

CATHERINE MILLER.

"Sorrowful, yet rejoicing." Yes, sorrows will come, perplexities arise, and troubles like sea waves roll over us, but amidst it all comes the security of the "Everlasting arms." We feel the touch, but how faithless we often are! Why cannot we rest, leaving the support entirely to him who has promised never to forsake? Lord, increase our faith, and help us to continually rejoice, even though the earth tremble, knowing "he doeth all things well."

Bible Study.

"It is said that the Christians at Berea searched the Scriptures daily that they might more fully understand the things which the apostles preached to them. They are highly commended for doing this. Their understanding of the Scriptures and their faithfulness in the Christian life were traceable to their Bible study. It is impossible for any one to grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, who neglects to study the Word of God. Not one person in the wide world can be a strong and capable Christian who neglects to study God's Word. It is the Bible study and prayer which make the child of God strong to work for Jesus and to bear burdens in his cause. It is the earnest Bible student who becomes the strongest evangelist. Drinking from the living fountain is accomplished by Bible study and prayer. He that reads God's Word and meditates upon it most is best prepared to lead the sinner to Jesus. It is the one who is filled with the Word of the Lord who becomes strong in bearing burdens for the Master. O for more faith in God! but this faith will come into the soul of him who feeds most constantly upon the living Word."

NOTICE.

To the Bereans especially, or to any of the brethren.

It is the desire of many that Bro. S. J. Lindsay conduct a Bible School for at least ten days prior to the beginning of the next annual Conference to be held at Oregon, Ill., for the purpose of Bible drills or systematic Bible instruction. We all need such Normal instruction, and this letter is to all, and especially to those who may be missed by circular letter.

The plan is for those who take the work to take up lodging in the Conference hall, and do their own cooking and furnishing, thus making their stay as inexpensive as they please.

Oregon is a very pleasant city, located on the banks of Rock River, and an ideal place in leisure hours for an outing.

No tuition will be charged, as Bro. Lindsay has offered his services free for this time. Let us know in good season if you will come. For further particulars address the undersigned, Chairman Evangelist Committee, Illinois State Conference, at Lanark, Ill.

Your Brother in hope.

J. M. GLOTFELTY.

"The World to Come and the Life Everlasting," is the name of a book of over 400 pages. The title page describes it as a Symposium of Writers on eternal life from the Bible Basis, and is selected from the works of a goodly number of Bible Students who have written during the past few years. It is compiled and published by Bro. John O. Woodruff, of Elizabeth, N. J., of whom it may be ordered. The paper and print are excellent, as is the durable cloth-binding. The price is $1.00, and considering the work as a whole it is very low, and we urge all who need a book on this subject to procure one without delay.

Announcement.

The 47th Annual Conference of the Church of God in Michigan, will be held (D. V.) at Dutton, Kent County, on Thursday evening, June 4, 1903, and continue over the following Sunday.

These meetings have been held so long that they have become an established fact in the minds of the brethren, and they expect the meeting as surely as the time comes. And then it seems we get so much real encouragement and enjoyment from them, it seems like a family reunion, where we can enjoy the blessed communion of those of like precious faith, so that we feel we would be lost without them, for from these gatherings we derive much strength if we come with the right spirit. All who can come should make a special effort to be there.

A programme will appear later.

Let us remember the words of Paul, in Heb. x. 25: "Not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is; but exhorting one another, and so much the more, as ye see the day approaching."

Dutton is situated on the Michigan Central R. R. ten miles south east of Grand Rapids.

TITHING NOTICE.

Dear Sisters:

Conference nearly here, and with it our Tithing Meeting. The sisters have truly done nobly in this work, but it must not stop. "Eternal vigilance" must be our watchword. "Occupy till I come" were the words of our Guide. Let us not be slack in this work. Perhaps we have seen fit to help other needy objects, and have used our tenth for that purpose. Let us be ready to report what our tenth has been, for what purpose used, etc. If you cannot be present, as we hope you may, send in the offering.

There are several names on our roll who have not been present for years, neither have they responded by letter. May we not hear from you this year. If we could realize the many needs, in so many different ways, you would not withhold your offerings, though they may be small. We are sending THE RESTITUTION now to nearly a score of persons unable to take the paper. Every year others are brought before the Society for help. You may be the means of sending the gospel to some of them. It may mean personal sacrifice, but that is just what God has asked us to do. "Present your bodies a living sacrifice."

Be present for work, if possible.

M. A. WOODWARD, Sec.

The Quarterly Conference of the Churches of God in the State of Indiana, will convene at Antioch Church, five miles south of Plymouth, and three miles north of Argos, at 10 o'clock a. m. on Saturday, June 13, 1903, and continue over Sunday.

The "June Meeting" at old Antioch is a familiar term, not only to the faithful in the state of Indiana, but in many other states. Fond recollections cluster about this place. It has been the gathering place of brethren and sisters of the Abrahamic faith for many years. We make this call knowing that many are looking forward to this annual feast of spiritual good things.

Let us come together, brethren and sisters, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, for the edifying of one another in love. Let it be understood that we shall, as much as practicable, remain at the Church during the entire day on Saturday and Sunday, so that we may spend as much of the time as is possible in Christian fellowship.

A programme will be prepared and published later.

MRS. LYDIA RAHLSBACK, Sec.

Ohio Conference Postponed.

On account of the serious illness of our beloved Evangelist, Brother Joblin, and the absolute necessity for a long season of complete rest and quietness demanded for him in his present condition, the Church has to-day passed a resolution to postpone the proposed Conference indefinitely.

Further notice will be given of any future action at proper time.

Popular Lectures by M. Joblin.

Brethren and Sisters, Have you loved ones who think sincerity will save them? Have you friends who think they worship acceptably while ignorant of God's promises? Have you acquaintances with false hopes of heaven, or who believe themselves immortal by nature, or who think their sins are forgiven, although they are ignorant of the Law of Pardon, or who have no use for a God who consigns sinners to Eternal Torment, and are ignorant of Jehovah's beneficent purpose to fill the earth with his glory and bestow Eternal Life upon believers of the Gospel, so they can enjoy it for ever? If so, send for Popular Lectures by Bro. Joblin, entitled:—"The Kingdom of God;" "Old Mother Earth to Be Born Again;" "Strangers from the Covenants of Promise;" "Vain Worship;" "No Immortality Out of Christ;" "Hope Begotten by the Resurrection of Christ;" "God's Love and Solicitude for Mankind;" and "What Shall We Do to be Saved?"

The Heavenly Sower.

He that soweth the good seed is the Son of Man.—Mat. xiii. 37.

Sower divine!
Sow the good seed in me,
Seed for eternity.
'Tis a rough, barren soil,
Yet by thy care and toil,
Make it a fruitful field
An hundred-fold to yield.
Sower divine!
Plow up this heart of mine!

Sower divine!
Quit not this wretched field
Till thou hast made it yield.
Sow then by day and night,
In darkness and in light.
Stay not thy hand, but sow;
Then shall the harvest grow.
Sower divine,
Sow deep this heart of mine!

Sower divine!
Let not this barren clay
Lead thee to turn away;
Let not my faithlessness
Provoke thee not to bless;
Let not this field be dry,
Refresh it from on high.
Sower divine,
Water this heart of mine!

Israel in Egypt—How Long?

Editor Restitution:

At the request of Mr. W. P. Kerr, one of your subscribers, I have prepared an article on the question,—"Israel in Egypt, how long?" This is the outcome of the study in my Bible class, and may prove profitable to some of your readers, while to others it may be but an old familiar tale.

With due respect.

W. H. CASE.

Several articles having appeared in your paper wherein it has been held that the sojourn of Israel in Egypt was 430 years, as a basis we will call attention to the following, which may be familiar to some.

75 years, the age of Abram when leaving Haran, Gen. xi. 31, 32; xii. 4.

The Lord appears to Abram on his arrival in Canaan and gives him the promise to the land, Gen. xii. 7.

Elapsed time till the birth of Isaac, 25 years, Gen. xxi. 5.

Elapsed time till the birth of Jacob, 60 years, Gen. xxv. 26.

Elapsed time till Jacob stands before Pharoah, 130 years, Gen. xlvii. 8, 9.

Total time from the promise till the going into Egypt, 215 years.

Elapsed time till the death of Jacob 17 years, Gen. xlvii. 28.

We will now determine the age of Joseph at this time.

Age of Joseph when sold into Egypt 17 years, Gen. xxxvii. 2.

Age of Joseph upon his promotion as ruler, 30 years, Gen. xli. 46.

Deduct the time passed in land of Canaan, 17 years.

Time of his affliction in Egypt, 13 years, Gen. xli. 52.

To the end of the years of plenty, 7 years, Gen. xli. 53.

Until the arrival of his father Jacob 2 years, Gen. xlv. 6-11.

Until the death of Jacob, 17 years, Gen.

Total, being the age of Joseph when his father died, 56 years.

Joseph lived after his father's death 54 years, Gen. l. 26.

Elapsed time from going into Egypt until Joseph's death, 71 years.

The full period from the promise to the death of Joseph, 286 years.

From the promise to the law (passover) 430 years, Gal. iii. 17.

Measuring backward to the birth of Moses, Ex. vii. 7; Acts vii. 28-30, we have 80 years, and from the promise forward to the death of Joseph, 286 years, total 366 years, thus leaving an unaccounted for interval of 64 years.

From the birth of Moses to the Exodus from Egypt 80 years.

Total period of sojourn in Egypt, 215 years.

Total period of the sojourning of Israel, Ex. xii. 40, likewise the period from the promise to the law, Gal. iii. 17, 430 years.

The difficulty attending the solution of the problem, is to show that the assumed interval between the death of Joseph and the birth of Moses was 64 years. This difficulty must be overcome in order to maintain the proposition that the sojourn of Israel in Egypt was 215 years. We will first consider the period called the sojourn. "Now the sojourning of the children of Israel (who dwelt in Egypt) was 430 years." Ex. xii. 40.

This period commenced when Abram came into Canaan, Gen. xii. 5-10; Psa. cv. 11-13, extended to Jacob, Gen. xlvi. 1-4; Deut. xxvi. 5; 1 Chron. xxix. 15; Psa. cv. 23, and continued until the day of the Exodus, Ex. xii. 41.

The further proof is from the genealogy of Levi, Gen. xlvi. 11. Where learn that Levi had three sons upon going into Egypt, these three being included in the list of the 70 souls of Gen. xlvi. 27.

One of these sons was named Kohath, who also had a son named Amram, and the sons of Amram were Aaron and Moses. Ex. ii. 1; vi. 16-20; Num. iii. 17-27; xxvi. 57-59; 1 Chron. vi. 1-4; xxiii. 6-12. So that Moses was the grandson of Kohath, who went down into Egypt with his father Levi and his grandfather Jacob.

The ages of these three generations prior to Moses are given; viz. Levi 137 years, Kohath 133 years, Amram 137 years, Ex. vi. 16-20. We also have the statement that Amram, the father of Moses, married the sister of Kohath, the daughter of Levi, "whom her mother bare to Levi in Egypt," Ex. vi. 20; Num. xxvi. 59.

When the daughter of Pharoah drew Moses out of the water, Miriam, the sister of Moses, was old enough to be present and to suggest the calling of a nurse to care for the child, Ex. ii. 1-10. Aaron being three years older than Moses, who was the youngest of the children of Jocheled, the daughter of Levi.

The period under consideration is 430 years; deduct the 215 years prior to the going into Egypt, and 80 years of Moses life, and we have 135 years remaining for the interval between the going into Egypt and the birth of Moses.

The foregoing should prove very satisfactory evidence that this interval did not exceed 135 years, and as has been shown, 71 years of which interval falls within the lifetime of Joseph, thus accounting for the 64 years alluded to above, and proving the contention, that "Israel sojourned in Egypt 215 years."

It has now been shown that 430 years dominated the "sojourning" began when Abram came into Canaan, 215 years of which period was passed in Canaan, and 215 years in the land of Egypt, ending at the Exodus. We will now consider the affliction period of 400 years.

Differences of opinion concerning the 430 year period would never have arisen but for the statements of Gen. xv. 13, and Acts vii. 6, with their apparent conflict with Ex. xii. 40, and Gal. iii. 17.

To solve the difficult, we will consider the terms used and their application. In Gen. xv. 13 we note two terms "serve" and "afflict."

"Know of a certainty that thy seed shall be a stranger in a land that is not theirs, and they shall serve them, and they shall afflict them 400 years." The length of time of servitude is not stated, but the period of affliction is to be of 400 years duration. Note that this servitude and affliction is to come upon "thy seed" and so could not commence before the birth of Isaac.

In verse 16 it reads "But in the fourth generation they shall come hither again." The 400 years and the fourth generation appear to cover the same period.

In Ex. i. 11-14, the terms used are afflict, afflicted, serve, while affliction, is the term used in Gen. xli. 52; Ex. iii. 6-17; Deut. xxvi. 6, 7; Neh. ix. 9; Acts vii. 34.

In Ex. iii. 9 the term is oppression, the same term is also used in Deut. xxvi. 7, and thus we have three different titles given to the 400 year period, viz, afflict, serve, oppress. Prior to the death of Joseph, "and Joseph did all his brethren, and all that generation," Ex. i. 6, the Israelites in Egypt were free from servitude and oppression, Gen. xlv. 11; xlvii. 1-7; i. 7-11; Ex. i. 7.

When Joseph died 286 years of the 430 years sojourning had elapsed, and some time subsequent to that event the servitude and oppression began, Ex. i. 8-14. Referring to the statement of Gen. xv. 13, the servitude may apply to but a small portion of the 400 year period. "When the time of the promise drew nigh," Acts vii. 17, "there arose up a new king over Egypt," Ex. i. 8; Acts vii. 18, then began the servitude and oppression, in which time Moses was born. See Acts vii. 20.

We have the positive statement that the period of the sojourn, 430 years, ended at the Exodus, Ex. xii. 40, the affliction, servitude, and oppression, likewise ending at the same time—"The selfsame day it came to pass, that all the hosts of the Lord went out from the land of Egypt."

The ending of these two periods being at the same time, measuring 430 years backward, carries to the beginning of the sojourning when Abram, at the age of 75 years came out from Haran, "and into the land of Canaan they came," Gen. xii. 5.

When did the 400 years commence? Evidently 30 years later, or when Abraham was 105 years old. What event happened at that time? Read Gen. xxi. 7-9. We are here introduced to a family scene. Abraham, his wife Sarah, Isaac the son of promise, aged 5 years, Hagar the Egyptian bond woman, and her son Ishmael aged 19 years—"and he will be a wild man, and his hand will be against every man." "And the child (Isaac) grew and was weaned; and Abraham made a great feast the same day that Isaac was weaned, and Sarah saw the son of Hagar, the Egyptian.....mocking." In Gal. iv. 29 this is called "persecution," so this marks the time of the beginning of the affliction, mocking, persecution, of the "seed" by the Egyptian, which according to Acts vii. 6, would continue 400 years. "And God spake on this wise, that his seed should sojourn in a strange land, that they should bring them into bondage, and entreat them evil 400 years."

It is not stated that they should sojourn in a strange land 400 years, or that the bondage should last for 400 years, only "entreat them evil for 400 years."

From the foregoing we must conclude that the two apparently conflicting statements refer to two different periods—one the sojourn period of 430 years duration, that at the expiration of the first 30 years, there began the other, or affliction period, of 400 years duration, and that thence forward the two periods run parallel, coinciding with each other, and finding their common terminal at the Exodus.

Table Talk.

THE LAW OF THE LORD.

"My son, forget not my law; but let thine heart keep my commandment." Prov. iii. 1. "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul. All his commandments are sure, they stand fast forever and ever. Thy Word is true from the beginning, and every one of thy righteous judgments endureth forever."

The law of the Lord given unto Israel kept them a separate people though living among the heathen nations. The law of God separated them and kept them from idol worship and the evils of idolatry. The Lord speaking of Israel saith, "O that there were such an heart in them that they would fear me and keep all my commandments; that it might be well with them and their children forever; for the commandment is a lamp, and the law a light." Yes, their lives would have been full of light if they had obeyed the law of the Lord; but we see today the bitterness and darkness of their lives, and all nations and every one that disobeys God's laws cannot have the blessings promised. God saith "Blessed are they who keep his testimonies and that seek him with the whole heart." Jesus said unto his disciples, "He that hath my commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me, and he that loveth me shall be loved of my Father."

Do these blessings extend to us? Will we be loved of God and his Son if we love his law, the gospel of salvation? Yes; for by the new covenant, the blood of Jesus, all that forsake not his law will be given eternal life. His Word maketh wise unto salvation... The Word of the Lord endureth forever.

When Jesus with his saints shall reign on Mount Zion, then will all nations obey the law of the Lord; for out of Zion shall go forth his law and the Word of the Lord from Jerusalem. All the earth will be filled with the glory of the Lord. There shall be no more curse, but the throne of God and the Lamb shall be there and his servants shall serve him. Yes, all that have hid his law in their hearts, all that have kept his commandments.

Dear Restitution:

The little flock in Salem, Ohio, rejoiced on Sunday morning, May 3rd, to welcome Brother and Sister Crawford. After some weeks of hearing the gospel of the kingdom, it proved to be still the power of God unto salvation and on April 30th we repaired to a running brook where after confession of their faith in the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ, they were immersed in the all saving name, washing away their sins. They were much dissatisfied with the Methodist Episcopal Church on account of the feasts and festivals, and doubtless God led them to the Church of God. They gladly received the truth, they are truly walking in newness of life. A new world has opened up to them. The Bible is a new Book, and we have much hope that they will walk worthy and help to spread and maintain the glorious gospel until he come.

Palestine Letters.—No. 1.

The following letter was written to, and published in the Dodge County Citizen of Beaver Dam, Wis.

Editor Citizen:

Our company was made up of four men, two women, and two children. We started from Brooklyn, Nov. 17, 1883, on an Italian Steamer. There were 205 passengers on board, of the very lowest class of Italians. Very few of them could speak a word of English, and the officers and crew were about the same so far as that is concerned. We had some rough weather the first two or three days, and in consequence of side winds the steamer rolled fearfully. My berth was the table, and I had to tie myself on with a rope both ways, to keep from sliding off; but we got to Gibraltar in fourteen days less twelve hours.

I was very much disappointed in Gibraltar. The harbor is on the north side of the rock, with apparently only a small row of buildings between the rock and water.

I went on shore, paying one franc (20 cents) each way, and when I got into the town, a grander sight presented itself than I bargained for.

There are three streets running parallel with the water, and the buildings are high and beautiful. The streets are very narrow, I suppose for want of room; being only wide enough for two vehicles to pass, and side walks only about three feet in width and generally only on one side, sometimes on one side and sometimes on the other.

The vehicles were mostly two-wheeled things with boxes on them, not dissimilar to dirt carts, such as are used in the construction of railroads, and drawn by donkeys.

My guide took me to the Arsenal, where we saw Her Majesty's soldiers drilling. It was a grand sight indeed. Near the Arsenal and contiguous was a beautiful park, on the side-hill with beautiful walks figured with, to me, rare plants, flowers, shrubbery and trees, with steps of light colored stone, now up a few steps in the side walk, now down to another level, to a large spring issuing from under the most singular rocks that one could imagine. This spring was filled with gold, and other beautiful fish.

The inhabitants are generally Spaniards with a few Italians and a very few Moors.

We started from Gibraltar at 8 p. m., Oct. 31, and arrived at Marseilles (pronounced Marseillya) Nov. 3 at 4 a. m. Marseilles is the finest and handsomest town that I ever saw; a description of which I will reserve until another time. Meanwhile we expect to sail from here to-morrow, Nov., 6, at 8 a. m. on board the Algeria, of a French line of steamers to take about a week to Alexandria.

Omar's Prayer.

"Blessed, blessed, blessed Jesus, help us to be very tender to one another."

It was last Sunday morning, I had read the 67th Psalm, and it had pleased him. When I had finished he said: "Auntie, I can pray," and kneeling, said, "Blessed, blessed, blessed Jesus, help us to be very tender to one another."

The words fell like a benediction. I was instantly calmed. All the weary and unrest was taken away, and tender love filled all my being. It was not only a prayer but a sermon. A sermon that will abide with me many days, and I trust, the remainder of my life. I needed the lesson. We all need it. We are not as tender as we ought to be toward the sheep of Christ. When death comes, as it came into our family circle yesterday, we feel the need of tenderness, of love.

Poor Omar! he has no father now! and we feel more tenderly affectionate toward him.

O Heavenly Father help us to be obedient to thee, in this, as in all things else! that we may have a part in the coming kingdom.

A Statement and an Appeal.

The Plymouth congregation still owes a few hundred dollars on its Church building. The members are all poor people. They are hindered very much in carrying on the work that might be and that ought to be done, from the fact of having to devote their energies to raising money to pay off this debt. Numbers have been forced by circumstances to move away, and this lays the burden on fewer shoulders.

The brethren and sisters are making a great effort to get the money to lift this debt this year, and it is an object to them to raise as much as is possible by June. Many brethren and sisters have in time past met with this Church, and know of their zeal and earnestness. Many others have read accounts from time to time of meetings held at this place, and work done for the Lord. The hospitality of the Plymouth Church is well known to hundreds. The brethren and sisters always have and shall ever give their homes and the best they have to those who may chose to visit and sojourn with them.

It may be that some who have met with the Plymouth brethren, or others who know of their work, would like to contribute of their means to aid in clearing this house of debt, thus enabling the friends to do the work that now languishes. Should there be any such if they will send to Brother E. K. Barnhill, Plymouth, Ind., he will, as Secretary of the Board of Trustees, make proper acknowledgement, and convey the money to the hands of the Treasurer.

Secrets of the Prophetic "Times" as relating to the things which are coming on the Earth, is the title of a 64 page pamphlet, written by Thomas Clarke, an Englishman, and published by The Faith Association, at Malvern Link, England. To any who are interested in Prophetic "Times" this work is of great value. We have received an invoice of these little books, and can supply them at 20c. each.

Please do not forget our financial needs.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Obituary.

Sister Lorana Dailey, aged 64 years, 5 months, 16 days.

Less than a week ago it was my sad duty to speak words of comfort to mourning relatives and friends over the loss of her grandson, Wilson Orr, and as I arrived at the church today it was to hear the still further news that her husband, Wilson Dailey, had just died. We laid Sister Dailey tenderly away to rest until He comes to break death's bonds. Three week's ago the family were alive and well. Today two of them occupy their homes in the cold tomb while the yawning grave will receive the other. In so short a time does death, the enemy, do his work. "How long, O Lord, how long" until this great enemy shall be destroyed? Let us comfort one another with the promises he has given. Let us endure unto the end, that we may receive a crown of life.

S. J. LINDSAY.

A sad death occurred in Tekoa, Wash., last Monday morning, when David Kenworthy, succumbed to the ravages of a complication of scarlet fever and pneumonia. He was taken sick about two weeks ago, and at first his condition was not thought dangerous, but in spite of heroic efforts on the part of the physician and friends, he passed away.

Prior to his illness he was employed as Express messenger on the Pleasant Valley route of the Pacific Express Co., and was considered a most trustworthy employee.

The funeral services were conducted at the home of his parents, by Rev. W. H. Atcheson. Owing to the nature of the disease the services were held in the open air. A choir of fifteen voices sang, and the songs floating out on the open air, made a deep impression upon the hearers.

David Kenworthy was the eldest son of Brother and Sister Kenworthy. He was born at Paola, Kansas, Oct., 9, 1881, and came west with his parents in 1891. In the spring of 1900 he confessed Christ, and was baptized by Brother W. L. Skeels, and has served him faithfully ever since.

There being no church here he became a member of the Christian Endeavor Society, and was not only a conscientious member but an active worker, having served both as president and vice-president of the local organization, besides organizing circles in other places. He was an exceptionally obedient and loving son. One of the greatest tributes that can be paid to king or peasant is due to the departed for the love and respect he had for his mother.

He leaves, to mourn his loss, his parents, three brothers, grandmother, and a legion of friends. He departed this life April 20, 1903, aged 21 years 6 months and 11 days.

God' Word is full of promises,
To weary souls, of rest and peace;
But O, most sweet of all today,
That God shall wipe all tears away.

Here we may bear a heavy cross,
Our hearts grow sore with pain and loss;
But there in God's eternal day,
His hand shall wipe all tears away.

O, hardened heart, be brave to bear
Thy cross awhile—the crown is there.
Thy hand within the Father's lay
Until he wipes all tears away.

A SISTER.

"The World to Come and the Life Everlasting," is the name of a book of over 400 pages. The title page describes it as a Symposium of Writers on eternal life from the Bible Basis, and is selected from the works of a goodly number of Bible Students who have written during the past few years. It is compiled and published by Bro. John O. Woodruff, of Elizabeth, N. J., of whom it may be ordered. The paper and print are excellent, as is the durable cloth-binding. The price is $1.00, and considering the work as a whole it is very low, and we urge all who need a book on this subject to procure one without delay.

The Chicago & North-Western Line is the only double track railway between Chicago and the Missouri River.

THE article on thesubject of Inmortality of Soul in issue of May 18 was written by J. H. Thomas, instead of S. H. Thomas.

IF each one would look up his account, and in case he is owing; on his subscription, will at once renew, we will esteem the favor highly. A number seem to have forgotten us.

The Sin of Doing Nothing.

In an old religious magazine there are the following questions on the words "Curse ye Meroz." The writer says:

"By whose authority? The angel of the Lord.

What has Meroz done? Nothing.

Why then, is Meroz to be cursed? Because he did nothing.

What ought Meroz to have done? Come to the help of the Lord.

Could not the Lord do without Meroz? The Lord did do without Meroz.

Did the Lord sustain then, any loss? No, but Meroz did.

Is Meroz, then, to be cursed? Yes; and that bitterly.

Is it right that man should be cursed for doing nothing? Yes; when he ought to do something.

Who says so? The angel of the Lord. That servant who knew his Lord's will, and did not according to his will, shall be beaten with many stripes. Luke xii. 47.

Took on This Picture, Then on That.

The following article was published by Elder Marsh, of Rochester, N. Y. in the Expositor and Advocate, the predecessor of THE RESTITUTION, in 1855, and we think is worth publishing again:—

I have subdued the nations of the earth—is there no other world for me to conquer?—Alexander the Great.

I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness.—Paul the Apostle.

My life is in the yellow leaf,
The fruits and flowers of love are gone;
The worm, the canker and the grief
Are mine alone.

The fire that in my bosom burns
Is lone as some volcanic isle,
No torch is lighted at its blaze—
A funeral pile.

—Lord Byron.

Although the figtree shall not blossom, neither shall fruit be on the vine; the labor of the olive shall fail, and the fields shall yield no meat; the flock shall be cut off from the fold, and there shall be no herd in the stall: yet will I rejoice in the Lord. I will joy in the Lord, I will joy in the God of my salvation.—Habakkuk.

I am taking a leap in the dark.—Hobbs when dying.

Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil.—David.

O God, if there be a God, have mercy on me.—Tom Paine when dying.

For I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon thearth, and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh, shall I see God.—Job in view of death.

England's Settled Policy.

Much is written these days of "Russia's Policy," and various guesses are made as to what she will do. A writer in the Chicago Tribune under the name of "Ex-Attache" tells of England's policy, and thinking it may be of interest to our readers, we give it herewith:—

England has frequently been abused by politicians and journalists, both at home and abroad, for having no settled and definite policy, and is compared by them, to her disadvantage in this respect, with Russia, which pursues the object she has in view regardless of pledges and treaties, and also with Germany, which, especially since William II. has been on the throne, has shown herself so quick and determined to avail herself of every advantage that comes within her reach. It is a great mistake, however, to imagine that Great Britain has no definite policy in her dealings with foreign countries. One of its phases is familiar to the people of this country—viz: the resolve to remain on terms of close and intimate friendship with the United States. That, indeed, was the keynote of Queen Victoria's reign, and her son, King Edward, is following in her footsteps in this respect.

With the other settled policy of England Americans are less familiar, for it relates to her position in the near Orient as distinguished from the far east. It is a policy vast in its conception and of extraordinary interest, not alone to the great powers of Europe, but also to the United States, which, through its acquisition of the Philippine Islands, has now a population of many millions of Mohammedans subject to its rule. Its threads are held by the foreign department at Calcutta rather than in London, and, thanks to this, they escape that prying curiosity of parliamentary questioners and writers for the public press which hampers to such a degree the activity and operations of the foreign office in Downing street.

At St. Petersburg the ministry of foreign affairs is divided into two departments, the one for European matters, while the other deals exclusively with Asiatic questions; and it is to the Asiatic division that the cleverest men are assigned, where promotion and honors come the quickest, and which, by the skill, the resourcefulness and the activity of its officers, and through the mystery with which it manages to envelop its dealings, has won for itself fame and fear in every capital of the old world.

The foreign department at Calcutta equally well officered, and having at its disposal large secret service funds that are not subject to legislative investigation, may be described as the Asiatic division of the foreign office in England.

The chief aims of the foreign department at Calcutta are, of course, to strengthen England's hold on India, as well as her predominant influence upon all vassal and independent rulers within what may be described as the Indian sphere, and to counteract any efforts that might be made by European powers either to endanger the line of communication with the mother country or to foment anti-English intrigues among the native rulers and races of Asia, and to frustrate all designs having in view an eventual invasion or conquest of Hindustan.

Now, the most powerful element in India is undoubtedly that which accords spiritual allegiance to Mohammed. England has probably some eighty million Mohammedan subjects in the Deccan peninsula, and at least thirty million more in Africa. Indeed Great Britain is without exception, the greatest Mohammedan power of the world, and has won the confidence and the good will of the followers of the prophet to a degree enjoyed by no other Christian power through the religious tolerance of her government, through the respect shown alike by state and people for the religious prejudices and practices of Islam, and through their refusal to force the Bible upon those who built their hope of salvation on the koran.

Since the English crown took over the administration of Hindustan from the old East India company it has been able to place implicit trust in the loyalty of the Mohammedan princes and people of the Deccan, and it is the eighty million of Mohammedans that constitute, so to speak, the backbone of India in a military as well as in a political and economic sense. The confidence is mutual, and the only clouds by which it has ever been momentarily obscured have been traced to the influence of the sultan at Constantinople.

Until about thirty years ago the English, for some reason or other, believed in the pretensions of the Turkish ruler to the dignity of caliph—that is to say, to the spiritual supremacy of the entire Mohammedan church throughout the world. It was, indeed, this, even more than the dread of seeing Constantinople fall into the hands of Russia, that led Great Britain to champion the cause of the Ottoman empire and to expend vast quantities of British blood and treasure in its defense. The English thought that they owed it, as a great Mohammedan power, to their Mohammedan fellow citizens in India to protect the chief of the latter's church. But Abdul Hamid, by his readiness to lend himself to every anti-British intrigue at Constantinople and by his reluctance to accept English advice, ere long convinced the statesmen at Calcutta and at Downing street that, as the spiritual head of the Mohammedan church, he constituted not only a perpetual source of trouble but likewise a serious danger in the Moslem possessions of the English crown.

Realizing the hopelessness of the situation at Stamboul, where the sultan, with his policy of playing off one European power against another, was always certain to find some foreign government ready to outbid England for the sake of some temporary advantage at the latter's expense, the British foreign office, in conjunction with the foreign department at Calcutta, proceeded to investigate the pretensions of the Turkish sultan to the caliphate, and after a careful inquiry, in which the most learned members of the Mohammedan church in India took part, came to the conclusion that his claims were unfounded and based wholly on usurpation and false assertions.

The koran—that is to say, the khadiissei sherif portion thereof—strictly and implicitly provides that the caliph of the Mohammedan church—the supreme pontiff—must be a lineal descendant of the prophet who founded the faith. Now, the grand sherif of Mecca fulfills the genealogical requirements, being a lineal descendant of Hassan, the grandson of the prophet. Abdul Hamid, on the other hand, has none of these qualifications whatsoever, his ancestors having belonged to a tribe distinguished for its enmity to the prophet. He cannot be considered as being even in the remotest degree descended from Mohammed, and the only foundation on which he bases his claim to the caliphate is an alleged cession of the dignity to Sultan Selim, the conqueror of Egypt, by the last Fatimite caliph at Cairo in 1516.

This Fatimite caliph, so called because descended from Mohammed's daughter Fatimah, had no authority whatsoever to bequeath the title, least of all to one who was by race and ancestry legally and theologically disqualified. That Sultan Selim's successors did not attach any importance to this alleged cession of the title of caliph on the part of the Fatimite caliph of Cairo is best shown by the fact that none of them dreamed of including it among his dignities until the present sultan, who, with the object of strengthening his claim thereto, had actually the audacity to eliminate from the copies of the koran published in Turkey those khadiissei sherifs which contain the inspired injunction regarding the caliphate, a sacrilege which has excited horror even among the ecclesiastical authorities at Constantinople, where numbers of ulemas have been banished for denouncing the indignity thus done to their holy book.

Since this discovery England's policy has been not to protect the sultan or to champion his cause but to develop the power and the prestige of the grand sherif of Mecca as the principal descendant of the prophet, and as, therefore, chief caliph of Islam. Some time ago, when she invested a Mohammedan sheik with the administration of koranic law at Zeilan, which, with the surrounding country, is almost entirely populated with Mohammedans, she addressed to the grand sherif of Mecca a letter requesting him to give his approval to the appointment in his capacity as head of the Mohammedan church throughout the world.

And it is no longer any secret that the English government has in view the proclamation of Mecca, of Medina, and, in fact, of all that portion of Arabia in which the holy cities of Islam are situated, as the property of the grand sherifate, assuring to the latter the revenues of the holy cities, entire independence from the sultan of Turkey, as well as freedom from interference on the part of any other foreign power. The whole of the Arabian peninsula, in which the holy places of Islam are situated, constitute theoretically a Turkish province under the direction of a Turkish governor, who, making his headquarters at Sanaah, maintains garrisons at Mecca, Medina, and at the Red sea port of Jeddah, for the purpose of extorting money which would otherwise flow into the coffers of the grand sherif from the pockets of the pilgrims who flock each year in countless thousands to the holy cities from all quarters of the Mohammedan world—no less than 70 percent of the entire number coming from British India alone. The authority of the sultan and of the Turkish governor is restricted only to those spots actually occupied by the Ottoman troops, and the remainder of Arabia is in a state of permanent insurrection against the porte.

Slowly but surely England is extending her influence among the various Arab tribes that inhabit the peninsula, has taken a number of them both in the southeastern corner, near Aden, and on the shores of the Persian gulf, under her protection.

Of course everything that is calculated to interfere with this policy of Great Britain—namely: to establish herself as the protector of Arabia, will meet with the strenuous opposition on her part. Her foreign minister, Lord Lansdowne, announced the other day in parliament at Westminster that under no circumstances would England permit any other power than herself to establish fortified naval stations or military strongholds on the Persian gulf, either on Persian, Arab, or Turkish territory, and for the same reason she is obstructing the construction of the railroad which is to connect the Mediterranean with a port on the Persian gulf.

The utility of this railroad, indeed, is not apparent, and it is doubtful whether, from an economic point of view, it could ever be rendered remunerative unless constructed in connection with the restoration of the ancient irrigation works of Chaldea, which in olden times rendered the valley of the Tigris the most fertile and the richest spot in the world. The entire country, known in olden times as Chaldea, is intersected with hundreds of canals, many of them cut through living rock, and which if repaired might, in conjunction with a railroad, render the valley of the Tigris and Euphrates a second Egypt. But England will be no party to the revival of the prosperity of Chaldea, to the construction of the railroad to the Persian gulf, or to the repair of the irrigation works in the valley of the Tigris until she has secured control of Arabia and is able to undertake the works in question on her own account.

Dear Restitution:

I was glad to see the announcement of the "June meeting" at Antioch. I hope I may be permitted to attend at least a part of the meetings. But whether I am there or not, my prayer is, and shall be, that believers may be strengthened and encouraged, and that others may be brought into the fold.

The time from Saturday morning until Sunday evening seems so short; too short it is for any "side issues" or "individual opinions" to be aired. It is just too short for anything else than the good feeling always present at Old Antioch. Let it be crowded full of that. If the meeting together here of God's children is productive of so much good and joy, what will the meeting in the kingdom be?

May that time soon come.

Yours in hope.

Temperance.

WITH A STOP TO IT.

"Come in and take a sip of something good," said blouted old Jack Saunders to Tommy Bristow as he was passing the saloon door on his way to school.

"I'm a temperance boy," answered Tommy, "and I've signed a pledge neither to touch, taste nor handle."

"Oh, that's all right," answered the old toper; "you can take a glass of beer or wine, and still be a temperance man. You don't need to keep on drinking until you're a drunkard. That's all nonsense. You can take a drink and stop right there."

"If they have that kind of liquor in there," answered Tommy, who was a bright little fellow for his years, "I don't know that I would mind taking a glass, just to see what it tastes like. You are sure they have that kind, are you?"

"What kind?" demanded Jack.

"Why, the kind that has the stopin it. I guess not many of the men of this town have ever drank that kind. They drank the kind that had a keep on. But if you've got the kind in there that has a stop to it I'll go in and take a glass."

Jack Saunders hung his head. He knew what the boy said was true, and that the nonsense was all on his side—talking about taking a drink and then stopping when he felt like it. The trouble was he didn't please to stop, nor did any of the others. Tommy was exactly right. It isn't safe for any boy, or man either, to take the first drink until some one invents the kind that has a stop to it.

I'LL STIR THE BATTER WHILE YOU GO.

A boy in Pennsylvania signed the temperance pledge at one of the meetings held for the children. A short time afterwards his mother was busy in her kitchen preparing cakes and pies.

She said "Davy, go up to the closet and bring down the whiskey jug. I want some for these mince pies."

Davy, as his habit was, instantly obeyed. But as he went dancing upstairs, the thought came to him, Can you a temperance boy, carry a whiskey jug?"

He stopped right there on the stair and decided the question. Then hurrying back to the kitchen he said, "O, mamma, I can't carry a whiskey jug—I've signed the pledge; but I'll stir the batter while you go."

Without a word the mother gave into his little hands the spoon with which she was stirring the batter, and went herself to bring the jug. She felt a strange, choking sensation in her throat, but she walked up those stairs with a firm tread and seized the jug. When she came down the little fellow was beating away at the dough with all his might. His eyes followed her as she went to the sink and began to empty out the contents of the jug.

"What are you doing mamma?"

"I am emptying out the whiskey. We'll not have any more in our mince pies."

"O mamma, do you mean it?"

"Yes, I mean to use lemons in its place."

"Goody, goody! I'm so glad—then I can eat them too; can't I, mamma?"

"Yes my dear, and mamma will not make any thing that her little boy cannot eat."

"Goody, goody! we're going to have temperance pies." And Davy danced up and down the kitchen, as the whiskey gurgled out of the jug into the sink.

Don't you think Davy is a real good temperance boy? Then follow his example, touch not, taste not, handle not the unclean thing.—The Christian Child.

OUR GREATEST CURSE.

The saloon is the greatest curse of the present day, the fountain-head from whence flow streams of evil. It fills our prisons with criminals, our insane asylums with victims, and our graveyards with paupers' graves. It turns happy homes into barren wastes. It debauches and ruins the husband, the son, the father; it destroys the happiness of the wife, the mother, the daughter. It clothes them in rags, starves them, and breaks their hearts. And for what? That a few men may grow rich and flourish on the burnt ashes of homes. Every conscientious thinker admits that all I have said is only the sad truth. Then why allow this terrible cause of crime and wickedness and wretchedness to go on? Why not inaugurate a war against it that will overthrow it? If every good man should vote as his better nature dictates, this evil would be abolished. Do not say that it is hopeless to war against it, that it is too strongly intrenched in human hearts and selfishness, for right will triumph in the end. Woman's Home Companion.

TRUE BRAVERY.

Col. Higginson, when once asked to name the incident of the Civil War that he considered the most remarkable for bravery, said that there was in his regiment a man whom every one liked—a man who was brave and noble, who was pure in his daily life, absolutely free from the dissipation in which most of the other men indulged. One night at a champagne supper, when many were becoming intoxicated, some one in jest called for a toast from this young man.

Col. Higginson said that the young man arose, pale, but with perfect self-possession, and said: "Gentlemen, I will give you a toast which you may drink as you will, but which I will drink, if you please, in water. The toast that I have to give is this "Our Mothers."

Instantly a strange spell seemed to come over all those present. They drank the toast in silence; there was no more laughter, no more song; and one by one they slunk out of there sad, but thoughtful. The lamp of memory had begun to burn, and the name "mother" touched every man's heart.

Gospel liberty is the liberty that God gives men through the gospel. It expresses God's idea of freedom. It is the freedom seen in nature, and in all the works of God's hands. It is the freedom of the winds, blowing where they list; it is the freedom of the flowers, scattered everywhere through wood and meadow; is the freedom of the birds, soaring unrestrained through the heavens; the freedom of the sunbeam, shooting from its parent orb; the freedom of the celestial orbs, sweeping ceaselessly on through infinite space. This is the freedom that flows out from the great Creator through all his works. It is sin that has produced what is narrow and contracted and circumscribed,—that has erected boundary lines, and made men stingy and niggardly. But sin is to be removed, and then perfect liberty will be realized once more in every part of creation. Even now this freedom may be tasted, by having sin removed from the heart. To enjoy this freedom through eternity is the glorious privilege now offered in the gospel to all men. Who that claims to love liberty can let this opportunity pass unimproved?

The world's sugar-crop for the manufacturing-year 1901-2 was in excess of ten and three-quarter millions of long tons, or, in round numbers, twenty-four billion pounds. If this were loaded upon wagons, two tons to each, and the wagons set in close order, the train would encircle the earth. Of this great quantity, more than two-thirds was made from sugar beets.—From The Sugar-Beet in United States, in the June Cosmopolitan.

Poetry.

What have We Done Today?

We shall do so much in the years to come,
But what have we done today?
We shall give our gold in a princely sum,
But what did we give today?
We shall lift the heart and dry the tear,
We shall plant a hope in the place of fear,
We shall speak the word of love and cheer,
But what did we speak today?

We shall be so kind in the after-while,
But what have we been today?
We shall bring to each lonely life a smile,
But what have we brought today?
We shall give to truth a grander birth,
And to steadfast faith a deeper worth,
We shall feed the hungering souls of earth;
But whom have we fed today?

We shall reap such joys in the by and by,
But what have we sown today?
We shall build us mansions, oh so high,
But what have we built today?
'Tis sweet in life dreams to bask,
But here and now do we our task?
Yes, this is the thing our souls must ask,
"What have we done today?"

Notes By the Way.

Having completed my labors in New York and New Jersey, I took a train on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad for Baltimore, Maryland, the former home of Brother Allen B. Mugruder.

The occasion of my going there was the reception of a letter from Mrs. Spammer, while I was at Fonthill, Ont., requesting me to call there and baptize her into the saving name of the Lord Jesus.

On the road to Baltimore, I passed through much scenery that was of interest. I passed through Philadelphia, but did not stop off.

On arriving at Baltimore, I found Mrs. Spammer waiting for me at the depot. She informed me that her mother, Mrs. Wilen, had also made up her mind to become obedient to the faith. I suggested that it would be pleasanter for them to accompany me to Mauertown, Virginia, and be baptized at that place, where they could receive the hospitality and greetings of the household of faith. They accepted the invitation, and consequently on the next morning we all took the train for Mauertown.

Maryland appeared to me to be a prosperous State, if we may judge from the appearance of things as we ride through the State. The farm houses were neat, commodious and well painted structures. The barns were large and kept in good repair, and the farms well fenced in. When I see these things in my travels, I conclude that is a prosperous country.

At Strausbourg, Va., we changed from the B. & O. R. R. to the Southern R. R.., for Mauertown. On arriving there we found Bro. Jacob Boyer and son waiting there with carriages to convey us to his home, where we received the welcome of his family.

On arriving, we learned that an appointment was given out for that evening. The congregation at this place own a neat and commodious church building, which is a credit to that local church; it is kept in good condition, and is neatly furnished.

The time for meeting having come, brethren, sisters and friends began to arrive, and one by one as they came, we were introduced to these dear ones in Christ. How sweet it is to meet those of a kindred mind, and of a like precious faith, strangers in the flesh, but not strangers to the covenants of promise, thank God. I could respond with the poet:

How blest the sacred tie which binds,
In sweet communion kindred minds!
How swift the heavenly courses run
Whose hearts, whose faith, whose hopes are one.

To each, the life of each, how dear;
What tender love! what holy fear!
How does the gen'rous flame within,
Refine from earth, and cleanse from sin.

The visitors from Baltimore were warmly welcomed by all, and it was highly appreciated by them.

I was much pleased to meet our Sister Sarah F. Morgan, the widow of Elder Morgan, the former Evangelist in the State of Virginia. Sister Morgan resides at Browntown, Va., who on learning of my coming to Mauertown, came over to meet me. Meetings were continued over Sunday. On Sunday brethren and sisters from Browntown, and Stephens City were present. On Saturday afternoon quite a number of the household of faith assembled on the banks of a beautiful stream running through the property of Bro. John Boyer, where I buried three obedient believers in baptism. The two ladies from Baltimore, and a son of Bro. Alva Boyer.

They rose with him to live anew
A holy life of faith;
Believing what the Scriptures say,
And what the Scriptures saith.

My sojourn at Mauertown was an event I shall ever remember. I visited many of the members while there, and the memory of those sweet interviews will long abide with me.

It was my first experience in a mountainous country. Bro. Jacob Boyer's residence is nestled among the foothills of the Massanutton Mountains. In early morning I was interested in watching the sunrise as the sun appeared to climb up from behind the mountains. A misty cloud rested upon the top of the mountains, and as the sun arose, beautiful colors were seen in the cloud, and the horizon became gilded like a book of gold, as it rose higher and higher, until at last the glorious orb of day surmounted the cloud, and smiled upon all nature.

I also visited at the home of Bro. David Boyer and family. His home is upon the banks of the beautiful Shenandoah river, and right at the foot of the mountains. I also visited at the home of his son Marcellus, which is opposite to that of his father on the other side of the river. I also enjoyed a visit with Bro. Alva Boyer, and Sister McIntuff. Our Sisters from Baltimore also accompanied me on these visits, and formed a pleasant acquaintance with them.

Brother Jacob took me on a carriage ride to the city of Woodstock, where his brother Milton resides.

Brother and Sister Milton Boyer have a son who is a surgeon in the United States Army, located at the Philippine Islands. They showed me many things of interest which he had sent them from those Islands.

My work for the present being ended at Mauertown, Sister Morgan and myself started for Browntown. On the way there we stopped off at Bentonville and remained over night with Sister Cook and family. Sister Cook called in her neighbors, and I addressed them that evening at their house. Much interest was manifested. They said they had never heard such teaching before, and that their ministers had never taught them such things. Sister Cook has since reported their interest in these gospel truths. I believe Bentonville will be an excellent place for evangelical services.

The next day Brother Jackson Updike came with his conveyance to take Sister Morgan and myself to Browntown. This place is nestled in among the mountains, the Blue Ridge mountains on one side, and the Massanutton on the other. It is the most rocky country my eyes ever rested upon. Thousands upon thousands of these stones are piled up as fences. The land in this valley is rich and produces immensely. Some of the scenery in this country is rich beyond description. I often wished that I had had a camera with me that I might preserve some of these beauties of nature. After several hours of an interesting ride we arrived at the home of Bro. Updike. Sister Updike is a Sister of our Sister Morgan, she makes her home at this place. Brother and Sister Updike Jr., also live at this place. Their house is backed right up against the foot of this mountain. Bro. Wagoner of Indiana once conducted a series of meetings at this place, and while here his ambition led him to climb the mountain to the summit. He concluded that in the future he would take that kind of experience in sections.

The brethren in this valley own a small church building. Meetings were announced to commence on the night of my arrival, and with the exception of one night continued right along, although it was raining a great deal of the time. I am told that if conditions had been favorable the church would not have held the crowds that would have come.

On Sunday, members came from Bentonville, Stephens City and Winchester. At the conclusion of the meeting on Sunday morning, a man named Brown, came to me and said: Sir, I would rather take your hand than that of the President of the United States. I have about made up my mind to become an ex-Methodist. Another Methodist who had been attending my meetings also visited me at the home of Brother and Sister Ashby Updike. He had listened to a Josephite preacher who had been preaching his damnable heresy in that neighborhood. I completely satisfied him on that point. He had noticed that in order to sustain his blasphemous teaching he had to discredit and throw doubt upon all Scriptures that opposed his God-dishonoring doctrine. Such men are certainly more dangerous infidels than Bob Ingersoll could ever think of being. Men of that class also teach that the offering of Jesus upon the cross was not sacrificial, and as far as that is concerned they say that the blood of Jesus was no better than that of Tom Paine.

The people certainly ought to see that such teaching is nothing but the vilest kind of blasphemy. Drive all such blasphemous preachers from your midst; for all that they can do for you is to needlessly disturb your mind, and break up the harmony of your church. Expel them as you would a poisonous reptile. A reptile would poison your body, but they your mind.

Brother Ashby also took me to see a sister who had become affected by reading some of the trashy literature of these blasphemous preachers. I was also successful in satisfying her. Her husband was greatly rejoiced, he said he would rather have lost fifty dollars than have had me fail to visit his home.

The day of Christ is near at hand, and our minds should be filled with things of more importance than that which can do nothing more for you than to distract and disturb. A proper receptacle for all such literature would be the stove.

A good work can be accomplished in the Browntown Valley, and hope that Sister Morgan and others will push the work in that locality.

My work being finished in that place Brother Ashby Updike drove me to the city of Front Royal, where I took the train for Waterlick. I was met at that place by the husband of Sister Ritenour, and taken to their home at Dellbeck.

The drive through that valley is filled with intense interest. It is a very narrow valley. For a long distance we drove between two ranges of mountains, and the only space between them was wide enough to admit of a single wagon-road and a stream of water about fifty feet wide. The scenery is exceedingly romantic, and reminds me somewhat of the rough and rugged scenery I witnessed at Harper's Ferry, when on my journey from Baltimore to Mauertown. The widest part of that valley is said to be about one mile and a half.

Meeting was appointed at Dellbeck on the night of my arrival, and continued over Sunday, to Friday night. Audiences were good, and if followed up much good might result. They talked some of getting Bro. Wagoner to come and continue the work. On Sunday quite a number crossed the mountains from Mauertown, to attend the meeting. I visited at the homes of Bro Samuel Boyer, Bro. McNelli, and Bro. Cloverstone.

Bro. Samuel Boyer took me to Seven Fountains, to see a natural curiosity. In a small piece of ground at the foot of a mountain, seven mineral springs arise out of the earth, and each spring is a different kind of water. Two different kinds of Sulphur water springs were about three feet apart.

Before the war this used to be a famous health resort. People used to come by train to Woodstock, and were then driven over the mountains in busses.

On Saturday, Bro. Samuel Boyer drove me over this mountain to the city of Woodstock. On reaching the summit of the mountain, we stopped and viewed the landscape over. What a beautiful sight met our vision. The beautiful Shenandoah river takes a zigzag route among the green fields in the valley, and about the green groves, and the white farm houses, with the waving fields of grain. It gave the appearance of a magnificent park.

We remained over night with Bro. Milton Boyer and family at Woodstock. On Sunday morning Brother Milton took me over to the church at Mauertown, where I preached twice that Sunday, and staying over night with Brother Jacob Boyer and family. On Monday morning a son of Bro. Jackson Boyer drove me to Stephens City. On the way he pointed out to me historic points as they relate to our late civil war. We drove through Strausburg which was the scene of much conflict, and off on one side of Strausburg he pointed out battle hill, where the earth-works still remain, as the armies left them. He showed me the ruins of a stove factory which Gen. Sheridan burned. He showed me Fisher's Hill, where a battle took place. Also Cedar Creek where another battle was fought. This country is full of places of historic note.

I remained a few days at Stephens City, when I was taken to Strausburg, where I took the Southern Railroad for Danville, Virginia. It was a days trip from Strausburg to Danville.

After passing Charlottsville the landscape scenery is perfectly beautiful. The mountains from top to bottom are covered with green trees, mixed with the light green leaves, are the dark green cedars, pine and hemlock trees. Among these are scattered the boxwood trees all covered with white bloom. They are mountain gardens. I was met at Danville by Bro. Fretwell, and taken to his home. Danville is a pretty city of 20,000 inhabitants. There are no saloons in that city, and no druggist is allowed to sell liquor for any purpose.

We opened meetings in the Pythian Hall, and some interest was awakened. Contrary to the usual custom the rich and influential took the most interest in the things spoken. I was invited not only to their place of meeting to preach, but also to their homes for conversation. Regret was expressed that I could not stay in Danville another month and organize a Bible Class for daily Bible study.

At two places after meeting, the preachers jumped on me. I had been preaching the restitution age and so after service a Campbellite preacher said, Sir, I have a question to ask you. He reached for my Bible and began to hunt for Peter's burning day, in the Second epistle. He asked if it was in the 5th chapter. I did not know of more than three chapters in 2nd Peter, and so I said No, it is in the third chapter. He began to read about "the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat." etc. I asked him if he took all that literal? He said he did. Well, then, I said, if both heaven and earth are to become extinct, where are you going to? He replied that he did not know, and I think he told the truth.

Another preacher at another place, said, I believe in an eternal burning hell, and the death that never dies. I preached one evening in the Christian Church, and baptized an old gentleman aged 84 years, named Saunders, may God's blessing rest upon him.

Being somewhat wearied with an active six months trip, I returned to Chicago for a brief rest.

I expect to be at the Indiana Conference on June 13. After this I expect to fill appointments in Wisconsin and Northern Canada, and return by way of Michigan, filling what appointments there may be in Michigan and Indiana.

If there are any others that desire me to hold services in Wisconsin, Northern Canada, Michigan and Indiana, while on that trip they may write to me at my address, 420 N. Willow Ave., Austin Station, Chicago, Ill.

The Bereans Column.

[Under this heading the society of "Bereans" of Illinois, will supply the copy, and endeavor to fill the space once a month.]

Dear Bereans:

Grace and peace be multiplied unto you through the knowledge of God and of Jesus our Lord. To suppose that any man can be saved for general correctness of moral character, without any definite faith, would be a sad mistake. Peter exhorts his brethren thus giving all diligence, add to your faith, virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness, and to brotherly kindness love or charity. 2 Pet. i. 5-7. Add to your faith proves that the faith must first be had as an essential foundation as a starting point; and that all the shining list of Christian virtues are to be added to it.

Correct faith is as needful as correct conduct. Cornelius was a devout man and one that feared God, and yet he had to hear the gospel of the kingdom, and be baptized in order to place himself in a savable condition. Acts x. 2; xi. 14.

Dear Bereans, the above exhortation is addressed to all the dear ones who have obtained like precious faith. Christian virtues are to be affirmed constantly in order that they which have believed in God might be careful to maintain good works, and we should have great zeal to build up and keep those in our most holy faith continually exhorting unto love and good works, standing fast in one spirit, with one mind, striving together for the faith of the gospel, ever looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ.

Come Lord Jesus, come quickly.

Your Sister waiting,

Keturah Rogers.

Dear Bereans:

I will write a short piece on the covenant made by God to Abraham. In Gen. xii. 1-7, God appeared to Abraham and made the covenant with him. He said he would make his name great and make of him a great nation. Also that he would give the land of Canaan to him and to his seed for an everlasting possession. We find that this prophecy was never fulfilled while Abraham lived; for when his wife died he had to buy land for her burial, and in Gen. xxv. 10 we find that he was buried by her side.

At Abraham's death the covenant was made to his son Isaac. The covenant was the same. This prophecy was not fulfilled to Isaac either.

At Isaac's death the covenant was renewed to Jacob, Isaac's son, in a dream. In Ex. vi. 1-9 God, in talking to Moses referred to this same covenant. In Deut. xxiv. God took Moses up on the mountain and showed him the land of Canaan, but on account of his disobedience he never got into the land. We see by this that if we intend to inherit this promised land we must obey God's commands.

Bernice Phelps.

WHY THE JEWS WERE BANISHED FROM THEIR LAND.

After the Jewish nation was brought out of Egypt and settled in the land promised to Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, for an everlasting possession, they were told to hearken diligently unto the voice of the Lord, and to observe and do all his commandments. But if they did not observe and do all his commandments, they should be cast out of their country and scattered among all people, from one end of the earth even unto the other.

They at first acknowledged no king, but God; but forgetting their promise they demand a king. After the ten tribes revolted under the rule of Rehoboam, most of the kings provoked the Lord by idolatrous wickedness. Hoshea, the last king who reigned over Israel, was conquered by the Assyrians and the children of Israel were never restored from their captivity.

Zedekiah was the last king of Judah, and was taken captive to Babylon. We read the overthrow of his kingdom in Ezek. xxi. They returned and rebuilt the temple, but it was again destroyed. It was rebuilt for the last time by Herod, and finally destroyed by the Romans. A great many of the Jews are said to have perished at that time. The remainder were led captive among all nations, and from that period they have never been restored to their own land, but remain a persecuted and scattered nation.

Kathryn Townsend.

Dear Bereans:

I know each loyal heart throbs with love when we think of that kingdom over there. The central figure in the picture is our beloved and loving Savior, King of kings and Lord of lords, to whom is applied so many significant names, each one telling an unchanted story more charming than the greatest work of fiction. Oh, I am so glad that you are striving to study the Book that reveals all these precious truths to our minds.

The Holy City, the temple, the rulers, the attendants, the river and tree for healing, the ineffable spirit of justice, love, mercy and truth which pervades and influences all. A God-controlled government for his subjects that are scattered far and near over the King's dominions.

We have Scripture informing us something about these subjects. Luke says he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever. He is to have the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession; the nations are to walk in the light of the city, and the law is to go forth from Mt. Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem, when God's will shall be done on earth as it is done in heaven.

What wondrous blessings will pour down upon God's subjects. Just now human governments are in a tangle, waiting for that master hand to unravel and adjust the reins with justice and judgment. May God help us all to be faithful and realize what position we occupy before our great High Priest, and may we all come off conquerors through Him that loves us.

Obituary.

James C. Stone died at Ukiah, Mendocino Co. Cal. March 27, 1903, aged 74 years, 2 mo. and 17 days.

He was a native of Tennessee, but moved to California in an early day, and was for many years a resident of Lake Co. Cal. Brother Stone was a member of the Church of God for about 25 years, he and his wife having joined after hearing the truth as taught in God's Word, from Elder Richard Corbaley, his wife and daughter Mary preceded him to the grave several years ago. There are four sons and two daughters still living.

Brother Stone was a kind and indulgent father, a good neighbor, and a firm every-day Christian. May we all be prepared to meet him on the resurrection morn.

D. T. Seely.

Dear ones of the precious faith:

Lift up your heads and take courage, for your redemption draweth near. Behold I stand at the door and knock. If any man hears my voice, and wishes to come in he can do so by believing the gospel and turning from sin and coming in God's appointed way. Thus he changes his relationship with God. We have been aliens from God by our foolish acts, being Gentiles in the flesh and aliens to God, but now we have believed the gospel, been baptized for remission of our sin, came up out of the watery grave, so to speak—a new creature in Christ Jesus, to lead a new life. We now are no more strangers and foreigners; we are now fellow citizens, of the household of faith. We now have the foundation of apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ being the chief cornerstone.

Let every one who has taken this step trim and hew off all the sharp points of worldliness, and fit himself for a place in that great building.

J. S. Arnold.

Notice.

The members of the Association of Believers of the Church of God, will meet on Saturday, June 20, 1903, at Felida, Washington, to elect officers and to transact any other business that may come up before the Society.

Now dear brethren, of our most holy faith, let us go to this meeting, which will be held in connection with the N. W. Conference, determined to do for the Master all that it is in our power to do.

This notice is late because I have just returned from a visit to the East and did not know where the Conference would be held. Hoping it will appear in time, I am yours for the truth.

Almira Brooks, Sec'y.

NOTICE.

To the Bereans especially, or to any of the brethren.

It is the desire of many that Bro. S. J. Lindsay conduct a Bible School for at least ten days prior to the beginning of the next annual Conference to be held at Oregon, Ill., for the purpose of Bible drills or systematic Bible instruction. We all need such Normal instruction, and this letter is to all, and especially to those who may be missed by circular letter.

The plan is for those who take the work to take up lodging in the Conference hall, and do their own cooking and furnishing, thus making their stay as inexpensive as they please.

Oregon is a very pleasant city, located on the banks of Rock River, and an ideal place in leisure hours for an outing.

No tuition will be charged, as Bro. Lindsay has offered his services free for this time. Let us know in good season if you will come. For further particulars address the undersigned, Chairman Evangelist Committee, Illinois State Conference, at Lanark, Ill.

Your Brother in hope.

J. M. Gloffelty.

Announcement.

The 47th Annual Conference of the Church of God in Michigan, will be held (D. V.) at Dutton, Kent County, on Thursday evening, June 4, 1903, and continue over the following Sunday.

These meetings have been held so long that they have become an established fact in the minds of the brethren, and they expect the meeting as surely as the time comes. And then it seems we get so much real encouragement and enjoyment from them, it seems like a family reunion, where we can enjoy the blessed communion of those of like precious faith, so that we feel we would be lost without them, for from these gatherings we derive much strength if we come with the right spirit. All who can come should make a special effort to be there.

A programme will appear later.

Let us remember the words of Paul, in Heb. x. 25: "Not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is; but exhorting one another, and so much the more, as ye see the day approaching."

Dutton is situated on the Michigan Central R. R. ten miles south east of Grand Rapids.

TITHING NOTICE.

Dear Sisters:

Conference nearly here, and with it our Tithing Meeting. The sisters have truly done nobly in this work, but it must not stop. "Eternal vigilance" must be our watchword. "Occupy till I come" were the words of our Guide. Let us not be slack in this work. Perhaps we have seen fit to help other needy objects, and have used our tenth for that purpose. Let us be ready to report what our tenth has been, for what purpose used, etc. If you cannot be present, as we hope you may, send in the offering.

There are several names on our roll who have not been present for years, neither have they responded by letter. May we not hear from you this year. If we could realize the many needs, in so many different ways, you would not withhold your offerings, though they may be small. We are sending THE RESTITUTION now to nearly a score of persons unable to take the paper. Every year others are brought before the Society for help. You may be the means of sending the gospel to some of them. It may mean personal sacrifice, but that is just what God has asked us to do. Present your bodies a living sacrifice.

Be present for work, if possible.

M. A. WOODWARD, Sec.

The North West Conference of the Church of God will be held in the I. O. O. F. Hall, at Lake Shore, near Vancouver, Wash. June 10-21. I do not yet know what ministers will be with us. The committee will meet visiting brethren at the River view hotel, Vancouver. Every one is invited to attend and help make this Conference one long to be remembered.

The Quarterly Conference of the Churches of God in the State of Indiana, will convene at Antioch Church, five miles south of Plymouth, and three miles north of Argos, at 10 o'clock a. m. on Saturday, June 13, 1903, and continue over Sunday.

The "June Meeting" at old Antioch is a familiar term, not only to the faithful in the state of Indiana, but in many other states. Fond recollections cluster about this place. It has been the gathering place of brethren and sisters of the Abrahamic faith for many years. We make this call knowing that many are looking forward to this annual feast of spiritual good things.

Let us come together, brethren and sisters, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, for the edifying of one another in love. Let it be understood that we shall, as much as practicable, remain at the Church during the entire day on Saturday and Sunday, so that we may spend as much of the time as is possible in Christian fellowship.

A programme will be prepared and published later.

Scriptures Opened.

A third edition of the above named work is just out, and ready for delivery. This book has been before our readers so long now that its worth is well known. The author is Robert Ashcroft. The price for this edition is put low so that the brethren and sisters can get it to lend to honest enquirers after truth. We hope there are a few who have not turned their ears from the truth to fables. The book will speak for itself in its unfoldings of the purposes and plans of Jehovah, regarding the near future of the earth and its inhabitants. All should be interested in these truths, and those who have never read this book will have a feast. Price 65 cents post paid. Send to this office for them, or orders can be sent to J. O. Woodruff, Elizabeth, N. J.

A Word of Appreciation.

Some time ago I asked the brotherhood through THE RESTITUTION how many copies of the pamphlet "The Reasons of My Withdrawal from the Evangelical Association," would be wanted. Letters came from all parts of the country, some containing money stating the number of copies desired, so that a second edition of 1000 was printed. I wish to state that this edition is nearly exhausted, there being only about 150 left. Those wishing copies better send their orders early, as they will soon be gone. I desire, by this means, to thank the brethren for their encouraging words and financial help. Trusting that the seed will fall in good soil and produce fruit unto eternal life. 25 pages, at 5 cents per copy. A. H. Zilmer, Plymouth, Ind.

Immortality of the Soul.

Editor Restitution:

An article of mine in the Sentinel and Dr. Thomas's was copied into your p... r. I am emboldened to write you as the Sentinel has not printed my last. In your issue of May 13th Mr. Thomas has an article, the first proposition of which I wish to notice.

He quotes Gen. ii. 17. Now Mr. Thomas knows if he reads the Hebrew, that the literal reading is * * * for in the very day of eating, dying thou shalt surely die. Did man die that day? If not the devil told the truth, and God a falsehood. That he did not die a natural death is evident from Gen. iii. 17, for God says, "In sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life." Then there must be a death which allows a man to continue to live in the body, or did God lie? Paul tells Timothy of just such a death. 1 Tim. v. 6. Also the Ephes. ii. 1, 5. Here he speaks of a resurrection of believers, the first resurrection. They could not have been quickened if not dead. Then the death must ...e been a spiritual death, or separ... from God, as the meaning of ...is separation. Not only does ...teach that the spirit may ex... the body, but the Bible is ...

(x.11) "Thou hast clothed ... skin and flesh," who is the ...ot flesh sure, for that was his ... or tabernacle, as Peter says, 2 ... 14, "I must put off this my tab...nacle." Again Job says (xix. 26), "After my skin hath been thus destroyed, yet without my flesh shall I see God (min means from or apart, from or without). How could he see him if dead?

Mr. Thomas, as I understand him, makes the resurrection an impossibility. If all is dead nothing remains, the man is as before he lived, and as he was not before he lived, he is not again, and what is not cannot be raised. If a man could live again, he would be a new creation, and in no sense would it be a resurrection. It destroys the divinity of Christ. Then when Christ died he was all dead, and had no power to take his life again as he promised, for dead men are powerless. Then he and the Father could not be one, for then we had no God, and as there was no one to raise him, he was not raised, and God is dead? And as there was nothing to raise he don't exist.

Allow me to ask Mr. Thomas if he will tell me where the Bible says (now I don't want any of his deductions, but just plain Scripture texts) Christ shall come a second time in judgment? ...re where it says there shall be a general judgment? Also where it says there is to be a future resurrection? Or that time here shall ever cease? Or that the world shall ever have an end? Or that a man shall not gamble, dance, attend theatre, or marry a dozen wives if he wishes? When he seeks for positive Scripture to uphold much of our morality and ethics he will find we must compare Scripture with Scripture to get a safe line of conduct.

D. C. BIXBY.

Editor Restitution:

As Dr. Bixby in a previous article in the Dover Sentinel upon this subject has frankly admitted that the Bible nowhere plainly states that man has an immortal soul or never-dying spirit, and as I have plainly quoted chapter and verse which distinctly says that "God only hath immortality" (inherently), surely the proverb is fulfilled in him, "There is none so blind as he who will not see." After all the evidence given in previous articles has failed, I must confess my inability to open his eyes to a knowledge of the truth. Dr. J. H. Thomas of Wyoming has kindly consented to undertake the task. I trust Dr. Bixby will profit by his wise counsel, as the writer has done in the past.

S. H. THOMAS.

Editor Restitution:

It may appear to your readers as a useless repetition of what has been said on the question of the immortality of the soul, to reply to Mr. Bixby's letter, but out of respect to Mr. Bixby we will make brief answer.

Mr. Bixby must be aware the Hebrew "moth tamuth" has different readings, all of which amount to the same thing, that Adam should die and return again to dust from which he was taken. The Common Version has it, "In the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." The marginal reading is "Hebrew, dying thou shall die." Dr. Adam Clark, the Methodist Commentator says, "moth tamuth," literally, "a death thou shalt die, or dying thou shalt die," in that moment thou shalt become mortal and shall continue in a dying state till thou die. This we find literally accomplished. Webster gives a still more rational reading, "For in the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt become a son of death." There is no other than a literal death—a returning again to dust expressed in the passage. The moment he partook of the forbidden tree, in that very day he became a dying man, and 930 years after died as God had said, "dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return." Therefore quite contrary to the reasoning of Mr. Bixby, when the serpent said, "Thou shalt not surely die," he told a lie, and deceived the woman, while God spake the truth. As the passage cited by Mr. Bixby (1 Tim. vi. 6) is not analogous we will pass it without comment. It is true that the Ephesian brethren had been dead in trespasses, and as Paul says, quickened to a life of righteousness, but there is no analogy between such a death and the death of Adam, for in his case it was a returning again to dust, which was not the case with the Ephesians.

Mr. Bixby says, "Not only does science teach that the spirit may exist without the body, but the Bible is full of this teaching." He must have discovered some new scientific work, will he give us the name of the author or tell us where it can be had? And if he means by "spirit," a spirit entity or "immortal soul," will he give us one passage out of the fullness of the Bible that teaches it? Does Mr. Bixby think for a moment that Job x. 11, "Thou hast clothed me with skin and flesh" teaches it? It would seem so, for he asks, "who is the me?" Is it possible that Mr. Bixby would have us believe that the "me" was a spirit entity or immortal soul within Job that said, "Thou hast clothed me with skin and flesh"? Let him compare Job ix. 17, and dispell the darkness of his mind, "For he breaketh me with a tempest, and multiplieth my wounds." Who is the "me" and the "my" in this passage? Not an immortal spirit, for then it could not be broken by a tempest, nor have its wounds multiplied. Job is speaking of himself, and the language is as common as household words. If Mr. Bixby should say my skin is sore, my bones ache, or you are hurting me, would the "me" be any other than himself? I am fully in accord with Dr. Clark that Job is speaking in this passage of his generation when in embryo before the members of the body were formed, and delicately and beautifully says, "Thou hast fenced me with bones and sinews, and clothed me with skin and flesh." Peter is of a kindred character and needs no comment. Mr. Bixby also cites Job xix. 26, "Though after my skin worms destroy this body yet in my flesh shall I see God." There are many readings of this obscure passage. Dr. Clark, "After skin worms destroy this—not body nik-kephu zoth they—diseases and affliction, destroy this wretched composition of misery and corruption." Coverdale reads, "I shall rise out of the earth in the latter day, that I shall be clothed again with this skin and see God in my flesh," or resurrection body. The marginal reading of the Common Version is, "After I shall awake, though this body be destroyed yet out of my flesh shall I see God." Mr. Bixby asks, "How could he see him if dead?" No, no Mr. Bixby, he cannot see him when he is dead, but when like David, he awakes in his likeness, or as 1 John iii. 2, "We know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is." What a glorious hope—what a comfort it was to Job, for though skin worms and a loathsome disease were destroying his mortal body, yet in the morning of the resurrection when he awoke he should see God "for himself and not for another." Is it any wonder he cries out, "O that thou wouldst hide me in the grave, appoint me a set time, and remember me * * * all the days of my appointed time will I wait till my change comes. Thou shalt call and I will answer thee." Job xiv. 13-15. Mr. Bixby says again, "Mr. Thomas as I understand him makes the resurrection an impossibility. If all there is of man is dead, nothing remains, the man is as before he lived, and what is not cannot be raised, if he lived again it would be a new creation, in no sense would it be a resurrection." Mr. Bixby does not seem to understand the terms he uses. To create in its primary sense is to produce, or bring into existence that which never existed, while resurrection means a "standing up," or rising again of that which had before existed; therefore if a man die, and become as though he had not been, and is caused to stand up or live again, it is a resurrection and not a creation. Therefore all that Mr. Bixby says about resurrection and destroying the divinity of Christ is not [illegible] ed by Mr. Bixby have no bearing on the question of the immortality of the soul, so I will pass them by with the exception of the first. He says, "Allow me to ask Mr. Thomas if he will tell me where the Bible says that Christ shall come the second time in judgment." Let us see what Paul says about it. Heb. ix. 28, "Unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation." Surely Mr. Bixby cannot be looking for him, or he never would have asked the above question. See also Acts i. 11, "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? This same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." What does become the second time for? See Acts x. 42, "And he commanded us to preach unto the people, and to testify that it is he which was ordained of God to be the Judge of the quick and dead." 2 Tim. iv. 1, "I charge thee therefore before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom." Jno. v. 22, 27, "For the Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment unto the Son, and hath given him authority to execute judgment, because he is the Son of Man." Will Mr. Bixby ask for more? I trow not. In like manner may all the questions be answered by a thus saith the Lord. In closing I would kindly advise Mr. Bixby to revise his creed, for there is not a line or passage from Genesis to Revelations that teaches that man is immortal by virtue of his creation, but on the other hand the Bible says plainly, God only hath immortality. But it is a consoling thought that Christ abolished death and brought immortality to light through the gospel. Whoever then has a comprehensive understanding of the gospel, or the things concerning the kingdom of God and name of Jesus Christ, and being immersed in water for the remission of sins shall be saved, but he that believeth not shall be condemned.

Palestine Letters.—No. 3.

Editor Citizen:

We are now in Egypt with no prospect of getting any further. There is cholera in Alexandria, and of course all other towns are quarantined. We arrived in Alexandria some time during Wednesday night, and our steamer dropped anchor a quarter of a mile from the wharf. We were greeted the next morning with a gang of the sons of [illegible] of Hamites and colors with the most grotesque dresses that one can imagine. But I will not attempt to give a description of them. We thought we had passed through many troubles on the Italian steamer in crossing the Atlantic but that was nothing in comparison to what we were destined to encounter in coming to Alexandria. We knew nothing of there being cholera here until we arrived; for it was reported in the papers that the cholera had ceased, and the quarantine raised. But this was false. We found ourselves in a trap from which we could not extricate ourselves.

We went on shore, and hired two rooms with three beds and two lounges for which we had to pay $1.00 per day, and furnish our own provision. We hired a dragoman to pilot us around, and interpret for us. But he proved to be a rascal. He several times took me into saloons, and asked me to drink something with him, but I did not happen to be thirsty, so I came out with a whole skin. He even laid a plan that we believe would have resulted in the murder of the whole company and a watery grave if he with others had succeeded in their schemes. But God preserved us from this.

We dismissed Joseph as soon as we found another dragoman more to our liking. Hassan proved to be a man of strict integrity. On one occasion he [illegible] for our [illegible] against his own interests. At another time he gave back four dollars which had been overpaid, which he might have kept and we never should have known it. Such honesty we believe is rare in Egypt.

Our stay in Alexandria was very unpleasant indeed, nearly every man we met seemed to think we were under obligation to give him "Backsheesh." Those we hired to do any thing for us could not be trusted. If there was the least loop-hole in the bargain made with them, they would improve the opportunity to demand more for their labor than the agreement called for. This characteristic of the Alexandrians together with this fact, that seldom could we find any one that could understand or talk our language in the least, and none intelligently; rendered it very difficult for us to learn any thing. This has been the case among all that we have encountered since leaving America.

Near our boarding house are many piles of stone and mortar the result of the rebellion of Arabi Pasha. It seems that these buildings were burned by him, and so the walls tumbled down, filling the streets and side walks with debris and rubbish. In most places the streets had been cleared, and in some places by piling the rubbish upon the side walks and these now were being cleared by men in large companies carrying it in baskets made of palm leaf away up and back to get it out of the way.

We saw some camels in the city that apparently had been used to bring dates or other fruits into the city to sell. Dates appeared to form a staple commodity for the market of Alexandria. They were of a great variety and very abundant. Apples also were quite plenty; but they seemed to lack the flavor of American apples.

In the market we saw oranges, lemons, limes, grapes, pomegranates, quinces, chestnuts, olives, plums, mandarins, figs, tomatoes, and a very great variety of fruits, nuts and vegetables that we knew nothing about, nor could we learn the names of them from the Egyptians. Some of them were cooked on the side walks, together with bread, cakes, rice, beans, potatoes, fish, mutton, sausages, and many other things, and served out to customers as they were wanted.

We noticed that the mutton of Alexandria was very fat; really the fattest we ever saw. We did not learn where it came from, but saw two ships loads unloading at the wharf.

The beef market is not very large; and but very little if any pork. Fish is not very abundant, but we saw some. Irish and sweet potatoes are quite plenty.

Probably one-fourth of the shops or small stores on the street had the ...ebac (Tobacco) on them. The inhabitants, both native and foreign, smoke nearly all the time. I have seen them smoking before they were out of bed in the morning, also during the times of their meals, taking alternately coffee and smoke, as if both were alike necessary for their sustenance.

The shops in Alexandria are mostly small affairs. Many of them are only little corners, and many are kept on the side walks without any enclosure whatever. Yet many are good sized buildings, but none to be compared in magnificence to the average stores in America.

Many shops for labor we saw on the side walks, such as blacksmiths, tinsmiths, basket-makers, joiners, shoemakers, etc., and these without any enclosure whatever; pedestrians being crowded out into the streets where they were under the necessity of watching with strictest vigilance to keep from being run over by carriages and carts.

Many of the buildings are grand, but not magnificent like the same class of buildings in America. We saw only a few buildings that were made of wood and these were only temporary. Aside from these exceptions, the buildings are made entirely of stone, and many of the fronts of white and variegated marble. The stairs of the house we occupy were made of stone and ...ich keep, and have been [illegible] thousand years in use.

The animals here are poor things. We saw none that would compare at all favorably with the draught horses of Marseilles. The horses are small and very poor, hardly appearing to be able to get around, yet they were driven unmercifully.

We saw plenty of pleasure carriages similar to the same class of carriages in America. The animals for riding are usually donkeys of a very small size, not much larger than a sheep. The owners of these donkeys were very solicitous to loan them to pedestrians to take a "donkey-ride." We saw a great many of these on the street with men on them, their feet nearly touching the ground and followed by their owners on a trot with a whip, or more properly a club, beating the poor beasts to make them earn their hire. The feed they give them is simply chopped straw. We saw nothing more or better.

The streets of Alexandria are narrow and crooked, and some of them coming to an abrupt end, so that one is obliged to return and take another road, as we found on one occasion.

Infidelity of Josephitism.

The Josephites of today are nothing more or less than modern Ebionites, and just like the ancient Ebionites they hesitate not to lay impious hands upon Holy Scripture if it should contradict their blasphemous doctrines. The most numerous, and by far the most ancient copies of Matthew's gospel were written in Greek. The early Ebionites or Josephites set aside the Greek copies, and accept what they call a Hebrew gospel, which is a corruption doctored up to suit the corrupt theology of their predecessors. I will quote some authorities to prove the above statement. Epiphanius says: "In that gospel which they (the Ebionites) have called the gospel according to Matthew, which is not entire and perfect, but corrupted and curtailed, and which they call the Hebrew gospel," (and he quotes) "thus," says he, "they change the true account into a falsehood. * * * They have taken away the genealogy from Matthew, and accordingly begin their gospel with these words, 'It came to pass in the days of Herod, King of Judea.' This witness says in this socalled Hebrew gospel, they (the ancient Josephites) have "corrupted and curtailed" it, and furthermore, "they change the true account into a falsehood." This is just what the ancient Josephites did, and we are well aware that our modern Josephites are no better than their forefathers were, they are just as prone to "corrupt" and "curtail." "It is written in a certain gospel, which is called 'according to the Hebrews, if indeed any one is pleased to receive it, NOT AS AUTHORITY." Origen is a witness who lived at that time, and his judgment was that it cannot be received "AS AUTHORITY." Now this is what modern Josephites present to us as authority. Origen quotes another specimen of this Hebrew gospel, by which the Josephites swear, it it is as follows: "Just now my mother, the Holy Ghost, took me by one of my hairs, and carried me to the great mountain Tabor." This is just the kind of trash Josephites have to swallow if they accept this socalled Hebrew gospel as inspiration. A learned author quotes Irenæus as being the first ancient writer who mentions the Ebionites (Josephites) and said the Ebionites opposed the doctrines preached by the apostles (just like the modern Josephites) and rejected the two first chapters of Matthew, how closely modern Josephites follow their predecessors) and also the greater part of the books of the New Testament. (If they are not infidels what are they?) They only made use of a Hebrew gospel (which Origin denounced as of no authority) which they call Matthew's.

Let me give a little specimen as to how these Josephites reason and use Scripture. Page 41 Nazarene Messenger's Mr. Robbins says: "God hath ...d to the second Psa., "Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee." These statements of Paul establish beyond doubt the fact that, Jesus was begotten by God at his resurrection, and as he is the only one so begotten, he then became the only begotten Son." On page 57 he asks, "When did God beget Christ?" He answers, "When Christ chose to endure the cross," etc. He then asks, "When was he born from God's begettal?" He answers, "When he was born from the dead," etc. Now according to this astute reasoner, Jesus was begotten three times, (which is surely enough for one man) once by Joseph, second, "By God, at his resurrection." Third, "When Christ chose to endure the cross," etc. And according to this reasoner, he was begotten and born at the same time. Begotten at the resurrection. It requires more faith than I have got to believe that a man can be begotten and born at the same moment, and by the same means, viz: the resurrection. To put his begettal as well as birth at the resurrection, wont answer at all, seeing that God acknowledged him as his "only begotten Son," before his death, therefore he did not have to wait until his resurrection, for a beggetal. It certainly wont harmonize with either common sense or Scripture to have the begettal and birth occur at the same moment. Josephitism is a mixture of infidelity and nonsense. Do you want this sort of trash?

Notice.

The members of the Association of Believers of the Church of God, will meet on Saturday, June 20, 1903, at Felida, Washington, to elect officers and to transact any other business that may come up before the Society.

Now dear brethren, of our most holy faith, let us go to this meeting, which will be held in connection with the N. W. Conference, determined to do for the Master all that it is in our power to do.

This notice is late because I have just returned from a visit to the East and did not know where the Conference would be held. Hoping it will appear in time, I am yours for the truth.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JUNE 10, 1903.

If each one would look up his account, and in case he is owing on his subscription, will at once renew, we will esteem the favor highly. A number seem to have forgotten us.

Most people would hesitate to throw away life at once, yet are thoughtless about it when it comes to small pieces. Waste is always wrong, but in a special sense is it wrong to waste time. The best way to avoid shiftlessness and waste in financial matters, is to keep track of your money. How much you get, and how and what when. The [illegible] regard to [illegible] may even larger returns. Keep track of your time.

CONCERNING a well-kept life, Prof. Drummond writes the following:—"It requires a well-kept life to do the will of God, and even a better-kept life to will to do his will. To be willing is a rarer grace than to be doing the will of God. For he who is willing may sometimes have nothing to do, and must only be willing to wait; and it is easier far to be doing God's will than to be willing to have nothing to do—it is easier far to be working for Christ than it is to be willing to cease. No, there is nothing rarer in the world today than the truly willing soul, and there is nothing more worth coveting than the will to will God's will. There is no grander possession for any Christian life than the transparently simple mechanism of a sincerely obeying heart."

DR. HILLIS speaking of children going to church, and the present idea that people seem to have, that the Sunday school is the child's church, has this to say: "The Sunday school is a splendid supplement to church attendance, but a poor substitute for it. In this age of specialization, many look upon the Sunday School as the children's church. This is a grave mistake. The Sunday School has information for its keynote, not worship. Its stirring activity, its friendly hustle [illegible] atmosphere lack the quality of reverence which is the very first essential of public worship. The best Sunday School for a child, if there be but one, is a seat in the family pew beside its parents, at the ordinary services of the church. The argument that children acquire an aversion to the church by being forced to "go to meeting" by their parents is ridiculous. Children are "forced" by their parents to do all sorts of things, such as eating good food and abstaining from food that is harmful, attending school, and going to bed. It is not apparent that they thereby acquire a rooted aversion to wholesome food, to sleep, or to an education."

A WRITER in the Lutheran Observer, when speaking of the non-attendance of men at churches, hits the nail square on the head when he throws the question off from the minister, and on to the men who are members of churches. He makes it plain that these men do not realize their own responsibility. Most men act as if they had no burden on themselves for the well being of our churches. If the church does not prosper they are not to blame—they have paid the preacher, and the responsibility is his henceforth. This writer says: It is so easy to blame the minister, for that relieves all others of their personal responsibility. It makes a scapegoat of the minister by placing all the sins and shortcomings of the people on him, and if he cannot "draw the people" they are ready to send him forth into the wilderness. If all the men who are members of our churches remembered that they are responsible for their influence among men, and if they realized their personal responsibility toward getting men to church, then the proportion of men of our churches would be greatly increased. They have daily opportunity to impress some one favorably by the power of a consecrated life, and by a kind word, and personal and often repeated invitation. As we have opportunity, let us do good unto all men, and ever remember that we are laborers together with God, and that the responsibility rests not wholly upon the preacher to draw the strangers. Much can and has been accomplished by personal and consecrated effort on the part of faithful laymen.

MANY newspaper writers in this country endeavor to make it clear that Russia is leaving Manchuria—getting out of China—that it is more to her interest to get away as soon as order is restored, and all such like statements. These writers fail to comprehend the object Russia has in view. What Russia aims at is not only the acquisition of Manchuria—that is but a little step. She wants all of China. She don't want China dismembered, and taken by various countries. She wants it to stay till such time as the whole country will be absorbed by her. Meanwhile other parts of Asia are likewise being placed under her influence. Ultimately India with her riches. Could the other nations (especially England) be assured that Russia would be entirely satisfied with possession of Manchuria, and never want anything further, they would all say take it at once. But they know full well, far better than our scribblers do, that the ambition of Russia goes further than even all of China.

The Zionist Movement.

Knowing that our readers are interested in all that is being done for the Jews, we give this week an article written for the Chicago Tribune by Leon Zolotkoff who is grandmaster of the Knights of Zion. Whether the present "Zionist" movement will be the means in God's hand for bringing the Jewish people back to the land of Palestine or not, it is making a stir that is attracting the attention of the world to this race, and is at least a straw showing the direction of the wind. Mr. Zolotkoff says: For the sixth time within as many years representatives of Jewish organizations sympathizing with the Jews and striving for the re-establishment of a home for the homeless millions of the Jewish people on their ancestral soil will assemble today in convention in Pittsburg, Pa., for the purpose of ascertaining the sum and substance of their past achievements, and to devise plans for their future action.

The sixth annual convention of the Federation of American Zionists is actually the American end of a long line of Zionist gatherings, held in various parts of the world preparatory to the international Zionist congress, which in pursuance to a call issued by Dr. Herzl of Vienna, is to convene on Sunday, Aug. 23, in Basel, Switzerland. It is expected that the American as well as the European gathering this year will surpass in volume and importance all the preceding gatherings of that kind. The scope of the Zionist movement recently has been increasing with a rapidity and a vehemence which have no parallel in the history of the Dispora. The movement has become a dominant force in Israel; compelling by its logic and exalted ideals.

Seven million human beings—the larger half of the Jewish people—are compelled to carry on a precarious existence amidst hostile surroundings. Placed in a position of political and social inferiority, they naturally form the point of least resistance to outbursts of the lowest passions of violent mobs. The studious and systematic persecution in Russia, Roumania, and Austria has reduced the great masses of the Jewish people to a state of wretchedness and misery which defies description, and the process of physical and moral decay is bound to set in as a direct result of the gradual weakening of the power of resistance under the pressure of relentless persecution.

But the most horrible aspect of the situation is its hopelessness. Here is a people that cannot and would not die, and yet is not allowed to live. Their wanderings through many centuries have long since demonstrated to them that emigration only shifts the centers of attack from one place to another. But with the restricted immigration laws in all civilized countries, and with the royal alien commission in session in liberal England, even that questionable chance of escape is reduced to insignificance. And as if to accentuate the despair of the situation now comes the Kisheneff massacre.

What shall they do to be saved? From the innermost distressed soul of that martyred people the solution to the terrible problem bursts forth in accents of anguish: "To our home! To Zion! We have always hoped for it, prayed for it, yearned for it—now we must get it! We must—for there is no other escape!"

But how? Will the European powers not oppose such a move? Will the sultan of Turkey grant a charter? Where is the money to come from to finance such a stupendous enterprise? Will the wealthy Jews support the movement? Will the Christian world support it? And is Palestine not [illegible] too small? And is Palestine not [illegible]?

But the suffering people cannot stop to answer these questions. [illegible] brave pioneers have rushed into the [illegible] ised land, and within a few years fruitful and promising colonies have been formed out of the sand, as at Rishon-le-Zion in the south; out of the swamps, as at Sichron Jacob (Zamarin), in the west; and out of the rock, as at Rosh Pinah, in the north.

The occasion produced the leaders. A call for systematic organization issued and echoes responded from the four corners of the globe. From Canada to Cochin China, and from Calcutta to St. Petersburg, these Zionist societies have been established. The Jewish colonial trust was organized as the financial end of the movement. A Jewish national fund and an Anglo-Palestine company came into life for the purpose of carrying out the various provisions of the program adopted by the Basel congress.

The leaders of the movement sounded the sublime porte and found it willing to negotiate. Powerful monarchs have been approached and showed benevolent interest. The Christian world responded sympathetically. The down-trodden Jews in the lands of their sufferings brought their pennies gathered and earned in pain and privation to be of active assistance in a work which might, perchance, put an end to Israel's martyrdom.

It is true that the wealthy Jews are still withholding their support from the movement. They watch and wait. They can afford to do so. But while their support would greatly accelerate the movement, their opposition cannot stop it. For since when have persecuted and oppressed peoples been saved by the rich?

On the other hand, met with big hearts and men of genius and of learning, as the true meaning of the movement with its possibilities dawns upon them, are joining the ranks of the Zionists daily. The latest acquisition of which the American Zionists are particularly proud was made in the person of our excellent rabbi, E. G. Hirsch of Chicago.

Selected.

Begin With God.

A good beginning leads to a good [illegible] we are expecting [illegible] a day of blessing, of prosperity, of help, of success, we need the blessing of God, and first of all we should seek it. If we place our hand in the hand of the great Leader and Guide, if we yield our hearts to his control, if we trust in him without a fear or doubt, then we may expect the blessing of the Lord to rest upon us, and that blessing gives help and brings prosperity.

We begin the day with God if we cry to him for his blessing and his help, and especially if we listen to him in the words which he has spoken by his servants. We need not expect the Lord to hear us when we pray unless we are willing to hear him when he speaks. If we listen to his words he will listen to ours. If we turn a deaf ear to his instructions how can we expect that he will listen to our prayers? Let us turn to him with purpose of heart. Let our waking thoughts by night be thoughts of God, and let the early morning find us waiting at his throne, and saying to him, "Speak, Lord, for thy servant heareth."

But we must not always expect a direct or special message from the Lord. He has spoken to us again and again. Let us listen when he speaks to us, and then he will not neglect our cry, when out of sore distress we call upon his name.—H. L. Hastings.

What a Small Vice Costs.

"How can you afford these books?" asked a young man, calling upon a friend. "I can't seem to find spare change for even the leading magazines."

"Oh, that library is only my one cigar a day," was the reply.

"What do you mean?" inquired the visitor.

"Mean? Just this: When you advised me to indulge in an occasional cigar several years ago, I had been reading about a young fellow who bought books with money that others would have burned in cigars, and I thought I would try to do the same. You may remember that I said I would allow myself one cigar a day?"

"Yes, I recall the conversation, but don't quite see the connection."

"Well, I never smoked, but I put by the price of a five-cent cigar every day, and as the money accumulated I bought books—the very books you see."

"You don't mean to say that your books cost no more than that! Why, there are dollars' worth of them."

"Yes, I know there are. I had six years of my apprenticeship to serve when you advised me 'to be a man.' I put by the money, which at five cents a day, amounted to $18.25 a year, or $109.50 in six years. I kept those books by themselves as a result of my apprenticeship cigar money; and if you'd done as I did, you would, by this time, have saved many more dollars than I have, and would have been better off in health and self-respect besides."—Epworth Herald.

God Bless our Interruptions.

An old friend who was once staying with me, in conducting our morning worship, used this singular form of petition: "Lord, bless our interruptions today, and use them in thy service and for thy glory." I was amused at the rather odd conceit; but hardly a day has passed since then that I have not had occasion to make my own this serviceable prayer.

I have known men and women who have shown heroism under sharp trial who could by no means stand having their own plan for the day's doings broken in upon. And yet how can we be sure that the chart we draw ourselves at the beginning of the day is the track over which our Pilot means us to sail between sunrise and sunset?

Of course there are some interruptions against which it is right and wise that we guard ourselves; people who have engagements to meet, and certain hours set apart in which to prepare the sermon, or the address, or the editorial, must decline to be interrupted, except, as the saying is, "in matters of life and death."

But when we have set these bond-folk off to themselves, there remains a large constituency, of women especially, whose time, however busily occupied, is more or less at their own disposal; they may be eager to finish tucking the petticoat, or putting down the carpet, or studying a Bible lesson, or writing a letter, but it can be put off until tomorrow, and when the interrupter comes, it must be.

And the claim that I want to set up here is: that in many cases the interruption is more important than the petticoat or even the Bible lesson. The Bible lesson, or the pot of preserves, was your own plan; but solemn experience has taught us—is it not so?—that the interruption is sometimes straight from God. I would like to ask the best remembrer among us how often she has said to herself with a sigh of relief: "My! I was very near missing such and such a chance," when it was sometimes a chance of helping and sometimes of being helped.

I am far from being a good remembrer; I am one of the worst; but even I can recall a long list of "interruptions," some of which I accepted patiently and some fretfully, but all freighted with serious responsibilities and opportunities.

One was a proposal on a busy day (when the weather was bad) to do some visiting of poor people; it meant the rescue of an ill woman and hungry children.

One was a call away from a kettle of jelly (and every housekeeper knows how jelly must be timed), which resulted in getting work for a woman almost in despair—work which tided her over despair and gave her the hope necessary to success.

I only ask you to remember—because I need so much myself to be reminded—that when the door bell rings and the day's scheme of work falls to pieces, our heavenly Father may be ending you the fulfilment of his promise, "I will instruct thee and teach thee in the way which thou shalt go."—Elizabeth Allan in Christian Index.

The Foot-Path to Peace.

To be glad of life because it gives you the chance to love, and to work, and to play, and to look up at the stars; to be satisfied with your possessions, but not content with yourself until you have made the best of them; to despise nothing in the world except falseness and meanness, and to fear nothing except cowardice; to be governed by your admirations rather than by your disgusts; to covet nothing that is your neighbor's except his kindness of heart and gentleness of manners; to think seldom of your enemies, often of your friends, and every day of Christ, and to spend as much time as you can with body and spirit in God's out-of-doors—these are the little guide-posts on the foot-path to peace.—Henry Van Dyke.

Obituary.

John Russell was born in Durham Co., Canada, Jan. 5th, 1826. He married Miss Mary Gardner Jan 1, 1852. To this union were born three girls and three boys, all of which preceded him to the land of the enemy, except one son. He moved to Illinois in 1857. Thence to Kansas in 1879, and finally to Oklahoma, in 1899, where he died May 24, 1903. Age 77 years, 4 months and 19 days. He leaves a wife, son and three grand children to mourn his loss. He was baptized by J. S. Hatch about 1875, and has lived a consistent member of the faith unto his death. Words of comfort were spoken by the writer from I Cor. xv. 26.

H. M. WILLIAMS.

Nancy S. Williams, wife of H. M. Williams, was born in Mercer Co., O., Dec. 22, 1857, and died Oct. 30, 1902; age 44 years, 10 months and 8 days. Her maiden name was Clark, and she was married March 23, 1880. She was the mother of six children, two of which preceded her to the grave. She left a husband three sons, a daughter, a mother, six sisters, and three brothers to mourn her loss. She was baptized by T. E. Adams into the all saving name some years since, and has endeavored to honor that name until her death. Her funeral was preached by Brother Miller in which he showed the great importance of the resurrection.

H. M. WILLIAMS.

Minnie A. Lehman, wife of the writer, was born in April, 1870, and died Jan. 16, 1903, at Osawatomie, Kan., where she had been taken for treatment. She was married to the writer at Wichita, Kan., July 11, 1888. Four children were born to this union of which three survive her. She and the writer were baptized into the all-saving name by Bro. Isaac Miller, at Wichita in 1891. She was ever ready to defend the truth. She sleeps that peaceful sleep from which none have awakened. She is in the silent grave there to await the resurrection morning, when Christ shall call. Jesus says, "I am the resurrection and the life." Come Lord Jesus, why tarry so long? To whom else can we go? Peter says, "Thou hast the words of eternal life." May we all hold fast until he come. Dear brothers and sisters pray for the weak and heavy laden.

S. C. LEHMAN.

The worst of having inflicted a wrong upon the innocent is that you can never retrieve it. You can repent, and it is probable that your very repentance ensures your forgiveness at a higher tribunal than that of earth's judgments, but the results of wrong cannot be wiped out or done away with in this life; they continue to exist, and alas! often multiply. Even the harsh and unjust word cannot be recalled, and however much we may regret having uttered it, somehow, it is never forgotten.—Marie Corelli.

"Trusting in the Lord has a deeper meaning than many who repeat the word have experienced. It implies separation from all other sources of help. Dr. Cuyler says, in order to become charged with electricity, we must stand aloof from all surrounding objects; so, if we would be charged with the Holy Spirit let go, stand aloof. God is able to do exceedingly abundantly, above all, and needs no help from the world, the flesh, or the devil."

Perhaps one of the most neglected prayers of the Scriptures is that contained in Luke x. 2, "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he would send forth laborers into his harvest." When believers see the importance of waiting at a throne of grace with this petition upon their heart, who can declare what the result will be?—Christain Worker.

On the steep hill of Difficulty, in the Valley of the Shadow, amid the crash of a universe smitten into indistinguishable ruin, "Thou shalt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on Thee!"—Canon Farrar.

THE PEACE OF JERUSALEM.

"Pray for the peace of Jerusalem; they shall prosper that love thee."

All who believe the promises made to Abraham, pray for the peace of Jerusalem, and that it may be restored to its former beauty; for we are told that the wilderness and the solitary places shall be glad, and the desert shall rejoice, and blossom as the rose. When we have a righteous King we will have peace; for the work of righteousness shall be peace; and the effect of righteousness, quietness and assurance forever, and when we pray for the peace of Jerusalem we know that in God's own time our prayer will be answered, for he has left us many promises of the restoration and peace of Jerusalem. Jerusalem shall be a quiet habitation, a tabernacle that shall not be removed. The moon shall be confounded, and the sun ashamed, when the Lord of hosts shall reign in Mount Zion and in Jerusalem and before his ancients gloriously. The Lord will be the Judge, the Law Giver and the King. When Jerusalem of Jerusalem is restored, that will be a time of rejoicing, for the eyes of the blind will be opened, and the ears of the deaf unstopped and the lame man shall leap as an hart. Is not that enough to rejoice over? And the highway shall be there, and no unclean person shall pass through it, but the redeemed shall walk there, and the ransomed of the Lord shall return and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads. They shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away. There shall yet old men and old women dwell in Jerusalem, and the streets shall be full of boys and girls playing, and I the Lord will bring them from the east country and from the west, and they shall dwell in the midst of Jerusalem and they shall be my people, and I will be their God in truth and in righteousness, and they shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain; for the whole earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord. The cow and the bear shall feed, the young ones shall lie down together, and the lion shall eat straw like the ox. When all this comes to pass then will the people say, Let us sing unto the Lord; for he hath done excellent things; this is known in all the earth. Cry out and shout, thou inhabitant of Zion; for great is the Holy One of Israel in the midst of thee. Many people and strong nations shall come to seek the Lord of Hosts in Jerusalem, and pray before the Lord. Then the tabernacle of God will be with men and they shall walk in the light of the city and give praise and honor to the Lord, who is Governor among the nations, and many people shall say, Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord to the God of Jacob, and he will teach us of his way and we will walk in his paths; for out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the Word of the Lord from Jerusalem. Jerusalem will be the great center to which all nations will flow. It will be the metropolitan city of the world, whence laws shall be issued for government of all nations. All this will come to pass when the peace of Jerusalem is restored.

Poetry.

I Am Glad He Knows.

"Thou understandest my thoughts afar off." Psa. cxxxix, 2.

So glad am I he knows and sees all through
The wrong I did, the good I meant to do,
And o'er my every sin his loving mercy throws
I am glad he knows.

So glad am I he knows the load I bear,
The sorrows that beset, the daily care,
The grief that slips the sweet from every rose
I am glad he knows.

So glad am I, when I in weakness fall
And others censure me, I hear him call,
And in my heart again sweet patience grows;
I am so glad he knows.

Israel Down, Their Uprising at Hand.

The times of the Gentiles and Israel's down-treading not yet to an end. The signs of the times indicate [illegible] Gentile harvest is rapidly ripening, the command to "thrust in the sickle" will not belong delayed. [illegible] will not be permitted to kill off Philip God's ancient people forever. The days are numbered, and vengeance will not slumber or sleep on the track of Israel's enemies and defoilers. Persecution appears to be necessary in order to turn Israel's face homeward. "I will be enquired of saith the Lord." Ezek. xxxvi. Jacob when serving in the house of Laban was quick to discover when Laban's countenance had changed toward him, and made haste to escape foreboding disaster, and he saved himself and his substance by flight. Doubtless when the time is fully come Jacob's descendants of our day will greatly hasten the Zionist movement to escape from the unfriendly face of the cruel beast worshipers of Russia and other countries. Where shall they go? They can go nowhere until affliction causes them to cry unto the God of their fathers and enquire of Yaweh for the land he promised them for an inheritance. The prosperous Jew of today is faithless and godless. Any land where he can get gain and enjoy the pleasures of life is the promised land [illegible] and the promised Messiah of [illegible]ants he treats as a mere [illegible]ystical than real. It ap[illegible]rael's condition will grow [illegible]me instead of better. [illegible] of affliction and dis[illegible]vails them to turn [illegible]d the land that now is [illegible]eolate, but destined in [illegible] of God to become as the [illegible]den. It is in vain that Is[illegible]s rest and peace among the Gentiles—no permanent abiding place can be had among strangers, and in strange lands. The divine decree has gone forth, "I will sift the house of Israel among all nations as corn is sifted in a sieve, yet not the least grain shall fall to the ground." Amos ix. 9. This sifting process has been in operation for about 2500 years, and is still going on, but the least grain does not fall to the earth. If a kernel of corn of wheat falls to the earth it will take root and bear fruit, but Israel is not permitted to become rooted in any land or among any people in the earth. There is however a time to come, when another and quite a different process will be inaugurated, which will produce results that will astonish the world, and at the same time be a blessing to all mankind, "Behold the days come saith the Lord that I will sow the house of Israel and the house of Judah with the seed of man and the seed of beast." Jer. xxxi. 27. What will be the result of this sowing process? The answer to this question follows in the next verse 28. "And it shall come to pass, that like as I have watched over them to pluck up and to break down and to throw down and to destroy and to afflict; so will I watch over them to build and to plant, saith the Lord." It will be seen that the sowing process is altogether different from that of sifting in a sieve. The sowing is the fundamental beginning of re-organization and national resurrection. Permit me to digress at this point for a moment, to drop a hint to those who are quick of understanding in the fear of the Lord. Apply the above principle of interpretation to Cor. xv. 42-44. If a little study or thought is given to the subject, it may be that a clearer conception of resurrection will follow. A hint to the wise is sufficient, for true wisdom makes one teachable. Returning to the subject in hand, I remark that both houses of Israel await a seeding time that will be followed by such a bountiful harvest as the world of mankind has never witnessed before,—a fullness of the knowledge of God. Making the world resplendant with the beauty of holiness, plenty and peace. I will sow her (Israel) unto me in the earth; and I will have mercy upon her that had not obtained mercy; and I will say to them which were not my people, thou art my people." Hosea ii. 23. "And it shall come to pass that as ye were a curse among the heathen, O house of Judah and house of Israel; so will I save you, and ye shall be a blessing." Zech. viii. 13. It will be noticed that both houses of Israel have been and are yet a curse among the heathen, both houses were to be wasted by persecution and to become comparatively few in numbers, nationally dead and buried, but the sowing time is approaching when a nation shall be born in a day. Blindness in part has happened to Israel, but not a perpetual blindness, for the God of their fathers will have mercy on them, and turn away ungodliness from Jacob. The time is at hand when Israel will cry unto the Lord for deliverance, and their cry of distress will be heard, for whom they once rejected will make himself known unto them as the Lord mighty in battle. If they were offended when they saw him as the Man of Sorrow and acquainted with grief, they will be more than glad and rejoice when they behold him as the "King of glory." It is written, "the triumph of the wicked is short."

We cannot see what a day will bring forth, but we have good reason to hope that Russia's cruelty to the Jew will reap its full reward at no distant day. It will come at a time when there is no human hand ready to help. At this juncture in human affairs the fury of the Lord manifests itself in smiting the oppressor with such violence as to stain all his raiment with blood, for smith he the year of my redeemed is come, and my own arm hath brought salvation. Isa. lxiii. 1-6.

I have been reading the speeches of rabbis and clergymen on the recent outbreaks of mob violence against the Jew in Russia, but neither party seem able to discover the primary cause. The trouble is just this, the Jew is either your master or your slave, but never your equal. He never meets you on a plane of equality. It is born in him. He is God's first born, and his birthright is instinctively manifest. When a Jew recognizes the Gentile as his equal he ceases to be a Jew, and is soon lost in the common multitude. In Russia he may begin as a servant, but he speedily becomes the master. His native thrift, energy and intelligence enables him to rise above the indolent and superstitious Slav, and this in turn inflames the otherwise latent hatred and prejudice of the Image worshiping peasant. So long as the Jew is a slave eking out a mere existence he is permitted to live, but when he becomes possessed of money and manifests his independence then religious prejudice breaks forth in flaming vengeance against him. It always has been, and will continue for a time, until the day of release comes. Emigrating from one country to another, may give temporary relief, as one country may be more liberal and tolerant than another. But the Jew is an unwelcome guest in every land, —if he is poor they don't want him, if rich he is hated for having obtained wealth that does not justly belong to an alien race. If he multiplies in numbers as well as in dollars, even the most liberal government and people tolerate him with reluctance. Their increasing numbers excited the envy of the Egyptians, as they were regarded then as now a clanish race of aliens. All this however is in accord with the predetermined will and purpose of the Almighty. Jehovah chose Abraham and his posterity to a purpose, and he will surely consummate that purpose. Israel is destined to stand next to the throne between heaven and earth, God and man, a priestly nation, through whom divine favor and blessing will flow to all people. The time is coming when the Jew will be respected and loved with as much intensity of feeling as he is at present hated and despised. Of course all this is improbable in the light of present conditions, but it will not do to judge always from appearances. The world of nations are not today what they will be in the age to come, under the rule of him who will execute justice in the earth and break in pieces the oppressor. The present constitution of the world is not a finality. The powers that be, are classed among those things that can be shaken and overturned, to make way for the establishment of God's kingdom in the earth. The very tendency of things indicates the general break up and crash that must come sooner or later. Even the wise men and philosophers of the Gentile world can foresee a crisis approaching. The existing competative rivalry of nations is constantly increasing, intensifying national jealousy, necessarily stimulating military and naval preparation against the day of danger of which all are so fearfully apprehensive. In the meantime the movement of the Jew to reclaim and repossess the land of his fathers, is a feature of the situation indicative of that prophetic change in human affairs, that can hardly be overlooked or misapprehended by any one who seriously makes the study of the Scriptures his daily delight. This Jewish movement is properly named Zionist, for doubtless the set time to favor Zion is at hand. That the secular and religious world are both oblivious of prophetic utterances is no discouragement, for it is written that when the Lord returns to build up Zion, dwell in Jerusalem and restore Israel, "Darkness covers the earth and gross darkness the people," but unto Zion it is said, "Arise, shine, for thy light is come." The heathen rage and the people imagine a vain thing against the Jew, whom Jehovah has in the fulfilment of his promise preserved from utter destruction. They have been scattered among the nations and sorely afflicted because of their hardness of heart, but nevertheless watched over for a purpose yet future. Their dispersion has made them truly cosmopolitan—able to speak every known language, fully acquainted with the customs and manners of every nation on earth,—their adaptability to the work now at hand under the guidance of the "great King," has been acquired incidentally through their dispersion. As a nation of priests, as messengers of Jehovah, they will be the leaven of righteousness in the world to come.

Dear Restitution:

I find many good things in your columns in which I am deeply interested, among them some of the thoughts put forth in the Berean column. Though generally—and I suppose necessarily—short, they frequently embrace great truths, in a nutshell as it were, which might be greatly and profitably elaborated, and which the readers should be encouraged to do.

Although I have been a resident of our beautiful capital city for nearly nineteen years—in government employ—I am still a citizen of Illinois, and as such respectfully ask for a little space in your Illinois Berean column for the purpose of adding some further remarks relative to the promises of Jehovah to our fathers Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, a subject in which I have taken great interest for over fifty years. Sister Bernice Phelps, in her brief remarks in THE RESTITUTION of May 27, manifests a better comprehension of the subject than most writers, even learned men, of the present day. Permit me to call attention to the fact that those promises to Abraham were given under oath by Jehovah, and renewed by him, in the same spirit, to Isaac and Jacob. Now, if these promises, given in so solemn a manner, are not fulfilled, what reason have we to expect any other promises contained in the Holy Scriptures to be fulfilled? Charles Bradlaugh, a member of the British Parliament, and an avowed unbeliever in the divine origin of those Scriptures, in a speech in the Parliament, taunted the religious members of that honorable body with remarks something like this: Your old God cannot be relied upon; he promised Abraham that his descendants should occupy the land of Palestine forever, and yet they were driven out of the land, and ten out of the twelve tribes of the descendants of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob have been lost for centuries, and never can be identified again. [The above is the substance of his remarks as I remember them. It is many years since I read them.] Poor deluded mortal! Endeavoring to measure the omnipotence of the Eternal One by his own weak senses—too weak to comprehend the existence of a Supreme Being of infinite knowledge. And yet the evidence of the present existence of those ten so-called lost tribes is now overwhelming, especially the descendants of Joseph, who were to be the leading factor in those tribes, known as the House of Israel, and were to push the nations to the end of the earth, and carry blessings to all. See Gen. xlviii. 16-19; xlix. 22-26; Deut. xxxiii. 13-17.

Now note that these things were to come to pass in the last days, (Gen. xlix. 1) and that it is almost if not quite universally conceded by Bible students that we are now living in those last days; and then note the fact that the Anglo Saxon race—of which the English speaking people are the controlling factor—are now occupying the exact position predicted of the descendants of Joseph; and their existence as a people is now traced by the historians of the present day all the way from the country where the people of the ten-tribed house of Israel were placed as captives of war by Shalmanezer, when God permitted him to destroy them as a nation, because of their idolatry. With all these things before us—and many, many more which might be adduced—how can we avoid the conclusion that there is a Supreme Eternal One who has made the promises referred to, and in his own good time will completely fulfill them. Indeed they are now being fulfilled before our eyes. But the subject is so vast that it is impossible to do it justice in a newspaper article; and these few lines are only intended as a hint of the information which may be attained by diligent and properly directed study.

ALPHEUS DAVISON.

[Regarding the Anglo-Israel theory touched on by Bro. Davison, and which may appear very plain to him, we want our readers to look upon it as his opinion, based upon events of more or less doubtful historic accuracy. Some students claim to have the events and dates plainly fixed, others deny their conclusions. We are not taking up the question to discuss, and have no desire to do so. What we want the Bereans and all others to do is to study the promises given by God to the fathers, believe them and the things connected with them that concern the Lord Jesus Christ, through whom the promises will most assuredly be fulfilled. We would not discourage study and research in any direction the mind is led, but do not put anything ahead of the truth that it is through and by the Lord Jesus Christ that the restitution of man and the earth is to be accomplished.—ED.]

Wisdom of Seirach.

CHAPTER 3.

1. May ye have heard unto my father ye children, and in this wise may ye have done, that ye may have been saved.

2. For the Lord hath glorified a father in children, and hath stayed up a mother's judgment in sons.

3. The one who honoreth a father will explate sins.

4. And like he one who is treasuring up treasure is the one who is glorifying his mother.

will have be[illegible]r honoreth a father; and in a day of his votive prayer he will have been hearkened unto.

5. The one who glorifieth a father will have length of days, and the one who hearkeneth unto the Lord will give his mother rest.

7. And as handmaids serve their mistresses with bond service, will she serve him (the Lord) with her begotten sons.

8. In word and deed honor thy father that a blessing from him may come upon thee.

9. For a father's blessing stays up the houses of children; but a mother's curse uprooteth foundations.

10. Do not glory in thy father's dishonor: for thy father's dishonor is not for thee a glory.

11. For a man's glory is from his father's honor, and a reproach to children is a mother in disgrace.

12. Child, intervene for thy father in old age, and do not grieve him in his life time.

13. And if he fail in understanding have fellow-feeling for him, and with all thy strength do not dishonor him.

14. For an act of mercy for the father will not have been ignored and will have been built up as an additional bulwark against sins.

15. In a day of thy tribulation it will have been remembered in thy favor; as clean weather upon a frost will thy sins have been wiped away even in this wise.

16. Like a blasphemer is the one who forsaketh his father, and accursed by the Lord is the one who has become wrathful at his mother.

17. Child, with meekness conduct thy works to the end, and thou wilt have been loved by an acceptable man.

18. However great thou art by just so much humble thyself, and thou wilt find favor in the sight of the Lord.

19. Because great is the Lord's sway, and he is being glorified by the lowly.

21. Do not seek things too difficult for thee, and do not try things above thy strength.

22. The things assigned to thee think through; for the use (or need) of the hidden things is not for thee.

23. Do not distract thyself with the excess of thy employments; for more than human understanding hath been shown thee.

24. For their own opinion hath moulded many and their bad supposition hath ruined their thoroughness of thought.

26. And the one who loveth danger will fall into it. A hard heart will have encountered evil in last experiences.

27. A heart will have been burdened with pains and the obdurate sinner will add sin to sin.

28. There is no healing for the inductive conclusion of a haughty man: for it hath rooted a growth of wickedness in him.

9. The heart of a of man understanding will have apprehended a parable: and a hearing ear is the longing desire of a wise man.

30. Water will quench flaming fire and an act of mercy will appease sins.

31. The one who returneth favors hath been remembered in the times after these times and in an appointed time of falling ruins he will find support.

COMMENT.

We have in this chapter divinely inspired aphorisms for our daily conduct in the home life, the duties and sanctions of children in relation to parents just as applicable today as when first written and even more needed than then in the opening of this new century, as every parent and teacher at all enlightened with the blessed gospel ought to be able to see. The epistles of Paul and Peter and John but echo and emphasize the old inspired aphorisms of this chapter. Why then was this book made apocryphal?

CHAS. GARDNER.

Dear brothers and sisters:

It is written that Abraham is the father of all them that believe, faith wise of course. Now for us to be the children of our father Abraham should we not try to walk in the steps of that good old faithful parent? Why was he chosen as the one with Christ, in whom all the nations of the earth shall be blessed. We read in Genesis xviii. 19, that the Lord said, For I know him, that he will command his children and his household after him, and they shall keep the way of the Lord to justice and judgment, that the Lord may bring upon Abraham that which he hath spoken of him. Now for us to be blessed with faithful Abraham, here is a beautiful pattern we would do well to try to imitate, for that which was written before our time was written for our learning, and we read in 1 Pet. Abraham as long as we do well. This seems to be the conditions which constitute us his obedient children after we have arisen to walk in newness of life. Submitted in love.

SARAH F. MORGAN.

Selections.

A Square Issue.

There are people who believe a portion of the gospel, accepting some of the statements of the Scriptures but rejecting others, and still desiring to be reckoned and counted as Christians. The Apostle Paul certainly knew what Christianity was; and he, after stating that Christ died for our sins, was buried, and raised again the third day according to Scriptures, declares that if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain. Yea, and we ourselves are found false witnesses of God; for we have testified of God that he raised up Christ, whom he raised not up if so be that the dead rise not. 1 Cor. xv. Thus the apostle cast the whole weight of the gospel and the Christian faith upon these few vital, fundamental facts. And he declares if these statements were not true then the apostles were perjurers, they were false witnesses. They were not mistaken, they knew perfectly well what they said, and what they were talking about. There was no place for this cheap charity which says that the apostles meant well but they were deluded and deceived; it was a question of certain, positive truth, or deliberate and intentional perjury. If the things which they declared had not taken place as they said they had, then the apostles were liars, deceivers, and perjurers; and Christians were a mass of dupes, whose faith was vain, and who were yet in their sins.

This is the square issue that must be met by those who deny the divine origin of Christianity. Christianity asks no compliments, no charity, no favors at the hands of its foes. It has fought its way through for ages in the face of the most determined opposition, and its conflicts of the present day are to be fought on this same line. There is to be no compromise with error. What part hath he that believeth with an infidel? The Bible is the Inspired Word of God or it is a tissue of lies. Jesus of Nazareth was the Son of God or he was a deceiver and an imposter. The apostles were true witnesses concerning things which they claimed to have seen and known, or they were base perjurers deserving the soverest punishment.

There is no logical standing ground between these two positions. We must take one side or the other. The Savior himself calls upon us to choose our positions, to be for him or against him, to receive his Word or reject it. The issue is squarely made, and the one question is, "Who is on the Lord's side?"—H. L. Hastings.

Where Go the Bibles!

Along with all this talk about the modern lack of familiarity with the Bible and all the deploring of the alleged fact by scholars and preachers and editors, and with the constant evidences which are met that the allegation has a substantial [illegible] comes the assertion that more copies of the Bible are sold annually than of any other book printed. What becomes of all of them? Frequenters of second hand book stores know that few Bibles are to be found on their shelves, and what do appear are chiefly of curious old copies, most of which are held at a good price. It is not probable that the enemies of the book are purchasing copies for the sake of suppressing them. Yet in spite of all the Bibles that are sold and paid for, it is scarcely possible to find a person except the few professional students of the book, who know much about what there is in it. The suspicion must be that most of these buyers procure it because they think it is a sort of amulet for the protection of the house.—New Bedford Standard.

A Statement and an Appeal.

The Plymouth congregation still owes a few hundred dollars on its Church building. The members are all poor people. They are hindered very much in carrying on the work that might be and that ought to be done, from the fact of having to devote their energies to raising money to pay off this debt. Numbers have been forced by circumstances to move away, and this lays the burden on fewer shoulders.

The brethren and sisters are making a great effort to get the money to lift this debt this year, and it is an object to them to raise as much as is possible by June. Many brethren and sisters have in time past met with this Church, and know of their zeal and earnestness. Many others have read accounts from time to time of meetings held at this place, and work done for the Lord. The hospitality of the Plymouth Church is well known to hundreds. The brethren and sisters always have and shall ever give their homes and the best they have to [illegible] sojourn with them.

It may be that some who have met with the Plymouth brethren, or others who know of their work, would like to contribute of their means to aid in clearing this house of debt, thus enabling the friends to do the work that now languishes. Should there be any such if they will send to Brother E. K. Barnhill, Plymouth, Ind., he will, as Secretary of the Board of Trustees, make proper acknowledgement, and convey the money to the hands of the Treasurer.

For the Illinois Bereans.

I wish to remind the Bereans that the dollar pledged last conference is about due, and we want to have all funds in by August. Let us all attend to this and have a full treasury to work on at the next conference.

A third edition of the above named work is just out, and ready for delivery. This book has been before our readers so long now that its worth is well known. The author is Robert Ashcroft. The price for this edition is put low so that the brethren and sisters can get it to lend to honest enquirers after truth. We hope there are a few who have not turned their ears from the truth to fables. The book will speak for itself in its unfoldings of the purposes and plans of Jehovah, regarding the near future of the earth and its inhabitants. All should be interested in these truths, and those who have never read this book will have a feast. Price 65 cents post paid. Send to this office for them, or orders can be sent to J. O. The Quarterly Conference of the Churches of God in the State of Indiana, will convene at Antioch Church, [illegible] miles south of Plymouth, and three miles north of Argos, at 10 o'clock a. m. on Saturday, June 13, 1903, and continue over Sunday.

The "June Meeting" at old Antioch is a familiar term, not only to the faithful in the state of Indiana, but in many other states. Fond recollections cluster about this place. It has been the gathering place of brethren and sisters of the Abrahamic faith for many years. We make this call knowing that many are looking forward to this annual feast of spiritual good things.

Let us come together, brethren and sisters, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, for the edifying of one another in love. Let it be understood that we shall, as much as practicable, remain at the Church during the entire day on Saturday and Sunday, so that we may spend as much of the time as is possible in Christian fellowship.

A programme will be prepared and published later.

A Word of Appreciation.

Some time ago I asked the brotherhood through THE RESTITUTION how many copies of the pamphlet "The Reasons of My Withdrawal from the Evangelical Association," would be wanted. Letters came from all parts of the country, some containing money stating the number of copies desired, so that a second edition of 1000 was printed. I wish to state that this edition is nearly exhausted, there being only about 150 left. Those wishing copies better send their orders early, as they will soon be gone. I desire, by this means, to thank the brethren for their encouraging words and financial help. Trusting that the seed will fall in good soil and produce fruit unto eternal life. 25 pages, at 5 cents per copy. A. H. Zilmer, Plymouth, Ind.

The Restitution.

"The Restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets."

VOLUME LII. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JUNE 17, 1903. NUMBER 23.

The Restitution

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief in the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, prerequisites of the forgiveness of sins and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Poetry.

Who Dares?

The man who dares to think, to live
True to his soul's divinest light
Shall to the world an impulse give
For truth and right.

The brave in heart, the pure in mind
Will dare to see the truth aright,
While coward souls, perverse and blind,
Will shun the light.

Faith, Doubt and Unbelief or Infidelity.

The man of faith has vastly the advantage over the doubter and the infidel. An immeasurably broader field of knowledge lies open before him from which to glean facts than lies before the doubter and the infidel. I mean faith in the Word of God. In this volume called pre-eminently "the Book" is a history of facts antedating by hundreds of years that of authoritative uninspired history. The student of profane history goes back as far as Ninus and Semiramis founders of the Babylonian kingdom, feeling pretty sure he is still in the region of veritable facts, but beyond the date of these founders of a kingdom human records are clouded with fable. The reader of the Bible is not under the necessity of applying the principles of historical criticism at every step in order to discriminate between fact and fiction, for inspiration in its opening pages as well as in later consecutive deals with facts, facts so early, many of them, in the history of our planet that there was no human eye to witness what was taking place, or human pen to make a record of Jehovah's unfolding work. The history was written at the dictation of the Holy Spirit and the man of faith believes it. The skeptic questions the truth of the record and [illegible] words that it may or so, or it may not be so, [illegible] or utter lacks faith. He doubts the [illegible] bound for [illegible] and authorship of the Bible. What [illegible] an departure not [illegible] wretched state of mind to be in! His doubts will prove a bar to his entrance on the Christian life, and a future entrance into the kingdom of God. He may have some aspirations for good, and in some sense serve a purpose in human society, but a Christian he can not be until he gets rid of his doubts, for says the apostle "without faith it is impossible to please him; for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him." Heb. xi. 6.

The infidel is positive. He knows whereof he affirms! He can prove that the Bible is a work of human minds, a pretended revelation palmed off by priestcraft upon the weak-minded and credulous, that the story of creation is false, not squaring with discoveries of science; that miracles are impossible in the nature of things because every thing is governed by inflexible law, and to say that a miracle is true is to give the lie to nature. The sceptic may doubt the fact that Adam and Eve were our first parents, and the infidel believes that man sprang from some order of animals, as the monkey or ourangoutang; that he is the result of evolution; but the man of faith believes the facts as recorded in the Bible; knows from whence he came and whither he is going; knows the purpose of his creation, his present obligations and final destiny; knows the final issue of the ever widening plan. His faith carries him back to an intelligent and personal agency in creation; enables him to view the same agency at work at present in a redemptive scheme previously planned in wisdom and love, and gives him a clear perception of the glorious outcome. What volumes of truth are his to explore; what realms of delight he is wrought up to as he prosecutes his researches in this broad field of history and prophecy of precept and promise. Hilprecht's discoveries in the ruins of ancient Babylon are but pewter dollars found in the mud compared with the sparkling gems of truth that meet and reward the patient searcher into the deep mines of Revelation. Faith steadies the purposes of life, gives quietness, and blessed assurance continually. With the Psalmist we can say God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble; therefore will not we fear, though the earth be removed; though the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea; though the waters thereof roar, and be troubled; though the mountains shake with the swelling thereof. Psa. xlvi. 1-3. Such expressions as this, occurring so often in the national songs of Israel, and in other portions of the Scriptures are the outbursts of strong faith in the promises of God. Here is one I often quote, "Although the fig tree shall not blossom, neither shall fruit be in the vines; the labor of the olive shall fail and the fields shall yield no meat; and the flock shall be cut off from the fold, and there shall be no herd in the stalls; yet I will rejoice in the Lord, I will joy in the God of my salvation." Hab. iii. 17, 18. This mental posture, so to speak, this sublime faith and trust of the ancient prophet should be characteristic of the believer today. The things that agitate and perplex the mind of the unbeliever should give no trouble to the child of faith. He knows who is at the helm and knows the port into which his vessel is destined to run. In the sight of "bonds and afflictions" Paul could say, "None of these things move me, neither count I my life dear unto myself." Acts xx. 24. The obligations of a faithful minister of Christ concerned him for the present. These well performed was a guaranty of a glorious reward; it mattered not, to meet a martyr's death, insured a martyr's crown. He who had suffered and sacrificed so much in behalf of the truth was not to be denied the honor of laying down his life for the Master in view of the crown his suffering and service had won. His course was finished; he had testified the gospel of the grace of God and the final [illegible] 17, with Jaffrey, Hear the closing [illegible] board and good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord the righteous Judge shall give me at that day: and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." 2 Tim. iv. 6, 7, 8. These are the words of unwavering faith. The martyr apostle "trusted in the living God," and cherished the hope of Israel.

JOHN L. WEIRE.

Wisdom of Seirach.

CHAPTER 4.

1. Child, do not deprive the life of the beggar and do not disregard needy eyes.

2. Do not grieve a hungry soul, and do not be wrathful at a man in his perplexity.

3. Do not add disturbance to a heart already in a paroxism, and do not disregard giving to a suppliant.

4. Do not deny the entreaty of one in tribulation, and do not turn away thy face from a beggar.

5. From one who beseecheth turn not away thine eye and give no place for a man to curse thee.

6. For should he curse thee in the bitterness of his soul, the one who made him will hearken to his supplication.

7. Make thyself agreeable to a synagogue and humble thy head to a great man.

8. Incline thine ear to a beggar and make an answer of peace to him with meekness.

9. Deliver the one who is being wronged out of the hand of him who is wronging him and do not be faint-hearted when thou art judging.

10. Become like a father to orphans and instead of a husband to their mother; and thou will be like a Son of the Most High, and thy mother will love thee all the more.

11. Wisdom hath exalted sons for herself and she layeth hold of those who seek her.

12. The one who loveth her loveth life and the one who goeth early unto her will have been filled with rejoicing.

13. The one who getteth her will inherit glory, and where she goeth her way in the Lord will bless.

14. Those who serve her for wages publicly serve a sacred one, and the Lord loveth those who love her.

15. The one who obeyeth her will judge nations and the one who cometh unto her will pitch his tent down with assurance.

16. If thou trustest her thou wilt inherit her, and there will be generations there in possession.

17. Because perversely doth she go her way with him at first, and fear and cowardice will she lead upon him, and with her chastening will she put the extreme test to him, until she can trust his soul and try him with her acts of justification.

18. And again will she lead up unto him in a direct way and rejoice him, and reveal unto him her hidden things.

19. If he be led astray, she will leave him and will give him into the hands of his smiting.

20. Watch to regard due time and be on thy guard against a wicked one and be not put to shame for thy soul.

21. For there is a shame that leadeth unto sin, and there is a shame that is a glory and a grace.

22. Do not be partial to thy soul (lit. "Do not take a face against thy soul") and do not be confounded in thy smiting.

23. Do not hinder a word in a time of salvation.

24. For in discourse will wisdom have been made comprehensible, and there is instruction in an oracular word of a tongue.

24. Do not gainsay the truth, and be abashed at thine own lack of instruction.

26. Do not be ashamed to confess thy sins, and do not constrain a river's running.

27. Do not make thyself bed for a unworthy man, and do not take the face of [illegible] and sown or planted, [illegible]

28. Unto [illegible] well. There has path, and [illegible] this [illegible]

29. Do [illegible] is expected, it ruins thy tongue and [illegible] and [illegible]

COMMENT.

In the last chapter we had the inspired ethics of the family life and its relations of parents to children and children to parents. In this we enlarge our horizon to the outside world of humanity as a whole, and first how we are to treat the beggar and the suppliant and the widow and the orphan. Reread Paul and see how exactly his teaching in these particulars agrees with the record here. And compare what he says about the importance of speaking and living the truth in our relations to one another and the outside world.

Reread what Jacob ("James") says about the tongue and making your deed as good or better than your word. "Love not in word but in deed and in truth."

The old early "Church Institutes" echo the thought in the 31st or last verse of this chapter. "Be gracious in yourselves. Let your act of mercy sweat in your hand," etc.

Christ in the Revelation. No. 8.

Chapter iii. 7. The message to the church of Ephesus is full of important gospel truth. It represents the Master as, "He that is holy" in harmony with what is written of him that he was, "Holy, harmless, undefiled, and separate from sinners." "Who through the eternal Spirit offered himself without spot to God." Heb. ix. 14. "The only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth." Also he is the one "That hath the key of David, he that openeth, and no man shutteth; and shutteth, and no man openeth." Before the ascension of our Lord to the right hand of the Father in heaven, he said, "All power is given unto me, in heaven and on the earth." Therefore he having the key to the royal house of David, he can open and no man can shut, or shut and no man can open; these statements are preparatory to the statement that follows. "Behold, I have set before thee an open door, and no man can shut it; for thou hast a little strength, and hast kept my word, and hast not denied my name." It is proper now to consider briefly what is taught in the holy Scriptures by the term "open door."

Paul says to the Corinthians, "I will tarry at Ephesus until Pentecost. For a great door.....is opened unto me, and there are many adversaries." And again he says, "When I came to Troas to preach Christ's gospel, and a door was opened unto me of the Lord." 2 Cor. ii. 12. God who ruleth over all, in his providence ordered events so as to give to Paul a good chance, an opportunity to preach the gospel: in like manner Christ sets before the church of Ephesus, "an open door." About one hundred years before the "open door" was given to the church of Ephesus, John Huss in Bohemia preached much the same truths, that were taught by the reformers in the forepart of the sixteenth century. But the time had not yet come for the open door; and the officials of the man of sin arrested John Huss and burnt him at the stake, thus shutting the door. But when in the providence of God the time came to place the door open, the kings having become jealous of the interference in their civil authority, by the man in Rome, took kindly to the teaching of Luther, Melancthon and a host of others, made it impossible for even the man of sin to shut the door. The seven thunders from the Vatican had by this time lost their power, and fell harmless, like a spent ball on the heads of the reformers; and from that time to this the open Bible, "the Spirit of Christ's mouth" has been at work consuming the man of sin, preparatory to his destruction at the coming of our Lord. 2 Thes. ii. 8. The Ephesian church is commended for having kept his Word; and that they had not denied his name. Having been baptized into his name it was meet that they should walk in it, and not deny the name by wicked works. The same parties who claimed to be Jews, but were of the synagogue of Satan, in the time of the church of Smyrna, are present also in the time of the church of Ephesus. But it is written for the comfort and encouragement of the servants of the Deity. "Behold, I will make them to come and worship before thy feet, and to know that I have loved thee." "What a consolation to know that truth shall finally triumph over error. The promise is here given, that those who have kept the Word of his patience, he will keep, "From the hour of temptation, which shall come upon all the world, to try them that dwell upon the earth." The words that came from his lips during his temptations and trials are treasured up in the minds of his faithful brethren, and they are admonished thereby. "The hour of temptation" I am able to perfectly understand; the promises to the churches are of a general application, and apply to all the churches. All eat of the tree of life, and shall not be hurt of the second death; all the overcomers will eat of the hidden manna, and receive the white stone; all will be engaged to rule the nations, and will be given the Morning Star. Will be clothed in white raiment, and will be pillars in God's temple, giving a pure light to all the nations of the earth. All will be exalted to sit with Christ in his throne.

Random Thoughts.—No. 7.

Dear Restitution:

I now proceed with my third item of the kingdom of God—its officers or rulers, who will they be? I have said the government will be a monarchy, an absolute monarchy. The will of the monarch will be the law of the land then, so far as the kingdom extends, and though at first it may not be large, yet it will extend and extend till it includes the whole earth. Now, we have seen that Jesus will be the monarch, the King, but no king or monarch rules or governs by himself alone, he has his cabinet or ministers to assist him in the various departments of government, and a great kingdom needs many officers higher and lower. Take our own country, a democracy, or rather a republic, I have no idea how many officers there are appointed and elected, but years ago I saw a statement that there were more than a hundred thousand appointed by or under the President. Besides those we elect many every year, and the number is continually increasing. Now the great King, who is termed "the mighty God," etc. Isa. ix. 6, when he shall sit upon his glorious throne in the city of the great King, will need and have his ministers to assist him. Who will they be? We elect our President, and he selects his cabinet, etc. Does any one suppose he finds it a difficult task to select his cabinet? If he does, it is because there are so many ready for an office. And this office is only for a brief period of time, still there is seldom any lack of candidates. Now the almighty God has elected his only begotten Son to be King in his kingdom, and sent him into the world to announce the glad tidings, which he did and was obedient in all things to the Father, unto death, even the death of the cross! He was dead and buried, but God raised him again from the dead, and has placed him at his own right hand in the heavens, where he waits till the time shall come when he will come in the glory of the Father and all the holy angels with him. Then he will sit upon his glorious throne, meantime he is selecting his cabinet. Just prior to his ascension he commissioned his apostles to bear a message, a good message to all the world, to every creature, inviting each to a position in his kingdom, not for four years, but for ever. And this gospel or good message is to be presented (or preached if you will) to all alike, rich and poor, all are invited to the high and holy calling, occupation or position. And yet, strange to say, few accept the invitation. Thousands will work and wait, and get others to work for them, and spend lots of money (boodle) to get an office for a short time, where one is willing to accept a much greater and better office offered by our Lord Jesus, the Christ. It does seem strange when we think of it. Why is it so? It would really seem that the people cannot understand the Lord's purpose in sending such a message—Satan must have blinded their eyes. They do not seem to understand for what purpose the Lord is taking out, or saving, sanctifying the few who do believe the gospel or good message. They seem to think God's purpose was to save every body, and as few are saved, they are apt to think Christianity is a failure, that instead of the world being converted it gets worse and worse. Now, let me say to my readers that there is no failure at all, but things are working just as the Lord said and expected. And we need not be disappointed when we see "Evil men and seducers wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived." The Lord at the present time is selecting only those who are, or will be fit, or suitable to assist him and share with him in the government. I will try to make this clear even to my younger readers. We will take a farmer. Now if he is a good farmer he will be very particular in selecting his seed. He will not pick out the poorest, nor even plant promiscuously good and bad (potatoes for example) together, but he will pick out the best, just like the ones he wishes to raise. So with corn, if he has not done it before, he will do it when husking. The nice, fine ears, with deep or long grain, he will pick out, set apart, or save for seed. These are "sanctified" or set apart from the rest. The rest he may feed to his hogs or cattle, or take to the mill, but the best he saves for seed. Now the earth is the Lord's—the territory of his kingdom. It was and is intended to be governed by the Lord, and those who know him and believe and obey him. God created the earth to be inhabited, but before this he had determined—pre-determined who should govern it—to wit, his obedient children—the disobedient should die. The first man Adam proved to be unfaithful and disobedient and died. But from that time to the present the Lord has been selecting, saving, setting apart or sanctifying the few who did and do believe his promises. Just as the farmer saves the best for seed, so the Lord has been and does still save, select and set apart the faithful ones for his purpose, namely, to share with him in his government, to be kings and priests with him. Now to or, for what purpose is the Lord saving the believers? That they may go to heaven and dwell with him there forever? Not at all, but just the contrary, the Lord will come and reign, and they with him on the earth. Now that the saints will be kings and priests, and share with the Lord in governing, ruling or judging the world will be seen by a few Scriptures I will now refer to. Referring to the same earth or territory of God's kingdom first put under Adam, and later given to the king of Babylon, it says Dan. vii. 18, "But the saints of the Most High shall receive the kingdom, and possess the kingdom for ever, even for ever and ever." And in verse 22, "And judgment was given to the saints of the Most High; and the time came that the saints possessed the kingdom." It will be noticed judgment was given to the saints—not that the saints may be judged, but that they judge, rule or govern, and they possess the kingdom, not as subjects of it, but they are the royal family, and possess the kingdom as kings, and will possess the kingdom for ever, even for ever and ever! See also ver. 27. Thus when the saints once possess the kingdom they will always possess it.

Now we will turn to Matt. xix. 28, Jesus had been speaking of the difficulty of rich men entering the kingdom, who seemed to astonish the disciples, so they say, who then can be saved? Jesus replied that with men this is impossible, but with God all things are possible. Then Peter said, "Lo, we have left all, and followed thee; what then shall we have?" Now, Peter's question is right to the point, What shall we have? How often have I heard professing Christians ask about heaven and shall we know each other there? etc. But let us see the answer of Jesus to Peter. "And Jesus said unto them, Verily I say unto you, that ye who have followed me, in the regeneration when the Son of Man shall sit on the throne of his glory, you also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel." This is a most important answer. It is the best authority possible—the Lord himself. It includes very much. It shows:

1. They will sit on thrones.
2. They will judge, rule and govern.
3. Whom? The twelve tribes of Israel.
4. When? When Jesus shall sit on his glorious throne in the regeneration. And this will be when the Lord comes in the glory of the Father and all the holy angels with him. But more anon.

Notice.

The members of the Association of Believers of the Church of God, will meet on Saturday, June 20, 1903, at Felida, Washington, to elect officers and to transact any other business that may come up before the Society.

Now dear brethren, of our most holy faith, let us go to this meeting, which will be held in connection with the N. W. Conference, determined to do for the Master all that it is in our power to do.

This notice is late because I have just returned from a visit to the East and did not know where the Conference would be held. Hoping it will appear in time, I am yours for the truth.

ALMIRA BROOKS, Sec'y.

For the Illinois Bereans.

I wish to remind the Bereans that the dollar pledged last conference is about due, and we want to have all funds in by August. Let us all attend to this and have a full treasury to work on at the next conference.

Plymouth, Indiana, June 17, 1903.

If each one would look up his account, and in case he is owing on his subscription, will at once renew, we will esteem the favor highly. A number seem to have forgotten us.

Please make note that the North-West Conference, near Vancouver, Wash., June 19, is postponed until further notice. Prevalence of small pox in the locality is the reason given.

Another "June meeting" at Antioch, Marshall Co., Ind., is in the past. The Secretary will give us a report of it in due time. We only want to say in advance that the attendance was large, the attention of the best, as was all the preaching. A number who had never met with us before came, and seemed to enjoy it as well as did any of the older ones. May the influence of this meeting abide with and strengthen each for the work that lies before.

Under the heading "A Week of Disaster," the Chicago Tribune gives the following summary of the loss of life and property by floods and fire lately: The work of destruction caused by floods, cyclones, fires, and drought is now substantially over and it is possible to form an approximate estimate of the extent of the disasters which have occurred. The loss of life by floods was 88 in Kansas, 40 in Missouri, 39 in Illinois, 18 in Iowa, and 8 in other places; total, 193. The property loss by floods in Kansas, Missouri, Iowa, and Illinois was $18,530,000 and by the South Carolina floods $3,500,000, a total of $21,830,000. The list of homeless by floods is 56,100. The Georgia cyclone destroyed 107 lives, left 900 persons homeless, and caused a property loss of $660,000. It is estimated that the forest fires which have devasted so large an area of New England, the Adirondack region, Long Island, and New Jersey have destroyed about $25,000,000 worth of property, and the damage occasioned by the drought is estimated at about $75,000,000. Fortunately only two or three persons were burned by the forest fires. The list of homeless by the same cause must have been considerable, as several small villages were destroyed, but no estimate has been made of the number. Rarely has nature been so destructive as during the last week of May, when it destroyed a total of 300 lives, $122,430,000 of property, and left more than 57,000 people homeless.

The following letter will explain itself largely. It will be remembered by those interested that Bro. Waggoner wrote an article that appeared in our issue of May 20. He sees where he was in error, and takes this means of rectifying himself.

Editor Restitution:

The Restitution came to hand yesterday having the article on "Israel in Egypt—How long?" by W. H. Case. I desire to acknowledge that I was in error in assuming that the "400 years" period occupied the time the children of Israel were in Egypt, and also that the sojourning commenced at the time the last of the children of Israel was born. The statement "the sojourning of the children of Israel" led me at first to think it must have begun with Jacob's children. But I see now the deeper significance of the expression, and that just as Levi paid tithes to Melchisedeck, so the sojournings of the "children of Israel" could have begun while they were yet in the loins of their father Abraham. Another point which I overlooked was that in Gal. iii. 16 to 18, it was the promise that was given to Abraham which the law, 430 years later, could not disannul.

I trust that all who read the article contributed by myself will also read this. Pray for me that I may be forgiven; for I disseminated that which I ought not, ignorantly.

Ancient Chaldea.

From The Faith, an English publication we copy the following which they have taken from a Birmingham daily. The subject of the Bagdad railroad which has had the attention of Germany, England and France for some time, is closely connected with the question as to whether or not the former prosperity of Ancient Chaldea can be restored. Egypt is reclaimed by the irrigation works on the Nile. Will Chaldea have a restoration in similar manner? Sir William Willcocks seems to deem it possible. Here is the article:—

To this consideration—a question which the majority of people would answer in the negative, for various reasons—Sir William Willcocks, K. C. M. G., M. I. C. E., has applied himself with considerable effect; and as he, the late Director-General of Reservoirs in Egypt, and manager director of the Ismir Sanich Company, is obviously an expert on irrigation, upon which returning prosperity in Chaldea would mainly depend, our curiosity is at once aroused. Sir William has dealt with the subject as a lecture, which was delivered at a meeting of the Khedivat Geographical Society at Cairo on March 25 last, and now published in pamphlet form (Cairo: National Printing Department) entitled 'The Restoration of the Ancient Irrigation Works on the Tigris, or the Recreation of Chaldea.' Those interested in the greater usefulness and larger productivity of the world, or, in other words, the essentially modern movement of reclaiming the waste and arid regions of the earth, as well as archeologists and Zionists will read this little work with mingled feelings, but with a most flattering attention. For it touches an old problem in a new place, and with the practical and efficient hand of a scientist.

Students of history—sacred and secular—and readers of the 'Arabian Nights' do not require to be told of the extraordinary fertility of the land watered by the Tigris—the land of Abraham—nor yet of the greatness of the empire that age after age held sway there. Suffice it to say that now where desolation reigns there once lay the treasury of the kings of the East. It was a land of such plenty that when Maimun, the son and successor of Haroun-el-Rashid, ascended the Mokattam hill and saw the smiling land of Egypt stretched before his feet, he was so disappointed with the sight that he pitied Pharaoh, who said in his pride, 'Am I not Pharaoh, King of Egypt!' Such a boast, said Maimun, would not have been uttered if Pharaoh could have seen Chaldea.

"And wherever we go, within 100 miles of Baghdad, we are on classic ground. 'Descending the river from north to south,' says Sir William, 'we see first Dura, the intake of the great Nahrwan Canal, and the plain on which Nebuchadnezzar erected his golden image, probably to commemorate a thorough restoration of this very canal; then Tel Alig, where the Emperor Julian died of his wounds, when the expulsion of the Romans from these regions meant the surrender of the Eastern world to the Persian kings; Opis, the wealthiest mart of the East for many generations; Baghdad, the capital of the Kaliphs, where Haroun-el-Raschid held his court; Ctesiphon, the ancient capital of the Sassanian kings of Persia; Seleucia, the capital of the Macedonian kingdom of the East; Cunaxa, where Cyrus the Younger was killed, and Xenophon and the ten thousand began their retreat through country intersected by a hundred canals; and finally Babylon itself, though this last city was on the Euphrates. Protected on the west by the Median wall, was probably a canal bank, and on which the east by the banks of the Nahrwan Canal, the country on both banks of the Tigris lay safe from the incursions of wandering Arabs, and was long held as the richest and most coveted part of the East.'

The Tigris, it may be necessary to explain, is the Hiddekel of the Bible and the Diklat, or Idiklat, of the cuneiform monuments. It rises south of Lake Goljik, in the mountains of Kurdistan, within a few miles of the eastern bend of the Euphrates and flows southeast, east, southeast until it joins the Euphrates, and together they flow into the Persian Gulf. The course of the Tigris has been estimated at 1500 miles. About 180 miles upstream from Baghdad lies the town of Tekrit. From Tekrit the Tigris flows southeast some thirty-seven miles, when it takes a turn to the left and flows almost due east until it has passed Opis, from which point it flows due south to Baghdad. In the first thirty-seven miles from Tekrit there are still to be seen the four in-takes of a great canal, the Nahrwan—'the Canal Keeper' or 'Feeder'—which ran down the left bank of the Tigris, supplying a vast network of canals before it rejoined the Tigris some 100 miles below Baghdad. It was cut, for a considerable portion of its length, through solid rock; crossed the track of more than one river in its course; and was, as Sir William tells us, a canal with which nothing in Egypt or in India could be compared.

We need not follow the distinguished engineer into the working details..... interesting though they are. It is enough for us to know that for hundreds of years the country was well irrigated.....What interests us more is the enquiry into the cause or causes of the ruin of all this agricultural wealth and the proposals that scientific skill can advance in favor of reconstruction. To Sir William Willcocks it seems conclusive that in Chaldea's evil day the main stream of the Tigris deserted its ancient bed, followed the scoured and degraded bed of the canal whose regulating head had been swept away, and cut a new channel for itself at right angles to its old course. This, in a word, was the chief cause of all the ruin which other events but completed. He compares the disaster which happened here with that which would happen in Northern India were the Ganges River to desert the Hardwar channel, flow down the Budh Gangu, and then, turning abruptly westwards, cut away the Knukhal bluffs until the canal was cut into by the river.' It would mean ruin, says Sir William Willcocks, to the whole canal with its 500 kilometres of main channels and 3,500 kilometers of minor channels.

Commander Felix Jones, of the Indian Navy, who studied the question thoroughly, was of the same opinion, and so expressed himself in his memoirs, which we believe have not been published, but from which Sir William makes the following interesting quotation:—

"The summit of Opis, as we gaze around, affords a picture of wreck that could scarcely be conceived, if it were not spread at the feet of the beholder. Close to us are the dismembered walls of the great city, and many other mounds of adjacent edifices, spread like islands over the vast plain, which is as bare of vegetation as a snow-track, and smooth and glasslike as a calm sea. This appearance of the country denotes that some sudden and overwhelming mass of water must have prostrated everything in its way, while the Tigris, as it anciently flowed, is seen to have left its channel, and to have taken its present course through the most flourishing portion of the district, severing in its mad career the neck of the great Nahrwan artery, and spreading devastation over the whole district around. Towns, villages, and canals, men, animals, and cultivation, must have been engulfed in a moment, but the immediate loss was doubtless small, compared with the misery and gloom that followed. The whole region for a space of 400 kilometres, averaging about thirty in breadth, was dependent upon the conduit for water, and contained a population so dense, if we may judge from the ruins and great works traversing it in its whole extent, that no spot in the globe perhaps could excel it. Of those who were spared to witness the sad effects of the disaster, thousands, perhaps millions, had to fly to the banks of the Tigris for the immediate preservation of life, as the region at once became a desert, where before were animation and prosperity. The ruin of the Nahrwan is indeed the great blow the country has received. Its severity must have created universal stupor, and was doubtless followed by pestilence and famine of unmitigated rigor, owing to the marshes which accumulated annually in the absence of the dams, on each spring rise of the river.'

As to the problem of reconstruction Sir William Willcocks thinks that in the first instance four brigades of Engineers in the North and four in the South should be sent out to make all the necessary surveys and calculations. In that way £50,000, he says would be well spent. Certainly such a sum, he adds, should not stand in the way of settling so important a point as the restitution of the delta of the Tigris and Euphrates on the eve of its being traversed by the Baghdad railway. Indeed, he adds, it would be an irreparable mistake if the railways were aligned and constructed independently of the irrigation canals and if by some ill chance the railway traversed one part of the delta, and the profitably irrigable part of the delta were to lie elsewhere. Upon the report of the engineers Sir William would proceed to reconstruct the Nahrwana system of canals. He gives a rough preliminary estimate, based on his experiences in Egypt, as to the cost, and he also works out the figures bearing on the probable returns from the expenditure. He declares that 1,280,000 acres of first-rate land in the Tigris Valley only need water to become highly productive. An expenditure of £8,000,000 on canals in this district would reclaim land to the value of £38,000,000 and would bring a net return of 25 per cent on the capital. Similar results, he thinks, might be attained in the swamps between the Euphrates and the Tigris. 'Modern science,' he says 'is sufficiently in advance of ancient science to justify the hope that the land will again become the garden of the East, and that we shall again see men travelling from the East and also from the West, and finding a resting-place in the plains of Shinar.'

"This eminently hopeful survey ought to stimulate action. There ought to be no dearth of money for an investment which has in it an element of such promise. Sixteen millions sterling sunk in an enterprise of this description seems certainly more attractive business than twenty or thirty millions in the Baghdad railway. In any case the figures and expectations of Sir William Willcocks deserve serious consideration. It may be pointed out that the millions of Baron Hirsch, bequeathed to advance the return of the Jews to Palestine, are, so far as we can gather, unutilized, and possibly the trustees do not know quite how best to utilize them. Here is a chance for Zionism—if all that Sir William Willcocks says can be made good."

King of Servia Killed.

Alexander, king of Servia, with Queen Draga, two brothers of the queen, the Premier, and Minister of War, besides several guards, were killed in a revolt at Belgrade, Servia, June 11. Alexander has been antagonized by many prominent men of his kingdom, but defied them all. He was the son of King Milan and Queen Natalie, and took the throne March 6, 1889, at the age of 13. Regents were appointed to administer the government till he became of age, but after 4 years he caused their arrest, deciding he could rule without them. Being unsuccessful in finding a wife among the royal families, he married Draga Mascain, who had been a waiting maid for his mother, a woman of low birth and character. Since this marriage there has been nothing but trouble for Alexander. Being childless at one time she connived with her physician to palm off a child as her own, but the plot was discovered and exposed. The immediate cause of the present rupture [redacted] intention to ad[redacted]ier, and make li[redacted]ke some su[redacted] and some m[redacted]ssed his cabinet and the legislature, and appointed others in their places who were more to his liking. This so enraged the people that the result above is the outcome. With him the Obrenovitch dynasty ends. Prince Peter Karageorgevitch has been proclaimed king, but whether he will be acceptable to Russia and Austria is a question that will have to be settled.

Prof. George C. Howland, in a letter to the Chicago Tribune gives such a clear view of the Servian condition, that we give some copious extracts:

In Servia there are 2,400,000 people, of whom 90 per cent belong to the Servian race. Outside of Servia are 6,000,000 other Servians who are subjects of the emperor of Austria or the Sultan of Turkey. The Servian leaders dream of a day when the Servian empire of the middle ages shall be reconstituted and all men of the Servian race united under one banner.

Here lies the menace to the peace of the world in the fact that the most despised king in Europe has fallen and the grandson of the first liberator of Servia has reached the throne.

With a king old enough to be wise, yet young enough to lead an army, strong enough to be obeyed and decent enough to be respected, Servia has assumed a new position among the powers of the east.

Servia has been an independent nation only twenty-five years, though she has been struggling for independence for 100 years. Her leaders have learned the lesson by this time to make use of the jealousies of other powers to advance themselves and not to rely too far on foreign aid.

When Black George raised the standard of revolt on Feb. 1, 1804, he gathered about him men who drove out the Turks, and had the Servians been left to settle it the Servian kingdom would have been established then. To the Russians the Servians naturally looked for aid, and for a time they believed they would have it. Napoleon in 1806 urged the Sultan of Turkey never to give up Servia, and offered 20,000 Frenchmen to reconquer the country. The Russians in 1811 occupied Belgrade, to the great delight of the Servians, who little knew that the next day Russia offered to give Servia to Austria. But in 1812 the delusive hopes of liberty vanished. Russia and France signed the treaty of Bucharest, in which the Servians gained nothing. Black George—Karageorge—fled from the country when he realize that all the powers of Europe were unfriendly to him, and when he returned at a later day by stealth to raise the peasantry again against Turkish rule he was murdered and his head sent to the Sultan of Turkey.

Milosh, another of the native leaders, began a second revolt in 1815, and in 1829 was recognized as prince. His devotion to British interests led to his deposition in 1839, and in 1842 the son of Karageorge was elected king. During the Crimean war Alexander Karageorgevitch took no active part, much to the disgust of Russia, and in 1859 he was deposed. It is his son, born in 1846, while his father was prince, that now becomes king.

Servia achieved her independence by war against Turkey, but when Russia came to make peace with Turkey in 1878 the hopes of the Servians were again frustrated. Sooner than raise up too great a state from the Servian people under Turkish rule, Bosnia and Herzegovina were handed over to the protection of Austria and a new Slavic state, Bulgaria, was created. From that time to the present the court of Belgrade has been subject now to Austrian, now to Russian influences. King Alexander succeed in offending every one, and his death will cause no sense of personal loss anywhere, but time alone wills how whether Austria or Russia has lost politically.

It would seem as if the new king might well be expected to be friendly to Russia. He is the brother-in-law of the Russian Grand Duke Peter and of King Victor Emanuel of Italy. He is the son-in-law of the prince of Montenegro, Russia's most faithful friend. If family ties were to count one might expect him to enter the new alliance which seems to be foreshadowed as the successor of the triple alliance, that including Russia, Italy and France. It is only from Austria or from Turkey that Servia can gain territory.

Yet, on the other hand, Russia aspires to be the head of a great pan-Slavic nation. In 1811, in 1812, in 1878, Russia has shown an unwillingness to let Servia become too great. Russia hopes to be d[redacted] affairs of [redacted] Servia to [redacted] alone. [redacted] seems [redacted] Russia will defend Se[redacted] vance her own interests.

When King Peter's father, Prince Alexander Karageorgevitch, was accused of complicity in the murder of Prince Milosh, and condemned in his absence, the Austrian government refused to deliver him up and ordered a new trial on Austrian soil, which acquitted the prince. This may become a precedent for an inquiry into King Peter's complicity in the murder of King Alexander, but if all accounts are to be believed the population of Servia hail with delight their liberation from the rule of Alexander, and it is difficult to see what could be gained by any foreign power by interfering. It is not at all likely that King Peter can be shown to have had any knowledge of the plot, and interference would only precipitate the war.

King Peter is only 57 years old. If he is to lead the Servians in war it should be soon. Yet if he were to turn the thoughts of his people to the development of the resources of Servia he would place them in better condition for the inevitable conflict. Mineral wealth abounds in Servia, which has been scarcely touched. Her innumerable torrents would furnish power for factories capable of supplying all Europe. Peace would bring prosperity, but peace will never be permanent till the Servian people are in possession in their own name of all the territory where the Servian race and Servian language are dominant.

Sea of Galilee.

The Sea of Galilee, also called the Sea of Tiberias, and the Lake of Gennesareth, and, in the Old Testament, the Sea of Cinnereth, is about thirteen miles long, and about six wide. It is shaped like an egg, the large end running toward the north. Its bed is like a huge basin. Along its eastern and western sides the banks rise very steep some say two thousand feet, and their tops are very level. Its waters are pleasant to drink, milder than those of the river or fountain, and somewhat colder than might be expected from the situation of the lake. At the north and south ends where the Jordan enters and passes out, the openings are very wide.

The most remarkable fact in connection with this lake is its great depression. Its surface being between six and seven hundred feet below the level of the ocean. This physical geographical fact will account for its climate and products. The heat is almost unendurable during the summer months. The harvests are earlier than elsewhere in Palestine. A writer speaking of it in present and past says: "The utter lonliness and absolute stillness of the scene are exceedingly impressive. It seems as if all nature had gone to rest, languishing under that scorching heat. How different was it in the time of our Lord! Then all was life and bustle along the shores; the cities and villages that thickly studded them resounding with the hum of a busy population; while from hillside and cornfield came the cheerful cry of the shepherd and plowman. The lake, to, was dotted with dark fishing boats, and spangled with white sails. Now a mournful and solitary silence reigns alike over sea and shore. The cities are in ruins. Capernaum, Chorazin, the two Bethsaidas, Hippo, Gamala, and Tarichea are completely deserted. Tiberias and Magdala are the only inhabited spots; and for several miles inland in every direction the country looks waste and desolate. The inhabitants, merchants, fishermen, and peasants—are nearly all gone. The few that remain in the shattered houses of Tiberias, and the mud hovels of Magdala, and the black tents of the wandering Bedouin, seem worn and wasted by poverty and sickness. When the writer last visited it, the Sea of Galilee could just boast of one boat, and it was so rotten and leaky as not to be seaworthy. The fish however, are as abundant as ever; for though only little hand nets are used, a considerable sum is paid to the Government for the privilege of fishing."—Christian.

Make Much of Your Life.

Perfect men are not abundant; it requires more than one man to meet the highest demands. One may be equipped in one direction, another in another, but universal geniuses are very rare. It is therefore needful for each man to make the most of himself and of his opportunities. His life [redacted]run in a single line of action; he [redacted] in a narrow sphere; he may be [redacted] in some one department [redacted] action or investigation, but wherever his lot is cast he should make the most of his life.

A man must choose for himself, or the providence of God may choose for him a course which he is to pursue; and if this course is well chosen, then by patient, persistent effort he may accomplish great things for God and for humanity. Many lives run to waste for lack of self development. Many a man pines for an education, and yet will not take the trouble to educate himself, as he might in odd moments, with persistent inquiry and hard and careful study. Many a man might be skillful in his chosen occupation, and expert in his fields of investigation, if he spent the time in reading and learning that he spends in dreaming, or idling, or smoking. Many a man wastes enough of his life and vigor in laziness and lust and gluttony, to make him intelligent, able and useful; wastes enough of money in extravagant and useless expenses to make him comfortable, prosperous and even wealthy; wastes enough of opportunity in dwadling and trifling to make him a power in the world; and then wonders and murmurs at the success of others, and complains at his own lack of prosperity. Let every man do his best for himself and for God, and the world would be a very different world.—H. L. Hastings.

PRESCIENCE.

It comes in the hush of dawning,
When heaven and earth are gray;
A murmur of far-off music
Drifting near with the day.

Warm, in the heart of storm-winds,
Blossoming under the sleet,
The promise of unknown blessing
Waiting for me at his feet.

Noonday and night I hear it,
Under the brooding sky,
As if an angel had whispered
His message in passing by.

Tender, as when men knew him
In the breaking of the bread;
Holy, as when his blessing
Rested on Mary's head.

Will it be joy that waits me,
Veiled in the morrow's dim?
Will it be peace in labor,
Drawing me close to him?

Gift of an added blessing,
Or crown of a sacred love?
The light of his new transfigured,
Or the shadow under the cross?

Palestine Letters.—No. 4.

Editor Citizen:

After occupying our quarters four days in Alexandria, we heard of a steamer going to Constantinople and into quarantine, so we took tickets and sailed Wednesday Nov. 21, at 10 a. m. Our first stopping place was Pireus the seaport for Athens, Greece 7 miles away between which there is a R. R. While here we learned that our quarantine was to be spent on this Island. We arrived here Sunday, Nov. 25, and were soon transferred to our quarters on shore. We occupy one room of a good warm house with only one other passenger, a German that we are boarding.

Our situation, notwithstanding our comfortable quarters is anything but pleasant. We are watched with the closest vigilance, and have our bounds as if we were prisoners of war, beyond which we dare not pass under pain of death. Our provisions are not very good, especially the bread, which is always sour, but is as cheap as good bread in America. Potatoes are very poor and high; we have only bought some once, half a peck for 50 cents. Macaroni is our favorite here. We have also beans, beef, mutton, onions, cabbages, and charcoal to cook with. The water is very poor, hard, and we think a little brackish. Our provisions cost us much less than we fear they would. Our room rent is 82 cts per head, including our waiter whom we have to board.

It is amusing as well as vexatious to see what fools these heathen make of themselves. Where we get our provisions, they have two walls built across a neck of land, between which, a distance of about ten feet is considered neutral ground. Across between these walls is a slide fixed, and a box to slide across in which is a tumbler with some kind of a disenfectant (I suppose it is) into which our money is dropped by our waiter and drawn across with a rope; and our provisions are put in and drawn back. They will not take back any thing that we have handled; neither will they touch any thing that we have touched; as I saw the soldier on duty use a stone to move a tin box that had been put into the box. Glass bottles, however, they will take to the store to be filled, but the corks must first be removed; a little piece of paper, a part of the original label had to be scraped off.

I had occasion one day to send off some letters. Our waiter put them into the box and they were taken out with a pair of tongs and put carefully into a box to befumigated, I suppose; for fear that these precious heathen would be contaminated with cholera; whereas we have not seen a case of cholera; nor has one of our company been sick for an hour except sea-sickness. The doctor comes around once in awhile to see if there are any cases of cholera, but we are required to keep a proper distance from him; for fear of communicating cholera to him.

When a fresh ship load of passengers arrive we are required to keep at a proper distance from them or we would be in danger of having our detention lengthened out equal with theirs.

Many of the passengers are Mohammedans, more are Egyptians and Turks; and more of them are Catholics. The Turkish women are dressed very richly while Intransit; but here on the island they are dressed with a white flowing dress; some tied at the waist, and others entirely loose coming down to the ground. They also have a head dress of the same material which is so arranged that they can bring it around so as to cover their mouths. They appear to be averse to having their mouths seen by men.

The Greeks appear to be very ignorant; having but one idea; and that is to get money.

Many of the Catholic men have a string of beads which they keep in their hands; counting them; we supposed.

A new ship load of 52 passengers arrived yesterday which reduced our quarantine one day as the government is short of house room, and we are assured we shall leave here Friday the 14th, and go to Smyrna where we expect to find a steamer to take us to Jaffa.

Dec. 1. Another steamer arrived this morning with passengers. They brought a load on shore, but had to take them back on board again for want of room to await our departure.

Smyrna, Dec. 16. We are now in Smyrna on board a steamer for Jaffa, sail today. Smyrna in Asia Minor is a large town containing some 200,000 inhabitants. There is a railway to Ephesus but it is not doing much business.

We hired a dragoman to guide us around to see the sights. He showed us into a wine house where we saw large wine casks an immense number. We went also, on to a hill called Castro Hill, back of the city where we saw the ruins of an ancient wall, enclosing perhaps ten acres. Within this enclosure we saw the ruins of a building, probably a church, that looked as if it had been in use over two thousand years since. Near this was an underground building, which our guide told us had been used for a market. This building was some 75 by 130 feet, and was supported by some ten or fifteen pillars. We saw some human bones, that had been covered very slightly, evidently the victim of a murder in this lonely place.

Our guide took us up on to the wall facing the city, and a grander sight I have seldom seen. The ancient city of Smyrna lay at our feet; the harbor and the bay, clothed with shipping, appeared in the distance; the towers and the mosques with their minarets, were scattered promiscously throughout the city.

Our guide pointed out to us at the distance of about a mile, an old ruin, said to be the church building in which the "Church of Smyrna" used to worship.

We weighed anchor at about 12 m. Dec. 17, with Jaffa in our eye. We [illegible] hundred passengers on [illegible] bound for the [illegible] an American, soon came on board and conveyed us on shore, and took us to his house where we found comfortable quarters. Here we saw the most lovely sights we ever saw.

Jaffa is a beautiful town as seen from a steamer at a little distance from shore. The town is built on a rising ground in the center, while on either side the ground is lower. The houses are all of stone, and present a white appearance, while the roofs being made of tiling, or crockery ware, present a red appearance. The streets are very narrow and very crooked, as are all the streets in the cities of the Levant.

The soil in the vicinity of Jaffa is a rich sandy loam. The immense amount of vegetation that everywhere presented itself, attests the fertility of the soil. Oranges are abundant and very cheap; we can get a dozen for three cents. Lemons the same. They are about the same in quality as the Florida oranges and lemons. But the great difference consists in the length of time it takes for trees to come into bearing and the amount that can be produced on a given acreage. In Florida the trees must be set about 30 or 32 feet apart, and must be fertilized every year, whereas in Jaffa they are set only 8 or 10 feet apart and never fertilized. In Florida, a seedling tree will not come into full bearing until the trees are 10 to 12 years of age, and are some six inches in diameter. Here they come into full bearing in three or four years. I saw a tree not larger than my finger with an orange growing on it; very many two inches in diameter were so full they had to be propped up on account of the load of fruit. An orange garden is a dense forest on the plain of Sharon. Not only do they plant the citrus tree in close proximity, but they plant vegetables everywhere and make it a specialty to get everything possible from the land, yet they never think of giving back any thing.

I saw a great many large heaps of manure, apparently the accumulation of years; still lying where they were thrown out from the stables, and no one caring to spread it on the land.

The vegetable market is well filled with [illegible] abundance and variety of fruits, vegetables, nuts, grains, and all kinds of food, cooked and uncooked. Cane is found in great abundance in the market, and is used for chewing; the juice being sweet it is quite palatable, and is much sought after. There are no mills to manufacture the cane into syrup. This undoubtedly could be made a good business by any one that understands making syrup.

The fences on the plain of Sharon are nearly without exception made of cactus; this is a species of prickly pear, the leaves being very large and thick, probably 12 to 18 inches in length and 8 or 10 inches in width and growing on a tree some 6 or 8 inches in diameter. These when made to grow closely make a very compact fence. Yet it is very evident to me that the osage orange would be a far better and more profitable tree to cultivate for fences. This is cultivated some, enough to demonstrate that the osage ornage will succeed here. Also it might be made profitable to raise it for fuel with complete success. I have not seen any fence wire since I have been in Palestine.

Sunday, Dec. 31. Went this morning to visit a German Colony some two miles from Jaffa. This colony is quite prosperous. They have a windmill to grind grain and another to raise water for irrigation. They have a very large acreage of wheat on the ground and it looks well.

In the afternoon, I went with a Jew who is in the employment of Mr. Floyd, to see a Jewish Colony. This is about two miles from Jaffa. They number about 80 persons. We went to their orange garden and found it filled with oranges and the various kinds of citrus fruits, in great abundance.

Jerusalem, Jan. 6.

We left Jaffa for Jerusalem, Dec. 31, and arrived in Jerusalem at about 2 a. m. of Jan. 1st. I have looked around some. Have been on Mt. Zion two or three times, as it is only a short distance from where I am stopping. The valley of Hinom or Gehenna commences near where I am stopping, and runs down and around Zion on two sides of it, the sides being very steep.

Jan. 6. Sunday I saw wheat on Mt. Zion that was fully up to my knees by stretching up the blades.

The soil here is a tough clay and very rich. Every available foot of land is dug up and sown or planted and all crops look well. There has been an abund[illegible] this winter and more is expected, it rains nearly every day. I have seen frost only two mornings very light.

In Jerusalem are congregated a great many "extremists." All come here to see the end of this dispensation. I have just returned from a visit to see a body of Religionists that came here from Chicago. They are called "The Chicago Americans." They are looking for the soon coming of Christ and the establishment of his kingdom. They are "Extremists." They have visions and revelations direct from God. They take in any one and board him free of charge. The house they occupy is the Lord's house, and of course they have no business to take pay for keeping any one. One of our company has gone to stay with them. I dont expect to go.

A few of us with Mr. Taylor for a dragomen went to see the sights at, and around the confluence of the valleys of Hinnom and Jehoshaphat. We passed out of the Jaffa gate, and turned to the left down along the valley of Hinnom or Gehenna. We saw no fire that never should be quenched, but the fire had ceased to burn for want of fuel.

Table Talk.

Dear Brothers and Sisters of the Church of God at Salem, Ohio:

I am pleased to be able to greet you this morning. I have looked forward to this visit for some time as I have long wanted to meet you all face to face having heard of you by letter and verbal report. I have so far in my life been able to meet with the brethren at Niagara Falls, N. Y. and Chicago, Ill. This will be the third church outside of Cleveland that I will be acquainted with. It is a source of pleasure to know that the truth is upheld in other cities and that one personally knows the upholders. But here I claim more than the existence of mere acquaintanceship for are not the Cleveland and Salem Churches near and dear to each other, and are not those who are Father and Mother to me naturally and Brother and Sister spiritually, co-workers with you?

When Brother Neill wrote me that he and you desired me to address you for a few minutes this morning and gave me the privilage of choosing my own subject, I felt like writing about that which was uppermost in my mind at the time, and so you will hear a little about self-denial, or pleasing God. The Christian's self-denial, I mean. There are many ways to open up this subject; for self-denial plays a prominent part in every phase of a Christian's life, in fact a Christian's life is all self-denial. I will give you my thoughts as they came to me.

Paul says in the 8th of Romans, "The carnal mind is enmity against God; for it is not subject to the law of God.....So then they that are in the flesh cannot please God."

We believe this statement, we who by the grace of God have had our minds enlightened. We believe Paul means just what he says.

But, now, what does Paul mean?

Carnal means fleshly, natural, pertaining to nature and a carnal mind is the mind of a man who thinks of and reaches after things natural and fleshly, whose thoughts are of his immediate surroundings, wealth and comfort. Thank God his ways have been revealed to us that our minds have been renewed. Paul says. "The carnal mind is enmity with God, so they that are in the flesh, (or carnally minded) cannot please God."

It is evident then that the pleasing of God is of some importance. Yes, it is of vast importance. The pleasing of God means self-denial. The denial of self, the natural or carnal man. But, by this denial, brothers and sisters, we obtain a hope of eternal life that it is the pleasure of God to give to all who make this denial. The carnal mind makes a constant and unceasing demand upon us to gratify its every whim, which were they granted would lead us to pride, envy, strifes, railings, evil surmisings, perverse disputings, debates, wrath, backbittings, whisperings, tumults, drunkenness, revellings, yes and a host of smaller desires, but counting as much in the sight of God. The love of affluence and influence, love of approbation by men, headstrongness or willfulness, disrespect, rudeness, roughness, loud-mouthed, and so on.

But we are told to flee these things, deny them and follow after righteousness, godliness, faith, love, patience, meekness, not the wearing of gold, or the putting on of apparel, but the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price. We see then there is a value placed upon self-denial. Self-denial is not an inherent or natural faculty, it must be cultivated. I am convinced that it is not the amount actually accomplished that is pleasing to God, but the effort put forth in doing so. Man looketh upon the outward appearance, but God looketh upon the heart. 1 Sam. xvi. 7.

In practising self-denial we lay aside and avoid those things of the natural man that are displeasing to God. This will create a vacancy or vacuum. This is dangerous. Idleness is said to be the first step toward crime. We must occupy the time by fulfilling the commandments of God. If patience and meekness take the place of pride and envy as we live day by day, striving to please God, time will not hang heavy on our hands. Jesus says in Mat. xvi. 24, If any man will come after me let him deny himself. Jesus knew denial would be necessary if a man desired to gain a share of the gift of God, for he was made like his brethren. Although one's disposition would not necessary lead him to the indulgence of what we would call crime there are countless little faults to be overcome, a denial of self interest, self righteousness, self opinion, self display, self seeking and so forth. Yes it will extend to the control of our enjoyments, appetites, tempers, affections. It will cause the disposal of our substance, the overcoming of unkindness by good offices, the yielding of precedence to others. Self has been the idol of the natural heart ever since it turned from God as its source of chief good. If then Jesus is to be loved and followed self must be trampled under foot; but let us take care that self righteousness be not the ground of our self-denial, nor that we measure our self-denial by that of anothers. We are walking in the path our Savior marked out for us by his rule and cross, and this is the yoke he has appointed us to bear. Self-denial is one of the fundamental principles of a Christian's life. Without it he cannot hope to secure eternal life.

Oh brothers and sisters, if we would but think of the glorious promises of the good things to be given to the overcomer I know we would strive to be numbered among the little flock that shall hear the voice of Jesus. These are my thoughts in the rough [illegible] no time to go over them, and I hope you will not think of them as especially applicable to you, for I have reason to believe the reverse is true. We of Cleveland hold a good report of you at Salem, but all Scripture is given by inspiration of God and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works. 2 Tim. iii. 16. May it be the means of our salvation is my prayer.

GEO. NEILL.

Editor Restitution:

Brother John Foore of Parsons, Kansas, has just closed a series of very interesting and instructive meetings at Ripley, Ill. We can heartily recommend him to all of like precious faith as knowing how to "rightly divide the Word of Truth" and they will receive lasting and profitable instruction by a visit from him. May the blessing of the Father attend him and his good work wherever he goes. Is the prayer of your humble Sister in the Anointed One.

Stalk vs. Grain.

Mr. J. J. Hill, the well-know "railroad king," is reported to have taught some of his friends a useful lesson as they were speeding in a special train through a great wheat belt. "You see that wheat field over there," he said; "how much do you suppose it will yield?" The estimate of the party varied from fifteen to twenty-five bushels per acre. "No, you're wrong," replied the president of the Great Northern. "That is hardly worth cutting. It's the heads, not the straw, that fill the grain bins. The special was stopped, and the passengers proceeded to investigate for themselves. Mr. Hill's judgment was vindicated, for they found but few kernels to a head, and many of them were shriveled up. The growth of the long, white stalks had been obtained at the cost of fruitfulness.

The lesson of this incident has a wider range than for the instruction of officials whose duty it is to make estimates of the wheat crop. For there are human beings whose vital activities go to stalk rather than to grain. They are not idle, and consequently their lives are not utterly barren, but the yield is of straw, not of nourishing wheat. Their work make of an imposing show, but, when it comes to be tested, the net result in the way of a real contribution to the welfare of that corner of the world in which they grow is pitifully small. On the other hand, there are those whose obvious output makes no impression at all on the casual onlooker, but whose lives will be found to mean something when the time of reaping comes. Wheat and tares must grow together until the harvest; yes, and wheat that goes to stalk and wheat that goes to grain will also both be found in the Master's field until the gathering of the sheaves shall prove once more the folly of judging by appearances. Success, as the world estimates it, will then be seen to be worth very little by the side of fruitfulness which is to the honor and praise of God.

Personal Relation to God.

How comforting the assurance that God is our Father! "Our Father which art in Heaven." To Him we sustain the tender relation of children. "Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear Him." Our relation to Him is an individual, personal relation. "The Lord knoweth them that are His." Does not a kind, pure, gracious Father know all His children? "Thou hast holden me by my right hand." "Thou shalt guide me with Thy counsel and afterward receive me to glory."

The Scriptures are careful to impress upon the mind the direct personal relation of each one to God. He is the Lord of Heaven and Earth; He rules over all; He has His agents and uses agencies without number, but He is ever in direct personal relation to each one. He is the Infinite One and is alike present in every place and His power is felt in every movement. He reveals Himself to every individual; He speaks to the conscience of each one; His law touches the personal life; there is the direct personal responsibility of each to Him. So He speaks of Himself as our God, as the one who is watching over the life and destiny of each one, as caring for each one. He is our Father; in Heaven, indeed, but near to us, knowing each one, caring for each one, and doing so in an infinite love for each one. He addresses us in this [illegible] "I have [illegible] thy hands. I have [illegible] with an everlasting love; I will [illegible] keep thee."

There is a wonderful comfort in this thought. So David felt when he said: "I am poor and needy, yet the Lord thinketh upon me." His thoughts are gracious thoughts, and it lifts the soul to the highest plane of life to remember that He who is over all is thinking of us, planning and working for us, making all work together for good.

But how deep is the sense of responsibility which this thought gives us! That which we have is a personal trust from the hands of our God, and we must answer for it. The Lord seems to allow us to do as we will for a time, but He comes and calls His servants to Him and each one receives from His hand according to what he has done. No part of the life is hidden, no motives can be concealed, no covering can hide them, no shelter can be taken behind our circumstances and surroundings, no plea of heredity will avail: in our own person we will stand before Him and each one for himself will render an account and receive the righteous judgment of blessing or penalty. We cry: "Lord, be merciful to us," and yet we rejoice in this personal relation and this direct responsibility, for with it is His personal love.

Prophecy Proves Inspiration.

As we examine the Old Testament, we find about six hundred predictions, more than three hundred of which center upon the person, character and career of Jesus Christ as the Messiah. These prophecies cover the line of his descent, the time of his birth and manifestation, the place of his nativity, and all the great leading circumstances of his life, death, resurrection, and ascension, with many subordinate details. These prophecies were in their complete form at least four centuries before his birth, inasmuch as both the Hebrew Scriptures and the Septuagint, or Greek translation, were both in the hands of the Jews, one about two, and the other five centuries, at least, before Christ was born. The circumstances which these prophecies describe are not only unprecedented in character, but there was no possibility, humanly speaking, of these predictions being fulfilled. In fact, they were largely couched in paradoxes or seeming contradictions. God has designed to present a mystery wholly inexplicable until history proved itself the key fitted to the lock. —A. T. Pierson.

The Greeks and Romans paid special attention to the physical culture of their youth, to public water supplies and baths, and Athens and Rome were provided with sewers early in their history. During the middle ages, sanitation received a decided check. Ignorance and brutal prejudice prevailed and this was the most unsanitary period in history. Most European towns were built compactly and surrounded by walls. The streets were narrow and winding, and the light and air were excluded. The accumulation of filth was frightful. Stables and houses were close neighbors. The dead were buried within the churchyards or in the churches. Wells were fed with polluted water. All conditions were favorable for the spread of infectious diseases, and in the fourteenth century alone the Oriental or bubonic plague—the Black Death of recent historians—carried off a fourth of the population of Europe. The birth-rate was much less than the death-rate normally. The cities had to be continually repopulated from the country. These sentences from a review in Science of new works on sanitation in our own times illustrate, by provoking a comparison, the improvement in our day.—Scientific American.

"Passwords and secret signs are no longer necessary for Christians, yet we would be the better for a revival of the first-century spirit of brotherhood among disciples of Christ. In those days, whenever a Christian met another Christian, and knew him as such, though unknown before, he became to him a brother and a friend, whom he was ready to aid in any way. It was considered, and rightly, that the wearing of the Name gave Christians a claim upon one another. To-day the brotherhood of the Church, should be the strongest of all the social ties."

Secrets of the Prophetic "Times" as relating to the things which are coming on the Earth, is the title of a 64 page pamphlet, written by Thomas Clarke, an Englishman, and published by The Faith Association, at Malvern Link, England. To any who are interested in Prophetic "Times" this work is of great value. We have received an invoice of these little books, and can supply them at 20c. each.

Scriptures Opened.

A third edition of the above named work is just out, and ready for delivery. This book has been before our readers so long now that its worth is well known. The author is Robert Ashcroft. The price for this edition is put low so that the brethren and sisters can get it to lend to honest enquirers after truth. We hope there are a few who have not turned their ears from the truth to fables. The book will speak for itself in its unfoldings of the purposes and plans of Jehovah, regarding the near future of the earth and its inhabitants. All should be interested in these truths, and those who have never read this book will have a feast. Price 65 cents post paid. Send to this office for them, or orders can be sent to J. C. Popular Lectures by M. Joblin.

Brethren and Sisters, Have you loved ones who think sincerity will save them? Have you friends who think they worship acceptably while ignorant of God's promises? Have you acquaintances with false hopes of heaven, or who believe themselves immortal by nature, or who think their sins are forgiven, although they are ignorant of the Law of Pardon, or who have no use for a God who consigns sinners to Eternal Torment, and are ignorant of Jehovah's beneficent purpose to fill the earth with his glory and bestow Eternal Life upon believers of the Gospel, so they can enjoy it for ever? If so, send for Popular Lectures by Bro. Joblin, entitled:—"The Kingdom of God;" "Old Mother Earth to Be Born Again;" "Strangers from the Covenants of Promise;" "Vain Worship;" "No Immortality Out of Christ;" "Hope Begotten by the Resurrection of Christ;" "God's Love and Solicitude for Mankind;" and "What Shall We Do to be Saved?"

Each Lecture of 16 pages $1 per 100 post free; or an assortment of the whole, same price. Address M. Joblin, 624 Woodland Av., Cleveland, O.

All letters should be addressed to "THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Marshall, Co., Ind."

Remittance should be sent by bank draft, postoffice money orders, or express orders. Money sent in either of the above ways is at our risk, money sent loose in letters is at the risk of the sender. All remittances should be made payable to the order of "THE RESTITUTION."

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

In ordering books or tracts get the latest copy of the paper you have and order only what you see advertised in that.

No Unbelief.

There is no unbelief;
Whoever plants a seed beneath the sod
And waits to see it push away the clod,
He trusts in God.

Whoever says when clouds are in the sky,
"Be patient, heart, light breaketh by and by,"
Trusts the Most High.

Whoever sees, neath winter's field of snow,
The efficient harvest of the future grow,
God's power must keep.

Whoever lies down on his cross to sleep,
Content to look each sense in slumber deep,
Knows God will keep.

The Law of Liberty, What Law is That?

James speaks of this law freely and favorably, hear him, "But whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, this man shall be blessed in his deed." chap. i. 25. Again, he says, "So speak ye, and so do, as they that shall be judged by the law of liberty." Chap. ii. 12. This we deem quite sufficient for a candid consideration of our cap question. Some good folks seem to think this law of liberty was, and is the decalogue, hence their great zeal for the law. We object to this view, because the purpose and design of the decalogue was not to liberate and make any one free, as there is not a speck of liberty and freedom in it. But it was to convict of sin, and restrain their overt actions, and condemn the sinner to death, much as the law of our land does. Wherefore the law was our schoolmaster to bring us unto Christ, that we might be justified by faith. But after that faith (that system of faith) is come, we are no longer under a schoolmaster. For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus. Read carefully Gal. iii. Now say, my good brother, can you make yourself believe that a law that prohibits you from picking up sticks or kindling a fire on the Sabbath day, and many other rigid things, and requires you to be stoned to death for so doing, is a perfect law of liberty? What kind of liberty is this, and where does it come in? A governor's pardon on certain conditions would be much more like a law of liberty and freedom, would it not? Or would you prefer to tell a criminal that he had violated the perfect law of liberty, and must now be put to death for so doing? Would you? If I am not mistaken, the other fellow must be, then I must kindly suggest to him a better way to walk, walk by faith in the promises of God, and thus become a partaker of the divine nature, while the law is not of faith, so says Paul, Gal. iii. 12. He also tells his Galatian brethren who were sorely troubled and bewitched over the law question, to stand fast therefore in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, and be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage. Chap. v. 1. Thus it is plain that this law of liberty is designed to free us from this old yoke of bondage, which we nor our fathers were able to bear, and also free us from past sins at the same time. This then must be the gospel of Christ, God's power or plan of salvation to every one, both Jew and Gentile who believes it and obeys it. This is that law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus that frees us from the law of sin and death. Listen a moment will you? But God be thanked that ye were the servants of sin, but ye have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered you, being then, yes then, made free from sin, ye became the servants of righteousness. Rom. viii. 2; vi. 18. Paul tells the Galatians they had been called unto liberty. Gal. v. 13. This must be the office work of the law of liberty, is it not? Then he tells the brethren of Thessalonica that God hath from the beginning chosen ye to salvation through sanctification of the Spirit, and belief of the truth. Whereunto he called you by our gospel to the obtaining of the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ. 2 Thess. ii. 14. Brethren, if we have been called unto liberty, here is our law of liberty fully set forth in the gospel, and identified by inspired men. Are you satisfied with it, or do you long to go back into Egyptian bondage like Israel of old? Or like others later on, long to wear that old yoke of bondage, which Peter says we nor our fathers were able to bear. But says one, if we are not able to bear the law and the Sabbath that God gave, then God's wisdom is impeached and called in question. This you must settle with Peter, my brother, as he stands between us and your charge. And if you try to whittle this old yoke down to bare circumcision, it wont help your case any, and you have had all your trouble for nothing, as God was the author of circumcision, and it was one requirement in his law. And to say that bare circumcision was that yoke, that we could not endure, when it only touched half the people, and that slightly compared with that rigid code of restrictions thrown around the Sabbath by its author, and that affected all the people, is to say the least talking at random, or "through your hat," like Joseph Smith the prophet did. And to contend so strenuously for the law, when it did not promise eternal life, and could not give it. And its author and his legal agents did not hold it up to the people as the terms of salvation regulating the affections of the heart, as the gospel is held up and proclaimed to all mankind for their salvation, is to say the least zeal without knowledge, which is not good. But I find I have like others, preached from my text, so I will now invite you back to our starting point and try it again—try to preach to it. Law of liberty, what is it? This we have already claimed to be identical with the gospel system of salvation. Now let us take a moment's look at the context. Let us begin at the 18th verse of chapter 1, and work up to our text. Of his own will begat he us with the Word of truth, that we should be a kind of first fruits of his creatures. How were they begotten? With the Word of truth, What is that? Paul you tell us. For in Christ Jesus I have begotten you through the gospel. 1 Cor. iv. 15. Now let Peter tell what, and how it is done, "Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth, through the Spirit, unto unfeigned love of the brethren, see that you love one another with a pure heart fervently; being born (or begotten) again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the Word of God, which liveth and abideth for ever. But the Word of the Lord endureth forever." And this is the Word which by the gospel is preached unto you. Now we have the Word of truth, the gospel, the Word of the Lord, the Word of God as the incorruptible seed by which they were begotten. And this is in line with the Master's preaching, and the commission to his disciples, and what he told them. And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations. Then it looks very much to me like the gospel of the kingdom will be the rule by which you and I, and all nations who live in this age at least, will be judged. And this seems to be Paul's idea, when he says, "In the day when God shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ according to my gospel. Rom. ii. 16. So to preach from, or to the text, the law of liberty and the gospel is the same. Or there must be more than one way, code, or road, to salvation. A very safe way for us to settle this question would be to go and learn what the Master told his preachers to go and preach as the terms of salvation, and then go and learn what they did preach, and require men and women to believe and to be saved, and then go and do likewise. It seems that James is writing to the twelve tribes scattered abroad, to those who were blinded by that old veil, and he is seeking to correct their wrong ideas by showing them a better way, as it is plain to be seen they were in the fog, hence his correction and reproof. Begin at verse one of second chapter and read attentively, and take in the situation, and I trust you will be made to see this law of liberty in a different light. Those addressed were evidently badly bewitched and befuddled over the law question like those foolish Galatians were, and James like Paul was trying to dig them out by holding up the gospel, the law of liberty, the royal law to them as God's plan of salvation. The decalogue says not a word about loving your neighbor as yourself, neither does it condemn partiality, or showing respect to persons, but the law did do all of this, and so does James. Look this up please. James is trying to open their eyes to their blind inconsistency. No doubt but they then as now, thought they were keeping the whole law, while in fact they were breaking it all to smash. See Rom. ii. 23. They evidently knew very little about the gospel, God's plan of salvation, that old veil was in their way. There is abundance of love in this royal law of liberty, this gospel system of Christ that makes us free, and the best thing we can do brethren is to stand fast in it. And here was abundance of sin and death in the world long before the decalogue was thundered from Sinai. And those two precepts in verse 11 of chapter 2 no more locates this law of liberty than does those two in verses 8 and 9.

Kindly submitted to the brotherhood, and to all others who have an interest in this question.

Cleansing of the Sanctuary. Dan. viii. 14.

It is claimed by the Ellen White Adventists that the "sanctuary" here mentioned is in heaven, and that the time introduced by the adverb "then" was in 1844. It is further claimed that at that time Jesus entered the holiest of all in heaven, and that he then began the work of cleansing the sanctuary. It is not my purpose in this article to deal with the time element of this question. I only wish to call the attention of the readers to the fact that grave consequences are involved in the view that Jesus did not enter the holiest of all in heaven until the year 1844. If this contention is true, the Church had no Intercessor "in the presence of God" until that time. But what are the facts? "We have such an high priest, who is set on the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens, a minister of the sanctuary (margin, "holy things,") and of the true tabernacle, which the Lord pitched, and not man." Heb. viii. 1, 2. The "high priest" here mentioned is Jesus, as is evident from other passages in Hebrews. See v. 1; ix. 11. The place which he entered is "heaven itself," where he appears "in the presence of God for us." Heb. ix. 24. Nor does he defer this important matter of officiating in the capacity of high priest until 1844, but he appeared NOW (as early as A. D. 64) in God's presence for us. Again, take the language of Heb. vi. 19, 20, where the writer speaks of the "hope" which "we have as an anchor of the soul both sure and steadfast, which entereth into that within the vail; whither the forerunner is for us entered, even Jesus, made an high priest forever after the order of Melchizedek." "Within the vail," according to Ex. xxvi. 33, is where "the ark of the testimony" was placed in the typical sanctuary; and that was "the most holy." Into the antitypical sanctuary (heaven itself, Heb. ix. 24,) Jesus the antitypical high priest, not will enter, but "IS ENTERED." If Jesus entered the sanctuary in heaven in 1844, he has been there now 59 years. How much longer will this cleansing last? If Adventists are able to tell the exact date when this work was begun,—the tenth day of the seventh month, 1844—why do they not tell us when this work will be finished? They do not know? Neither do they know that there was a sanctuary in heaven that needed cleansing in 1844 or at any other time. It was merely conjectural; the whole theory rests upon a long line of inferences.

But more than this: If, as Adventists contend, the cleansing of the sanctuary began in 1844, Christ then changed his position, probation ended, and "the door of mercy was shut." Henceforth no sinners need apply for mercy. Says Ellen White: "After the passing of the time of expectation, in 1844, Adventists still believed the Savior's coming to be very near: they held that.....the work of Christ as man's intercessor before God had ceased."—Great Controversy, p. 268. Wm. Miller, in 1845, wrote: "I have not seen a genuine conversion since." The strange thing about it all is that nearly the whole structure of Seventh Day Adventism was built up since the time when "probation ended and the door of mercy was shut." What special dispensation was made for the benefit of this movement, we are left to conjecture.

That they were mistaken in saying that the Lord would come to the earth in 1844, is an acknowledged fact; they admit that they mistook the event that was to transpire, though they contend they were right about the date. Since a mistake was made as to the event, what was to hinder them from making another equally as great with reference to the time? Nothing, when once they had launched upon the sea of speculation. What Scripture statement have we that Christ would enter the holiest in heaven in 1844 to cleanse it? We have to take their word for it. They say the 2,300 days (literally, "evenings and mornings") mean so many years; that those began B. C. 456 and terminated in A. D. 1844. But who authorized this claim? Surely no one who had anything to do with the composition of the Bible. And this piece of speculation is regarded as one of the very foundation stones of Seventh Day Adventism. Let none of the household of faith be disturbed by speculations which ignore and set aside some of the plainest truths set forth in the Word of God.

"We have an high priest," was true in the days of the apostles (Heb. iv. 14; viii. 1), and is no more true today. In the typical sanctuary the high priest officiated once in the year in the holiest of all. Jesus our high priest was not idle from his ascension until 1844, but having obtained "a ministry" (Heb. viii. 6), he fulfils this ministry by "appearing in the presence of God for us." Heb. ix. 24. The high priest after the Aaronic order was a type of Christ, the high priest after the order of Melchizedek. The sacrifices then made were but types and shadows of the sacrifice made by Jesus. The sanctuary was a type of the true tabernacle. The vail which separated between the holy and the holiest of all, typified the flesh of Jesus. He passed "through the vail, that is to say, his flesh." Heb. x. 20. When he passed through and beyond the flesh, he entered into "the presence of God," as the typical high priest approached the mercy seat when he went "within the vail." No system or theory must be constructed that will contradict these plain Scriptural statements.

Seventh Day Adventism has no high priest in the presence of God from the ascension of Christ up to 1844, and at that date the door of mercy is shut, "our work in warning sinners and trying to awake a formal church" is done, "God in his providence has shut the door; we can only stir one another up to be patient." So wrote Wm. Miller in Advent Herald, Dec. 11, 1844. This theory practically nullifies the entire work of Christ during the present dispensation.

A moment's reflection on Dan. viii. 14 ought to convince any one of the fallacy of the contention that a sanctuary was to be cleansed in heaven. If a sanctuary was to be cleansed, justified, made right, or reconsecrated, it was the same that had been defiled, desecrated, or destroyed. If this was in heaven, then the defilement or desecration had taken place there. If a sanctuary on earth had been trodden down, then none in heaven needed cleansing. The word sanctuary is found three times in this chapter, viz. in verses 11, 13 and 14. At verse 11, "the place of his (the "prince's") sanctuary was cast down." At verse 13 both the sanctuary and the host are said to be given to be trodden under foot, and at verse 14 it is stated that the vision concerning the taking away of the daily sacrifice and the treading down of the sanctuary was to continue "unto 2,300 days (literally, "evening and morning"); then shall the sanctuary be cleansed." Now, I submit in all candor, whether this language gives any justification to the theory that a literal sanctuary, located in "the pleasant land" (v. 9), was to be "trodden under foot," and a figurative or spiritual one to be cleansed. Let Daniel and the holy one speak for themselves, and all is plain. It is the lifeless human theories that obscure the Word of God.

Wisdom of Seirach.

CHAPTER 5.

1. Do not hold on to thine own utilities, and do not say, they are enough for me.

2. Do not follow out with thy soul and strength to go thy way in the inordinate desires of thy heart.

3. Do not say, Who will influence me? For the requiring Lord will require of thee.

4. Do not say, I have been sinning, and what hath occurred to me? For the Lord is long-suffering.

5. Do not become without fear concerning expiation—to add sin to sins.

6. And do not say, His pity is much, the multitude of my sins will be expiate; for mercy and wrath are from him; and upon obdurate sinners will his anger rest down.

7. Do not postpone turning unto the Lord, and do not put it off from day to day; for suddenly will the Lord's wrath come out, and in an appointed time of requital will it utterly destroy.

8. Do not lay hold upon unjust utilities; for thou wilt be profited in no respect in a day of conclusion.

9. Do not winnow with every wind, and do not go thy way by every path. In this wise doth the obdurate-sinner, the double-tongued.

10. Be firm in thy understanding and let thy word be one.

11. Become swift to hear and utter an assurance with forbearance.

12. If understanding be thine answer thy neighbor, if not let thy hand be upon thy mouth.

13. There is glory and dishonor in talk, and a man's tongue is his snaring.

14. Do not be called a whisperer, and do not lie in wait with thy tongue; for there is shame for the thief and bad censure for a double-tongue. In a great thing and a little thing be not ignorant.

COMMENT.

The aphorisms of this chapter are just as pertinent and applicable today as when first formulated and published for the instruction and admonition of God's chosen people Israel—and as the reader will see pertain to our personal and individual relation to God and our brother man—to God first and our neighbor next, which is the alphabet of the gospel now.

CHAPTER 6.

1. Do not become an enemy instead of a friend; for a bad name will inherit shame and reproach; in this wise is the obdurate-sinner and the double-tongued.

2. Do not exalt thyself in thy soul's counsel, that thy soul may not be snatched away like a bull.

3. Devour thy foliage and thou will destroy thy fruits, and thou wilt let thyself go like a dried up tree.

4. A wicked soul will destroy the one who hath acquired it, and make him a subject of mirth for his enemies.

5. A sweet throat will multiply one's friends and a tongue that talketh good things will promote courteous ways.

6. Let those who promote thy peace stand as many, but thy fellow-counsellors as one of a thousand.

7. If thou acquire a friend, acquire him in trial and do not quickly put faith in him.

8. For there is a friend in his season, and he will not abide in the day of thy tribulation.

9. And there is a friend who changeth himself into an enemy, and he will show fight to thy reproach.

10. And there is a friend who is a partner (or common-partaker) of tables, and he will not abide in a day of thy tribulation.

11. And in thy good things he will be as thou art, and he will be bold to address the members of thy household.

12. If though thou be brought low, he will be against thee and he will hide himself away from thy face.

13. Separate thyself from thine enemies, and give heed to thy friends.

14. A faithful friend is a controling shelter, and the one who findeth him hath found a treasure.

15. There is no exchange one should accept for a faithful friend, and there is no weighing of his nobility.

16. A faithful friend is a pharmacy of life and those who fear the Lord will find him.

17. The one who feareth the Lord maketh his friendship correct, because as he is even so is his neighbor.

18. Child, from thy youth give good heed to chastening, and until gray hairs wilt thou find wisdom.

19. As the one who ploweth and soweth hath he come unto it, and he hath waited for the good fruits thereof; for in her employment wilt thou toil wearily for a little while and quickly wilt thou eat of her generic products.

20. How very harsh she is to the unchastened, and the heartless one will not abide in her.

21. As a stone of approven value will she be strong against him, and he will not delay casting her away.

22. For wisdom is according to her name, and is not manifest to many.

23. Hear, O child, and accept my opinion and do not reject my fellow-counsel.

24. And bring thy feet into her fetters and thy neck into her collar.

25. Submit thy shoulder and carry her, and do not thrust away her bonds.

26. Come unto her with all thy soul and with all thy ability watch to keep her ways along with her.

27. Trace her out and seek her and she will have become known unto thee, and when thou hast become controlled from within do not let her go.

28. For in last experiences thou wilt find her rest, and she will turn unto thee with rejoicing.

29. And thy fetters will become a shelter of strength and her collars a flowing robe of glory.

30. For there is a golden cosmos upon her and her bonds are spun hyacinth.

31. With a flowing robe of glory will she clothe herself and with a garland of gladness wilt thou crown thyself.

32. If thou wilt, O child, thou mayest be instructed (chastened) and if thou givest thy soul thou wilt be an all-worker.

33. If thou lovest to listen, thou will be accepted, and if thou inclinest thine ear thou wilt be wise.

34. In a multitude of elders stand, and is there some wise man, cleave to him.

35. Be willing to listen to any divine discourse, and parables for understanding do not allow to escape thee.

36. If thou knowest a man of understanding rise early to go unto him, and let thy foot wear out the steps to his doors.

37. Think through the statutes of the Lord and meditate on his commandments constantly. He will stay up thy heart, and thy longing desire for wisdom will have been granted thee.

COMMENT.

Besides the ethical instruction that runs through the first part of this 6th chapter, we have in the latter part of it a personification of "the wisdom that is from above" as John calls it, and a general treatment of the subject that reminds us of Solomon more than of any of the foregoing prophetic writers in trope as well as style and subject-matter. Read and compare for yourselves.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

If each one would look up his account, and in case he is owing on his subscription, will at once renew, we will esteem the favor highly. A number seem to have forgotten us.

THE English Lutheran synod of the Northwest was held at LaCrosse, Wis. on June 17. At this meeting George H. Irabert, a minister from Minneapolis, spoke of the growth of worldliness in the churches of the land, and predicted the gradual downfall of Christianity. He urged his fellow ministers to get out in the fields and work with more vigor to stem the tide, for the church is tottering. Will He find faith—the faith—when He comes?

A COPY of The Berean comes to our table. It is a small monthly published by the National Berean Association of Cleveland, Ohio. It object is to benefit young peoples societies, aid in Sunday School work, and advertise meetings at the Church of the Blessed Hope, Cleveland. It can be had for 50 cents a year. Bro. George Neill is the Editor. Such a magazine ought to be a great help in the work of this society, and we trust it will meet with support sufficient to make it a grand success.

Notes By the Way.

On Friday, June 12th, I took the train on the Nickel Plate R. R. for Argos, Indiana, to attend the Conference at the Old Antioch Church. I was met at the depot by Sister Boggs Jr. Bro. William Railsback was also on hand with his carriage and conveyed us to the home of Brother and Sister Boggs Sr., where I remained during the sessions of the Conference.

On Saturday I was conveyed to the Old Antioch Church where the Conference was to convene.

That Old Church is a place of sacred memories. It was built in 1864, and for thirty-nine years in succession the [illegible] Conference has met in that church building, and has been hallowed by events now of sacred memory. I attended one of the conferences held in that church some thirty-five years ago, and had not seen it since.

As I beheld the building at a distance, my memory was carried backward thirty-five years, and event after event, came fresh to memory.

I remembered at that time riding from Plymouth, to Antioch, in a farm wagon, in company with others; among the company was that dear old child of God, Elder Chaplin. By the way we stopped at the home of Brother Cyrus Taber, to gather up some more of our company, and Bro. Chaplin thinking there might not be room for others, climbed out and walked, that others might be accommodated. Bro. Chaplin's whole life was one of self-sacrifice for the benefit of others. He always sought other peoples interest and comfort before his own. The sweet memories of the life and work of Elder Chaplin is inseparably connected with the meetings held in that old church building. There was heard from him the voice of instruction, exhortation, thanksgiving, prayer and praise, the sweet influences of which are felt today. These influences are always felt when God's pure love rules the heart. Its effect and influence is simply fathomless. No sounding line is deep enough to sound the depths of that ocean. His love fills all space, it is high as heaven, and as broad as the great expanse. Many others who used to assemble with the household of faith in that old church are now asleep in Jesus.

Asleep in Jesus! Blessed sleep!
From which none ever wake to weep.
A calm and undisturbed repose,
A safe retreat from all our foes.

I cannot call the names of but a few. There are Brethren Barnhill, Logan, Taber and many others. Among those I met thirty-five years ago, we have living today Brethren Thompson, Wagoner, Wince, Railsback, Roberts, etc.

While these old veterans pass away still younger men come to the front, and are heralding the same old faith, telling the same glad story within those walls which was told by their predecessors. Among these we may name the present President, Brother Zilmer, who is a credit to the cause.

On Saturday six members of the Chicago Church visited the conference and went home strengthened and built up. Nearly all who ever attend the Indiana Conference experience the same effect. It is a well organized Conference where business is promptly attended to.

The preaching of the Word was exceedingly clear, and kindly spoken, and sinners appealed to render obedience to the faith. The social meetings were a joy and appreciated by all.

I was greatly rejoiced to meet Bro. Ira Hall, from Randolph, Penn. I was with him some ten days on my Eastern trip, and held meetings in his neighborhood in the Ex-Methodist church. May God bless Bro. Hall.

I was also more than delighted to meet with Sister Eidemiller, from Piqua, Ohio. I was there nearly two weeks and held meetings in that neighborhood. Her husband did much toward making a success of those meetings, together with Brother and Sister Westfall. God bless these dear ones.

Another surprise was to meet with Sister Lehman, from Bush Creek, where I also held two weeks meetings and baptized five. It has been a great joy to me to travel and meet these dear ones in Christ.

On Sunday the attendance on the ground by outsiders was large. It was estimated that over five hundred carriages were on the ground. Some two thousand people were in attendance. The church could only accommodate some five hundred people, some listened at the windows on the outside. At the noon hours we had picnic dinners in the grove.

I have avoided giving details, so as not to trespass on the report of the Secretary. When that appears, you may expect a rich treat.

After July 4th I expect to go to Omro and Barron, Wisconsin, together with other places who may request my services in Wisconsin. I next go to Thessalon and other places in Canada. The first of September I expect to go to Delta, Ohio, and spend September in Indiana. Let those in Indiana who have not responded, do so as soon as convenient. That I may arrange my Indiana trip.

The first of October I expect to go to Ripley and other places in southern Illinois, then will commence my southern trip, visiting various places in Kansas, Missouri, Arkansas, Indian Territory, Oklahoma, Texas and Louisiana. Should there be others in these states who have not responded, please do as soon as convenient, so that I can arrange my trip to save travelling expenses.

W. H. WILSON.

Daniel's Vision of 2300 Years.

"Behold there stood before the river a ram.....I saw the ram pushing westward, and northward, and southward.....so that no beasts might stand before him." Dan. viii. 3, 4. "And now will I show thee the truth. Behold there shall stand up yet three kings in Persia.....the fourth.....shall stir up all against the realms of Grecia." Dan. xi. 2.

In these passages may be found the key to the starting point of the 2300 years. In the 11th and 12th chapters is contained the angel's explanation of the national events to transpire under the vision of 2300 years. The first information given is that it does not begin from the time that Daniel saw the vision at Shushan, which was 538 B. C., during the reign of Belshazzar at Babylon, and Cyrus of Persia; but that it would begin during the reign of the fourth last, king of Persia, which was really more than a hundred and fifty years from the time Daniel had the vision, and which king proved to be Artaxerxes II. whose reign commenced B. C. 405, there being but three more kings of Persia after him, namely Ochus Arsus and Darius III. or Darius Condomanus by whom the empire of Persia was lost to Grecce, the goat, under Alexander. From Daniel's time of seeing the vision, there were no less than a dozen or more successive kings of Persia. Consequently the angel's explanation that it would not commence until the fourth last king, history has definitely fixed that, that fourth king was Artaxerxes II., but as this king reigned for 46 years, namely from B. C. 405 to B. C. 359, when his son Ochus succeeds him, we must find out during what time of his reign these 2300 commenced. Having now shown by the explanation given by the angel to Daniel that the 2300 years vision begins during the reign of this king. We enquire, what events in his reign constitute the beginning; for the settlement of this part of the vision we take the key as given by Daniel. "I saw the ram pushing westward, and northward, and southward." Now this requires us to look for a time in Artaxerxes' reign, when the Medo-Persian Empire was on a war footing, and ready for war, or already pushing in any direction so that no other king might stand against him. Now the reign of Artaxerxes did not begin in that way. He ascended the throne when the empire was ready at peace. This was B. C. 405. About 401 the king's youngest brother one Cyrus, governor of Asia Minor rises up against the king with the aid of Xenophen and an army of 13000 Greeks, but is soon vanquished and the next year, 400 B. C. the Lacedemonians make war on Persia, but in a naval engagement are vanquished. Neither of these insignificant military events can constitute the requirements of the empire, pushing northward, westward, and southward, so that none might stand before him. The two little wars just mentioned were defensive. Cyrus rising up in insurrection, and the Lacedemonians making war on Persia. The language in the prophecy shows that it is of an offensive or aggressive attitude that we must find the empire in. From this time—400 on to 396 B. C. there were no national complications, wars or conquests, but in 396 the Persians, with an army of 300,000 and 300 ships invade Cyprus, and obtain a great victory. The king fleeing to Salamine whither the Persians pursue and besiege him by land and sea where he yields to very hard terms." The next year 395, Conn, the admiral of the Persian fleet revolts, the Egyptians and Lacedemonians joining him, and were making vast preparations for war, but evidently finding the power of Persia too great, they dropped the intended war. The next year 394 B. C. the king puts himself at the head of 300,000 foot and 20,000 horsemen, and moves against the Cadusians, between the Caspian and Exion seas, and they were brought to submit to Persian rule. With the exception of the year 391 when the Persians made a great demonstration on Egypt, and finding it too well fortified abandoned the campaign, there is nothing further of special national events in the reign of Artaxerxes. We cannot see then where else than in the years 396, 5, 4 B. C. could be consistently considered the beginning of the 2300, and as the 12th chapter Daniel, is simply the concluding part of the interpretation or explanation of the vision it is quite probable that "the end of the days" in which Daniel should stand in his lot refers entirely to the ending of the 2300, instead of the 1335 as generally understood. This is however not saying that they may not end together which is quite likely. Definite time is given to these prophecies. It is there to be understood. And such who do not "set their heart and mind to understand the matter, and search it out by books," (history) will not likely get the blessing of the light there is in it, much less the prepared attitude we are to be in to meet the Lord at his coming. All other prophecies to which no definite time periods were given, but noted as the events to precede his coming are fulfilling in these times. We have had within two years earthquakes in every part of the earth, as Jesus said there would be. And who would say that we will not soon have fearful sights and great signs from heaven, which the same prophecy indicates to succeed the earthquakes. We had a city of 30,000 or more people destroyed, just as Sodom was, and in which from all accounts, there was probably not a righteous man in it. Let us so live and so teach the truth that when Jesus comes we shall not only be glad to meet him; but that no accusation may stand against his servants for having administered meat to the flock, that was not the meat in due season. Let each of us try to do our duty, not for the approval of man but as serving the Master. No one looking for the coming of Jesus and to whom it is committed to administer the food to the flock, can afford to be indifferent as to what constitutes "meat in due season." If he thinks preaching the fundamental doctrines of faith, which are well understood, having been preached and accepted for centuries, is the meat due at this season, we think he is erring. Let us always keep in mind the admonition of Peter, "We have also a more sure word of prophecy, whereunto ye do well that ye take heed as unto a light that shineth in a dark place until the day dawn, and the day star arise in your hearts, to illumine your whole being. It appears to us as though the people who are looking for the soon coming of the King care about as little to know the definite time of that coming as did the Jews of the time of his first advent. The learned "wise men" of Persia knew more about the Jewish prophecies of Daniel pertaining to the definite time, than what the Jews did. They were evidently true believers in Daniel's God, or they would not have obeyed God's warning not to return to Herod. They believed also in the coming King of the Jews—they knew he was from above, for they did not come to pay their compliments to the new born King, but said, where is he? We have come to worship him. The whole account as given by Matthew bears the internal evidence that they were true believers, and that they must have been telling Herod that the new born King they were looking for was the Christ. We regard the "star" account as purely incidental or as contributing to the event in accordance with the Eastern or Persian calculations in astronomy or astrology, and it presumably was Halley's Comet, which in its orbit appeared nearest to the earth in B. C. 10, about four years before the actual birth of Christ—if latest calculations of his birth B. C. 6 is correct. The same is now again a very strange coincidence, namely, that the same Halley's Comet will be again a visitor in 1911, being in that year, at its nearest point to the earth about four years before the expiration of the 2300 years as it looks to us. While this may have been of value and interest to the sages or believers of Persia at the first advent, and may possibly be at his second coming, yet it was not given to the Jews as a matter of revelation bearing on his first advent, nor to the Christian believers concerning his second advent. What we need is the truth. Would that we had some ray of light on the prophetic time by which we could exclaim "the time is fulfilled; the kingdom of heaven is at hand."

Orders of the Resurrection.

Paul in his letter to the Corinthians tells us that "There is one glory of the sun, and another glory of the moon, and another glory of the stars; one star differeth from another star in glory.....so also is the resurrection of the dead." 1 Cor. xv. 41, 42.

All, or nearly all, of the orthodox churches believe and teach that there are but the two classes, good and bad, saint and sinner, and that they all have an immortal soul that during the Adamic life occupies the body and that what is called death, is only a separation, and the soul, the person proper, flies away, either to enjoy happiness, if good, or eternal torment if bad, a doctrine handed down by tradition from ancient paganism, and nowhere found in the Bible, or taught by honest Bible students; and as the Bible so plainly points out man's future destiny, and the different degrees of glory or happiness of the saved, let us examine a few passages of Scripture directly to the point.

Paul tells us that there are different grades in glory. My understanding is that the sun is used to represent the highest grade. "Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of the Father." Matt. xiii. 43.

When shall the righteous shine forth as the sun? Answer. At the end of the age, or after the disposing of the stars, the wicked, after the saints take the kingdom. Dan. vii. 22. "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame and am set down with my Father in his throne." Rev. iii. 21. "And I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto me.....that ye may eat and drink at my table in my kingdom; and sit on thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel." Luke xxii. 29, 30.

When will this blessed privilege take place? "When the Son of Man shall come in his glory and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit on the throne of his glory." Matt. xxv. 31.

Who are the holy angels that come with him? Answer. His brethren who have professed him in the regeneration, "But they which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry nor are given in marriage; neither can they die any more; for they are equal unto the angels, and are the children of God being the children of the resurrection." Luke xx. 32, 36. Again, "Beloved now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that when he shall appear we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is." 1 John iii. 2. Again, "Do ye not know that the saints shall judge the world, and if the world shall be judged by you, are you unworthy to judge the smallest matter." 1 Cor. vi. 2.

We see by these passages, as well as by other passages too numerous to quote, that there is to be an elect class who are to act as his cabinet in his kingdom. I say elect but not elected individually, but as a class or people for his name, a few from all the different ages, nations and tribes. See Rev. v. 8, 10.

"Who are to have a part in the first resurrection, whose sins have gone to judgment before them." 1 Tim. v. 24.

Who sit as judges in the great tribunal? Who can appear and vanish like the wind? Who are his brethren in fact, being born of the spirit? St. John iii 1–8; Luke xxiv. 13–45.

As to the other grades the Scriptures are not so plain, or direct, yet these are enough to prove that there are various grades, and these grades are determined by their talents and the use they have made of the talent given them; some to rule over ten cities, some over five cities, to be judged with their innocence and disposition of heart. See Matt. xxv. 40; Luke ii. 41; Matt. x. 40-42.

There are some events to take place that are not for us to know the particulars of. This is plainly taught by Christ in answering some questions put by the apostles: he had taught that the kingdom would soon appear, but when he was asked to restore the kingdom to Israel at that time, he told them that that time was not for them to know. Acts i. 6. They had conceived by his teachings that there were but few to be saved; but when the question was put direct he gave an indirect answer. Luke xiii. 23. Not quite as sharp as he did to Peter when he got too inquisitive. St John xxi. 22.

Dear Restitution:

We send a little notice should you have place for it.

A little group of the household of faith living at Winter, Woods Co., Okla., were directly in the track of a cyclone, that swept through that vicinity. Buildings, trees and stock were devastated with the twisting monster.

Oh! how grateful we feel that life—that priceless treasure was not taken.

Bro. Eugene Randolph's house was not taken. Seemingly, the cloud raised at that point. How thankful we were, for there we found shelter.

Sister Hannah Barker found refuge in her underground cave. There she stood and saw her home rise in the air. All she had was gone, for only a few muddy, tattered scraps were rescued to tell the tale.

What a blessing that she and my mother's dear lives were spared. How lovingly and faithfully they stood at the post of duty.

Grandma Randolph and myself were severely injured. Our mangled forms seemingly pinioned on the mercy of those loving hands.

Surely, such shadows falling upon our path will impress upon the human family the uncertainty of temporal blessings, and that here is no abiding place. How helpless and powerless is human power though there is a tendancy at times for man to become vain in imagination of his achievements and intellectual powers. Surely and impressively is the source of life to all living things. The great self-existent "He giveth to all life, and breath and all things." "The unsearchable riches of Christ" which are contained in the gospel and quickens men who are dead in trespasses and sins, when it is received and cherished. If children then heirs of the gospel and joint heirs with Christ.

May we shape our lives that we may rejoice that our redemption draweth nigh. May we be alert to the prophecies of today.

MARRIED.

On Sunday, June 14, 1903, were united in the holy bonds of matrimony, Mr. Fernando W. Allen of Baird, Douglas Co., and Miss Ida May Corbaley of Wenatchee, Wash., Elder W. Perrine, officiating.

The ceremony took place in Wenatchee, Wash., and was a quiet affair, being witnessed by only a few of their friends.

The bride was formerly of Waterville, and had endeared herself to a large circle of friends by her modest, retiring, lady-like ways, and the groom is to be congratulated in getting one whom we believe will make him a helpmeet indeed.

We certainly wish them a long, happy and prosperous life.

Both are members of the Church of God, and hope that they may long walk together, adorning their profession.

A Drunkard's Body after Death.

A post-mortem examination of nearly seventy persons who had died from excessive use of ardent spirits showed the following facts:

1. Congestion of the scalp and of the membrane of the brain, with much serous (watery) effusion. The substance of the brain white and firm, as if it had lain in alcohol for one or two hours.

2. The lungs not always, but frequently congested or inflamed.

3. The heart flabby, enlarged, dilated and loaded with fat outside: the blood in it of a cherry red color and with no tendency to coagulate.

4. The stomach perfectly white and thickened in some cases; in others having patches of chronic inflammation. In the worst cases a large portion of the stomach covered with the specious of inflammation which causes the blood to be poured from the minute vians.

5. The liver enlarged -in old drunkards weighing from six to twelve pounds.

6. The omentum—a sort of apron which immediately covers the abdomen in front—loaded with a greasy slushy fat.

7. The kidneys enlarged, flabby and infiltrated in numerous spots with whitish matter.

8. The small intestines filled with bile, and coated with a tenacious mucus.

9. The blood in a very fluid condition, having but little fibrine, but much albumen and fat.

10. The whole body, except the brain, decomposing very rapidly.

Is it any wonder that a drunkard needs medical treatment?

Poetry.

In Life—Not Death.

Sometimes we think
When hard words fall upon the waiting ear
That were that friend now flung, cold and dead,
How different the tones that we should hear,
How kind the things that would of him be said;
For most hearts shrink
From speaking harshly of the silent dead.

In life, not death,
Hearts need fond words to help them on their way;
Need tender thoughts and gentle sympathy,
Caresses, pleasant looks to cheer each passing day.
Then hoard them not until they useless be;
In life, not death,
Speak kindly. Living hearts need sympathy.

O do not wait
Till death shall press the weary eyelids down
To yield forbearance! Let it daily fall!
With it a golden calmness comes this life to crown;
Joy springs from charity. Friends, one and all,
Before too late
O'er faults and frailties let this mantle fall.

What worth can be
Love's gentlest glances, or its loudest tone,
The sweetest fancies loving lips can say
When this form silent lies, cold and alone
Beneath some grass-grown knoll not far away?
Ah, give to me
Love's prompt deliverance while in life I stay.

Conference Report.

As per announcement the quarterly Conference of the Church of God in Indiana, met at Antioch, Saturday at 10:00 a. m. June 13. The meeting was opened by singing, reading and prayer, after which Bro. Zilmer, in a few well chosen words told of the purpose and object of the meeting. In part he said, "Although no meetings are held regularly at this place, the June Meeting is always looked forward to as a time of rejoicing and having our faith strengthened.

At 10:45 Brother Hatch very ably spoke on the subject of "How an alien can become a child of God." In a very clear way he brought out the idea that we would be true children of God when we are brought forth at the resurrection to eternal life.

At 11:15, Brother Wince spoke on "Sanctification through the truth." He spoke of the truth being able to set Christians aside for a good work, and said every Christian ought to have as good a character as possible.

At 1:30 business meeting opened by singing, reading and prayer, with Bro. Zilmer in the chair. Roll of the churches showed the following represented by delegates: Argos, Antioch, Bracken, Burr Oak, Plymouth, South Bend and Scircleville. Minutes of last meeting read and approved.

Evangelist reported as follows:

Brethren of the Board:

You no doubt desire a brief report from me at this time, of work done by myself as Evangelist. Besides meetings which I held for the churches I supply regularly, I have made visits to and held meetings of longer or shorter duration at North Salem, Inwood, Olio and Bracken. There were nine additions at the first named place, resulting from one weeks meeting. Other visits at these places and at other places by an evangelist would no doubt be productive of much good. There are some places in the state where it seem as if we had done all we can do, yet I feel loth to abandon any point where we have any considerable number of members. We ought to have a stronger force of men to send into the field. I have not been able, on account of circumstances, to visit as many of the churches as I should like to have done, nor was it possible to remain as long as ought to have been done at some of those visited. This is true especially of Bracken, where, on account of death in my family, I could spend only four days. A good interest seemed to be awakened, as was evident from the large attendance at what seemed to be an unfavorable time of the year. A further meeting ought to be held there as soon as is possible. I am hopeful of this place judging from the presence of a large number of young people. We shall continue faithful in the discharge of our duty until the Lord shall say "Well done."

Respectfully submitted,

A. H. ZILMER, Evangelist.

Ways and Means committee recommend that any knowing of places where work needs to be done please report same to E. K. Barnhill, Plymouth, Ind.

Adjourned to meet at next conference at call of President.

At 2:00, Bro. Wilson spoke on "the Coming Changes in Human Governments." This was illustrated by his charts, and was founded in part on Nebuchadnezzar's dream.

7:30, Social meeting led by Bro. R. C. Ballsbaugh. As the time was limited only a few of the older ones were permitted to speak.

At 8.00, Sermon by Bro. Zilmer, on "The Judgment." Lesson, part of John v. Leading thought, "The just shall not come into the judgment."

Sunday, June 14, at 10:00 a. m. a social meeting led by Bro. Cordill. At this meeting absent ones were spoken of. Sister Wince, and Bro. Muncrieff of Bear, Ark., each sent letters to be read. Bro. Hugh Ballsbaugh of St. Petersburg, Fla. in a letter to his brother spoke of his desire to be at the meeting. Bro. Halstead not being able to be present was remembered by Bro. Zilmer.

At 10:30, Sermon by Bro. Zilmer, subject "The Design of the Gospel." Lesson Acts xv. Leading thought—"How to take out a people for His name."

At 1:30, Sermon by Bro. Wilson, on "The End of the World," illustrated by charts.

At 2:30, Communion service, conducted by Bro. Wince.

At 7:30 Sermon by Bro. Wagoner, on "The Second Coming of Christ." Thirty-one passages of Scripture were read in which the coming of Christ was mentioned.

The meeting throughout was a decided success, and certainly one to be remembered. It was indeed good to be there, and we truly enjoyed a feast of good things. We trust that seed was sown that will find lodgement in good and honest hearts, and we believe that many were made stronger by being able to attend these meetings. At the close of Sunday morning meeting Mr. and Mrs. Baty came forward for baptism.

Visiting members from out of the state were Bro. and Sister Aslaksen, Bro. and Sister Elvey, Bros. Wilson, Fahrney and Alexander, of Chicago, Sister Lehman of West Milton, Ohio, Sister Eidemiller Piqua, O., and Bro. Hall, Randolph, Pa. Indiana was well represented, so many isolated ones were there, and indeed it made us rejoice to see them, for it made us know that they were still earnestly contending for the faith.

Conference Report.

The Annual Conference of the Church of God in Michigan convened as per announcement. Every officer except one was present. The plan laid down by the programme was followed as near as possible, all with few exceptions taking the parts assigned them. We did indeed have a grand, good and profitable meeting at Dutton, and all felt it was good for us to be there.

We were beautifully entertained by the dear ones at Dutton, and then, too, we had some royal speakers who spoke most eloquently and instructively on the Bible truths.

Ministers present were L. C. Chase, Raisin, Mich., A. H. Zilmer, Plymouth, Ind., O. R. L. Crozier, Grand Rapids, Mich., C. Winchester, Berrien Center, Mich., B. W. and M. A. Woodward, Dutton, Mich.

The business meeting occupied a part of the time for two days—at the first session on Friday the reports of the secretary, treasurer, and our state evangelists were read and approved. At the business session on Saturday, 9:30 a. m., the following were elected as officers for the ensuing year:

President, R. Lake, West Millbrook, Mich.

1st Vice President, Edwin Coats, Coats Grove, Mich.

2nd Vice President, H. C. Hammond, Dutton, Mich.

Secretary, Emma Jackman, Grand Rapids, Mich.

Treasurer, A. R. Richardson, Hastings, Mich. R. F. D. No. 8.

State Evangelists, B. W. and M. A. Woodward.

EVANGELIST'S REPORT.

Days work done in the state 74, number of sermons 45, baptized 12. Whole number of sermons for the year 152, expenses $11.00.

TREASURER'S REPORT.

Money received during the year, $170.26. Paid to evangelist's $122.00. For Conference expenses $38.00, leaving in the State treasury $15.14.

The following collectors were appointed for the churches:

Dutton and Fisher, Sister Brewer.
Watson, Sister J. M. Wynne.
Caledonia, Sister Alice Tice.
Brady, Sister Worthington.
Millbrook, Brother R. Lake.
Raisin, Brother L. C. Chase.
Hastings and Coat's Grove, A. K. Richardson.

Baptism was administered to four candidates. Sister Ola Parkhurst, Nunica, Mich. Sister Otillia Beach, Grand Rapids, Mich. Sister Addie M. Tanner, Grand Rapids, Mich. Brother F. Wheeler, Millbrook, Mich. The latter, not being satisfied with his former baptism was again immersed. They were baptized by Brother Woodward, on Sunday, 4:30 p. m.

The Temperance Talk of M. A. Woodward was much enjoyed by all. Also the Temperance Recitation by Sister Lottie Barnum.

All the social and prayer meetings were much enjoyed, and as the brothers and sisters gave testimony that their faith was still strong in the Lord, it did some of the brethren a great deal of good.

Brother L. C. Chase and wife were with us on Thursday evening and all were glad of the pleasure of listening to him once more. He has a beautiful way of presenting the Bible truths in that plain and forcible manner so characteristic of him.

Another very great pleasure was in having Brother A. H. Zilmer, of Plymouth, Ind., with us. Some of us had never met him before; but it did not matter, for we soon became acquainted and found in him an active worker and helper in the cause of Christ.

The preaching was all good. Sunday, 10:30 a. m. Brother Zilmer spoke most eloquently and instructively on the subject "What must I do to be saved?" commanding diligent attention of the large audience, and capturing the admiration of all who heard him.

All were much pleased to hear Brother Woodward's able sermon on the "Signs of the Times."

Our Remembrance was partaken of at the close of the Sunday evening service.

Now, dear brothers and sisters, let us endeavor to carry out in our lives, each day, the many good things we have learned, and show to the world that we have left all for Christ.

Thus it is, that another good meeting has ended, it's record is made, it may be the last, as it will be for some of us, at least. So let us cherish the good in our hearts, that it may bring forth an hundred fold and in the end everlasting life.

Our next conference will be held at Millbrook. The church at that place extend a cordial and pressing invitation for those who can to come.

Your sister in the one hope.

EMMA JACKMAN, Sec'y.

We are the Lord's.

Dear brothers and sisters:

It is good to thus address you. I feel a quiet happiness in sitting here and thinking that God has made such a thing possible, when we cannot talk to each other face to face. We are the Lord's, and we want to talk when we meet together of the things that concern his honor and glory. We want to plan for better work, for wider usefulness. I will imagine I am with you, and that I am striving to impress these things upon your hearts, with an earnestness begotten of the thought that we are acting under his eye with not only our own interests for eternity at stake, but with also the lives of others to be required at our hands.

We are the Lord's—how shall we act? What feelings shall we cherish toward one another? How shall we deal with the unsaved? What use shall we make of the means that God has put into our hands? All these questions are to be kept constantly in mind with the thought that we are the Lord's. Being his, we are not under any circumstances to feel as the worldling feels; anger, wrath and malice are to be put away, and love, real true and faithful is to take their place. Without love we are but "sounding brass and a tinkling symbol." "Help us, oh Father! to be very tender toward one another." Better work can only be done by those who truly love the children of the one Father; wider usefulness can only be made possible to those who walk in unison and in love.

We are the Lord's, what a position to occupy! "The sheep of his pasture;" "ambassadors for Christ!" ought we not to be very careful how we act? The world measures us by our deeds. It will not believe in us, nor in God, if we talk one way and act in another. Our loved ones will not be converted by a hollow profession. If we are God's in deed and in truth, we will keep his commandments, nor will we refuse to do service for him. We will give thanks unto him, we will "call upon his name," we will "make known his deeds among the people," we will "sing unto him, sing praises unto him, talk of all his wondrous works, glory in his holy name."

We are all the Lord's, made so to be the saviors of men. The means that God has put into our hands must be used to carry the blessed news of a Redeemer to those who do not know and have not accepted him. Jacob vowed to give a tenth of all he had to God—not simply as an individual, but for his race. We belong to the Abrahamic race. And therefore Jacob's vow is obligatory upon us. No individual, no church can prosper that lives for self alone. God's blessing comes upon the person, the church that looks away to other lands and to other people. The gospel must go to all nations. It can only go as we send it. Let all lay aside something to give the Bible and its precious truths of life through Christ and of a coming King and kingdom to those "who sit in darkness and the shadow of death," not only in our own peaceful country, but in regions afar, not forgetting our brethren of the house of Judah, who are hungry now for the Word of God.

We are the Lord's, and his work must be done. There must be no shirking, no laziness here, Christ went away and left to each man his work, and of course to each woman as well. Let us be sure that we are doing it. He is coming soon. His advent is a matter of personal concern to us all. Naught is well to the unprepared. The midnight cry has not been stilled. It still rings out in more solemn tones than ever before. Some are awake and will keep awake til' the Master comes; acting, feeling, loving, doing as the Lord requires. Let us see to it that we keep awake. Death is laying many low, we know not who may be the next. God's judgments are fast falling upon the impenitent ones. Towns and cities are going down before the breath of his mouth, because the men thereof, like the men of Sodom and Gomorrah are wicked and sinners before the Lord exceedingly. Thousands perish by volcanic eruptions, thousands more by earthquakes, millions by famines and pestilence. The fig tree and all the trees—Judah and all his brother tribes of the house of Israel—are shooting forth, showing that the glad summer time of glory is nigh at hand.

The time denoted by the Savior as "that day," the day of signs, of distress of nations, of perplexity, of roaring sea and waves, of failing hearts, of shaking powers, of a world overcharged with surfeiting, drunkenness and cares of this life have come. It has crept upon us as a snare. All men save the watchers are caught in it as in a net.

It is in that day" become nigh, hour of it that the Savior comes. The seven times of chastisement for the house of Israel ran out in 1805. Judah's chastisement ends shortly. The seven times of Gentile dominion close with the present and the coming year. We are living in the most solemn time that the earth has ever known. It ought to be a time of serious, solemn prayer. "Behold the Bridegroom cometh!" There is no time for delay, only a few more can be caught in the net of salvation, and even these must be in haste, or they will be left out when the Lord comes.

Table Talk.

WISDOM. PROV. 8.

Wisdom is of two kinds, worldly and spiritual. The wisdom of this world is foolishness with God; for it is written, He taketh the wise in their own craftiness. Therefore, let no man glory in men, but let him glory in the Lord. Wisdom is better than rubies; and all the things that may be desired are not to be compared to it. Prov. viii. 11.

It cannot be gotten for gold, neither shall silver be weighed for the price thereof. It cannot be valued with the gold of Ophir, with the precious onyx or the sapphire. The gold and the crystal cannot equal it; and the exchange of it shall not be for jewels of fine gold.

Whence then cometh wisdom; and where is the place of understanding? seeing it is hid from the eyes of the living and kept close from the fowls of the air. Destruction and death say we have heard of the fame thereof with our ears. God understandeth the way thereof, and he knoweth the place thereof. And unto man he said, Behold the fear of the Lord, that is wisdom and to depart from evil is understanding.

Say unto wisdom, Thou art my sister, and call understanding thy kinswoman. The fear of the Lord is clean enduring forever. Wisdom is the principal thing; therefore get wisdom; and with all thy getting get understanding. Take fast hold of instruction; let her not go; keep her; for she is thy life. He that getteth wisdom loveth his own soul, he that keepeth understanding shall find good. A man shall be commended according to his wisdom. Happy is the man that findeth wisdom, and the man that getteth understanding.

LIZZIE MIDDLETON.

WITH THE WHOLE HEART.

"Blessed are they that keep his testimonies, and that seek him with the whole heart." Psalm cxix. 2.

Few if any, bring to the Lord a real, healthy heart, except in cases of extreme youth. It is usually impaired by despair, or vice, or other cause. However, we can use the heart, such as it is, whether small or great, light or heavy, sound or broken, entirely in his service.

The command is, "Give me thine heart," not a part of it. God will not have a divided affection. We cannot serve God and mammon. We must worship him with a singleness of heart if we desire to serve him acceptably. We are required to be watchful and to resist worldly pleasure.

There is not much whole heartedness in the world; yet we know that man is capable of acting, thinking and feeling with the whole heart. Some men throw all their energies into the mere eating of their dinner. Other men will read the newspaper with such absorbing interest that everything around them is quite shut out and forgotten. Other men will apply all their soul and strength and mind to the pursuit of business.

We know when a man is in earnest about anything by the ready activity concerning it. Is he building a house, his mind is on the plans, the arrangement of the windows and the doors and the rooms. Always, day and night engrossed with fittings and furnishings, and in his dreams the finished building appears in alternation with his crowd of cares.

And we, brethren and sisters, are we not builders? Is it not our work to build up ourselves on our most holy faith? Are we not called to "follow after the things which make for peace" and "to exhort one another daily?" Why? "Lest any of you be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin." To "look diligently lest any man fail of the grace of God, lest any root of bitterness springing up trouble us, and thereby many be defiled," "as well as every man to prove his own work" and "examine his own heart?" What zeal do we need for such service. Shall the worldling, the builder of wood and stone, bricks and morter, outstrip us in earnestness? They do it for a perishable inheritance, while we profess to be working for the kingdom of God and his glory.

David sought the Lord with the whole heart. Psalm cxix. 10. Also he says "Thy Word have I hid in my heart that I might not sin against thee" and the result was faith, hope and love.

In addition to treasuring up the Words of the Lord in the heart there was also earnestness of prayer, an indication of whole hearted seeking after the Lord. "I entreat thy favor with my whole heart. Be merciful to me according to thy Word." (Verse 58.) "I cried with my whole heart. Hear me, O Lord, I will keep thy statutes." (Verse 145.)

Brethren, who are of the Body of Christ, is anything less expected of us? shall we render a hearty service to God, our strength?

We learn in Acts ii. that the early disciples were of one heart and mind. They continued stedfastly in the apostles doctrine and fellowship and in breaking of bread and in prayers. They continued daily with one accord in the temple, and breaking bread from house to house did eat their meat with gladness and singleness of heart, praising God and having favor with all the people. Their old possessions they disposed of unhesitatingly, and parted the proceeds as each man had need. And, furthermore, the beloved apostles' instructions were we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren. Paul counted not his life dear unto himself, so that he might finish his course with joy and the ministry which he had received of the Lord Jesus.

Brothers and Sisters, let us throw all our energy into the work. The demand upon us is not grievous. Does anyone desire to be approved of God, and secure a place in his everlasting kingdom? If so, let him seek the Lord with his whole heart.

"In the Beginning."

The above words are the first three words of the book of John and of Genesis. They are a translation of the two Greek words "en arkee." From their similarity it is thought by many that they refer to a period of time when God created the heavens and the earth. A little reflection will show that John is not writing about the old creation. The "beginning" he speaks of is another beginning, even the new creation. Notice the following points relating to this beginning:

1. Matthew begins his book with "The generation of Jesus the Christ."

2. Mark in making his record starts thus, "The beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ."

3. Luke does not claim inspiration, but undertakes to give a correct and orderly account of the life and teachings of Jesus from the testimony of those who were eye witnesses "From the beginning." This beginning in the nature of things could not refer to the creation of heaven and earth, for those of whom he speaks were not present when heaven and earth were made.

4. John began his record at the same "beginning." It was at the time when eternal life was needed, and Jesus came to offer it, for "life and immortality were brought to light through the gospel." This is evident from how John introduces Jesus. In the 4th verse he says, "In him was life and the life was the light of men." He further explains thus in verse 5, "And the light shineth in darkness, and the darkness comprehended it not." Here reference is undoubtedly made to the Jewish people. Had they known that Jesus was their promised Messiah, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory.

Perhaps the strongest support to the idea that John refers to the old creation lies in the common translation of verse three. "All things were made by him and without him was not any thing made that was made." The word from which "made" is translated may with equal propriety be rendered "done," and is so rendered in the New Testament about 65 times, and once in this same chapter, verse 28, "These things were done in Bethabara." It would hardly do to say, "these things were created in Bethabara." Also 1 Cor. xiv. 40, "Let all things be done decently and in order." "Created" or its equivalent could not be used and express the thought. So we conclude that "done" would be a better equivalent for "ginomai" than "made" for then there is a harmony between John's "beginning," and the record of the other evangelists. "All things were done by him." Jesus was the Author and Finisher of the whole scheme. Nothing was done without him. To him belongs all the glory. He is the beginning of the new creation. He is the first born from the dead to the plane of the Spirit." The first born among many brethren.

The Diaglott rendering is, "was done." Every student of the Bible recognizes two creations. The old creation was a bringing into existence of material upon the plane of the natural. The new creation brings the old upon the plane of the spiritual. It is more properly a regeneration through Christ. The first was temporal; the second is eternal. The earthly Adam was the figure head of a second Adam, who would stand at the head of the spiritual and immortal. As Adam the first stood at the portal of the first Paradise to dress and keep it, so Adam the second stands upon the threshold of Paradise restored, as King and Ruler of the world to come. Each creation has its beginning, and John's gospel has to do with the new and not the old. God is distinctly stated to be the author of the old creation, as Christ is of the new, "for we are his workmanship created in Christ Jesus unto good works."

Popular Lectures by M. Joblin.

Brethren and Sisters, Have you loved ones who think sincerity will save them? Have you friends who think they worship acceptably while ignorant of God's promises? Have you acquaintances with false hopes of heaven, or who believe themselves immortal by nature, or who think their sins are forgiven, although they are ignorant of the Law of Pardon, or who have no use for a God who consigns sinners to Eternal Torment, and are ignorant of Jehovah's beneficent purpose to fill the earth with his glory and bestow Eternal Life upon believers of the Gospel, so they can enjoy it for ever? If so, send for Popular Lectures by Bro. Joblin, entitled:—"The Kingdom of God;" "Old Mother Earth to Be Born Again;" "Strangers from the Covenants of Promise;" "Vain Worship;" "No Immortality Out of Christ;" "Hope Begotten by the Resurrection of Christ;" "God's Love and Solicitude for Mankind;" and "What Shall We Do to be Saved?"

"The Restitution of all things Which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets."

VOLUME LII. Read X PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JULY 1, 1903. NUMBER 25.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Poetry.

Live for Something.

Live for something, have a purpose
And that purpose keep in view;
Drifting like a helpless vessel,
Thou can'st never to life be true.

Half the wrecks that strew life's ocean,
If some star had been their guide,
Might have long been sailing safely,
But they drifted with the tide.

—Robert Whitaker.

Christ in the Revelation. No. 9.

To the overcomer of the church of Thyatira, our Lord promises to give him "power over the nations;" and after mentioning how they shall be broken, he adds, "even as I received of my Father." How truthful in his exaltation, to reveal the source of power; his Father, the "ancient of days." See Daniel vii. 14, "And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations and languages, should serve him." "And I will give him the Morning Star." That is, I will give myself—for he is the Morning Star, as we learn from chapter xxii. 16, where he says, "I am the root and the offspring of David, the bright and morning star." This is the star out of Jacob .....The one that shall have dominion. Num. xxiv. 17-19.

The world has its stars, political and ecclesiastical, that shine in the heavens; but this star in brightness outshines them all; they all have their spots that dim their lustre, but this one is spotless. Stars shine in their order in proportion to their attainments in learning, or their heroic performances on the battle field. This star that leads the way to that day that has no night, excels all others in benefit to the human race. He descended into the grave [illegible] not having earned death, "the wages of sin" "it was impossible that he should be holden of it." Acts ii. 24. Therefore he burst open the gates of the grave, and led the way out of death into life eternal; and thereby opened up a way by which those hearing his voice, and being obedient to the requirements of the gospel may attain unto eternal life. Christ having fulfilled the condition upon which life in his case was predicated, divine justice demanded his resurrection, as it is written by the Spirit of him, who is the fountain of life, "Thou wilt not leave my soul in hell; neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption." Psa. xvi. 10. The chronology of the church of Thyatira would seem to synchronize with the dark ages, when the Papacy was in the ascendancy, and during the horrors of the crusades. The church of Sardis occupying the space between the church of Thyatira, and that of Philadelphia is easily located in that period prior to the time of the Reformation. The message is composed of only a few verses, six in number, and it would seem that the period is of but short duration, previous to the time of the Reformation. "And unto the angel of the church in Sardis write; these things saith he that hath the seven spirits of God, and the seven stars; I know thy works, that thou hast a name that thou livest and art dead," chap. iii. 1. The seven spirits of God, which Christ hath, I think is the seven attributes of the Deity, referred to in the song of the angels, the living creatures and the elders.....who say with a loud voice, "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honor, and glory, and blessing." chap. v. 12.

First, in the days of his flesh he had power over diseases, and even to raise the dead; but speaking of his future power he says, "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth." Matt. xxviii. 18. His power will be visible to the inhabitants of the earth when he comes to take possession of the throne of his father David; "when the mountains shall flow down at his presence."

Second, In riches there is none to compare with him, born heir to David's throne, and an account of righteousness appointed by his Father, "heir of all things".....and of whom he said, "Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever: a sceptre of righteousness is the sceptre of thy kingdom." Heb. i.

Third, He is the one of whom it is written, "In whom are hid all treasures of wisdom and knowledge." Col. ii. 3. And God has made him unto us, "Wisdom and righteousness. 1 Cor. i. 30.

Fourth, girded by the Spirit in its sevenfold, or completeness, he will appear, "glorious in his apparel, traveling in the greatness of his strength, speaking in righteousness, mighty to save; whose countenance is as the sun shining in his strength."

Fifth, Christ having honored his Father in all things, is now honored by the Father with a seat at his right hand, and will be with the Father the light of the New Jerusalem—and to him will come the first dominion which was lost to Adam by disobedience.

Sixth, Concerning the glory of Christ, we read in John vii. 39, "The Holy Spirit was not yet given; because that Jesus was not yet glorified." It is evident from this Scripture that before the giving of the Spirit on the day of Pentecost, that Christ according to the plan of God had to be first glorified. The glorification was symbolized by the stone with seven eyes, the engraving being performed by the Lord. Zech. iii. 9. And in Rev. v. 6, Christ is represented as a Lamb with "seven horns and seven eyes, which are the seven spirits of God sent forth into all the earth." For the possession of this glory he prayed, John xvii. 5, "And now, O Father, glorify thou me with thine own self, with the glory which I had with thee before the world was." But according to the interlinery of the Diaglott it is before "the world to be." If that reading be correct all is plain, Christ having reference to the glory which he had of the Father on the Mount of Transfiguration and now prays for it at the Father's right hand as promised in Psalm cx. 1. "The Lord said unto my Lord, Sit thou at my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool." Peter testifies to the glory of Christ on the mountain. "For he received from God the Father honor and glory, when there came such a voice from the excellent glory. This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased. And this voice which came from heaven we heard when we were with him in the holy mount." 2 Pet. i. 17-18. Peter wanted a continuance of the glory for he said, "Master, it is good for us to be here." Mark ix. 5.

Seventh, Christ is rich in blessing. In him as the seed of Abraham, "All the nations of the earth shall be blessed." And again it is written that, "All nations shall call him blessed." Who can comprehend the amount of blessing that will be the inheritance of Christ proceeding from the knowledge that he is the Redeemer of the hosts of the saved, who in turn will be engaged in blessing the nations of the earth?

The seven churches and God's written Word constitute the two witnesses of (chap. 11) so the inference that the death state of the church of Sardis synchonizes with the death of the witnesses (chap. xi. 7) just prior to the breaking out of the reformation (A. D. 1517.) Therefore the following testimony is to the point, "Milner, in his account of the opening of the sixteenth century, says, 'The sixteenth century opened with a prospect of all others the most gloomy in the eyes of every true Christian. Corruption both in doctrine and in practice had exceeded all bounds; and the general face of Europe, though the name of Christ was everywhere professed, presented nothing that was properly evangelical. The Waldenses were too feeble to molest the popedom; and the Hussites divided among themselves, and worn out by a long series of contentions were reduced to silence. Among both were found persons of undoubted godliness; but they appeared incapable of making effectual impressions on the kingdom of antichrist." History of the Church, p. 660, Ed. Edin. 1835. That the Church of God was to be found in this age among the Waldenses and the Hussites, there is no reasonable doubt: and this testimony by Milner agrees exactly with the condition of the church of Sardis—as given in the prophecy.

GOD'S LOVING KINDNESS.

When we look around us we see God's loving-kindness manifested in every way. In the beginning of creation he formed the earth and all living things; but it was minus a person to take charge of the things that had been created, so he created man out of the dust of the ground, to have dominion over all things, and placed him in the garden of Eden, to dress and to keep it, and as yet the man was alone, but his loving-kindness for him was such that he did not intend that he should be alone, so he formed a helpmeet for him; and gave him instructions in regard to what they should do. His love for them was so great that for their own good he gave them commandments and instructions in regard to what was for their own benefit, and he expected them to be lived up to.

He told them they must dress and keep the garden and they might eat of all the trees of the garden except of the tree of knowledge of good and evil, but that they must not touch that for he told them that in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die; but man is of an inquisitive nature and there was also a deceiver abroad then, as now, and he told them that they would not surely die, but would become wise, to know all things. That was the first act of disobedience, and now God in his loving kindness for them, lest they should take of the tree of life and live forever in their sinful state, drove them from the garden to prevent them from doing so. They had become subject to death, and unless there was some way provided they would die and [illegible] more. But God's loving [illegible] tended farther than that. We are told in Scripture that there is to be a resurrection both of the just and the unjust, and as the first Adam disobeyed God and brought death upon himself and posterity, and without a resurrection would be eternally lost, but God in his mercy did not intend it so to be, brought a Redeemer that would prove faithful to his commands, his only begotten Son who died upon the cross and became the first fruits of them that slept. And this loaf represents the broken body, and this wine the spilt blood of our Redeemer, who was so shamefully put to death upon the cross, for our redemption. As often as we partake of these emblems we do it in his remembrance, and if we keep his commandments and live a faithful life, shall become the second fruits.

The Psalmist in our text thought God's loving kindness was better than life, and therefore his lips should praise him. God is long suffering and of tender mercy, not willing that any should perish but that all should come to the knowledge of the truth, and be saved. But the Jews would not accept Christ as their King and crucified him, but God's mercy is so great that he did not cast them off forever, but will be brought back to their land in God's own appointed time, and his loving kindness is so great that he has given us Gentiles an opportunity to share in his glorious kingdom.

I think the 89th Psalm is one of the best. I will quote a few verses, and if you wish you can read the whole chapter at your leisure. "My mercy will I keep for him forevermore, and my covenants shall stand fast with him, his seed also will I make to endure forever, and his throne as the days of heaven. If his children forsake my law, and walk not in my judgments, if they break my statutes and keep not my commandments, then will I visit their transgressions with the rod and their iniquity with stripes, nevertheless my loving kindness will I not utterly take from him nor suffer my faithfulness to fail. My covenant will I not break nor alter the things that is gone out of my lips." The rest is equally as good.

WHO ARE TO BE THE SUBJECTS IN THE KINGDOM.

His dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed. Let us see who are to be the subjects in this glorious kingdom. In the first place, scattered Israel will be gathered together again. For in that day, saith the Lord, will I assemble her that is driven out, and her that I have afflicted. And I will make her that halted a remnant, and her that was cast off a strong nation. But fortunately for us, it will not be Israel alone. As a result of the failure of the Jews to receive Christ, the Lord has turned to the Gentiles, making it possible for us to have a part in the kingdom. For there is no difference between the Jew and the Greek: for the same Lord over all is rich unto all that call upon him. For whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved.

So much in general, but who are the individuals to be counted in that inheritance? Christ on the mount told his disciples, Blessed are the poor in spirit for theirs is the kingdom of heaven; and blessed are the meek for they shall inherit the earth. James tells us, Hath not God chosen the poor of this world, rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which he hath promised to them that love him? A new birth and regeneration are necessary; for except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God. This regenerative process is threefold; mental, moral and physical. The mental and moral parts of the process consist in believing and obeying the gospel; the kingdom; the physical part [illegible] at the resurrection. But two must be necessarily [illegible] order to attain the third and completing part of the process.

Having before us the beautiful picture of this glorious and eternal kingdom in the age to come, with the curse removed, and the tree of life yielding her fruit; how can we hesitate to obey, and live a Christian life, so that we may be accounted worthy to inherit that kingdom in which all who enter will enjoy an endless life of unspeakable glory and happiness.

E. T. RENNER.

WHO ARE TO BE THE RULERS IN THE KINGDOM?

That there shall be joint heirs and rulers with Christ (the King) is evident from both the Old and New Testament teachings. In Isa. xxii. 1 these rulers are called princes. "Behold a King shall reign in righteousness and princes shall rule in judgment." In the prophet Daniel's vision of God's kingdom he sees this great kingdom given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him. From the New Testament we learn who these saints or associate rulers are. "He that overcometh and keepeth my works unto the end, to him will I give power over the nations." Rev. ii. 26, "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne even as I also overcame and am set down with my Father in his throne." Rev. iii. 21. When Jesus was with his disciples Peter said unto him, "Behold we have forsaken all and followed thee; what shall we have therefore?" And Jesus said: "Verily I say unto you, That ye which have followed me, in the regeneration when the Son of Man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel." "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection; on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ and shall reign with him a thousand years." Rev. xx. 6.

ADA DREW.

Matt. xxv. 31-46, is an account of the judgment of the nations, which takes place when Christ comes with the saints or his Bride, to set up his kingdom and reign upon the throne of his father David. The nations are gathered before him, he separates them into two divisions, namely, the sheep and goat nations, they are rewarded and punished according to their treatment of a people, who must also be present, whom Christ calls his brethren. Who are these? In the Scriptures we find two classes that are called brethren of Jesus, those who "hear the Word of God and do it," (Luke viii. 21) and his kinsmen according to the flesh, "the Israelites." Rom. ix. 3-5. When this judgment of the nations takes place, the faithful ones are associate rulers with Christ, having been taken out from among the nations at the time of his thief-like coming for this purpose, from this we conclude they are not the ones for whom he is pleading. In the promises made of God to the Israelites, the time was to come when those that oppressed them should be punished, and when their captivity should end, he would gather all nations, plead their cause, and execute judgment for them, be their hope and strength, and this is to take place in the latter days, or day of the Lord. Read Joel iii.; Micah vii. 9, 10; Zeph. iii. 19, 20; Obad. 15; Zech. ii. 8, 9; Jer. xxx. 20. Other Scriptures might be referred to, but from these it seems clear, that it is at this time when Christ, the righteous Branch, shall execute judgment and righteousness in the land, that the nations are gathered and the punishment meted out to the oppressors of the Jews. In the Revised Version we have this rendering of verse 40, "And the King shall answer and say unto them, Verily, I say unto you, Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of these my brethren, even these least, ye did it unto me." As Christ uses the words, even these least, we would conclude these people were those who were recognized by all the nations, even at this judgment, as the most insignificant among them; thus their surprise that their treatment to them is accepted by Christ as though done to himself. Would they not see how this could be, if the saints were the ones he referred to, for as his Bride they are one with him, joint rulers and judges over the world? From searching the Scriptures on this question, I believe the Israelites are the ones whom Christ calls his brethren.

ANNA E. DREW.

What were the things concerning the kingdom of God that Paul preached about?

We often hear the people of the popular churches say, O, if you will only believe on the Lord Jesus Christ you will be saved. All you have to do is to give your heart to the Lord and you will be saved. But do they fully realize what it means to believe on him? Some of them cannot tell you what they believe, only that they believe on Jesus and belong to the church. The church and the minister are all in all with them. But is it so with us? To believe on Jesus means to believe what he taught about the kingdom of God. For a person cannot believe the things concerning the kingdom of God, without believing on Jesus also. The two are inseparable.

Paul says, "Let not sin therefore reign in your mortal body, that ye should obey the lusts thereof." This tells us that we have mortal bodies. If we are mortal now, when will we be immortal? "For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality. So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption and this mortal shall have put immortality then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory." When is death swallowed up in victory? Paul says, "In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall changed." This is when we receive immortality. But what do we find in the Word of God for us to do to attain unto it. Let us turn to what Paul said in the 6th of Romans, "Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ's were baptized into his death, that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life. For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection. Now if we be dead with Christ, we shall also live with him; knowing that Christ being raised from the dead, dieth no more; death hath no more dominion over him. For in that he died, he died unto sin once, but in that he liveth, he liveth unto God. But now being made free from sin, and become the servants of God, ye have your fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life. For the wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord."

In Rev. xx. 6, we read, "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection, on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ and shall reign with him a thousand years. Where are we to reign? "And hast made us unto our God, kings and priests, and we shall reign on the earth." Again in Rev. iii. 21 we read, "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me on my throne, even as I also overcame and am set down with my Father on his throne." Let us turn and read what Jesus said in Matt. xix. 28, "And Jesus said unto them, Verily I say unto you, that ye which have followed me, in the regeneration, when the Son of Man shall sit on the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel."

Dear brothers and sisters, we should follow out Paul's teaching. He through the love of God, continued faithfully preaching in places where he was persecuted. First, we must believe on Jesus, the Savior, the Anointed One. We must believe what he taught concerning his second coming, the resurrection, our reward as a position in the kingdom, the gift of eternal life, life only through Christ, immortality, and to reign on the earth with Christ a thousand years. Then the kingdom is to be ruled by our Father forever. Then the last enemy, death is to be destroyed. Believing this we are ready to be buried with Christ in baptism, and are ready to accept those things which Paul preached about.

Dear young readers, after you have come to a full knowledge of the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ, do not delay putting on Christ in baptism for we are told that we do not know the day nor the hour when Jesus will come.

Temple of Diana.

This magnificent building was considered one of the seven wonders of the world. It took more than 200 years to build it. The temple was 425 feet long, and 220 wide. It was supported and beautified by 127 columns, at the expense of as many kings. It was burned on the same night Alexander the Great was born. It was afterward rebuilt, but Nero plundered it of all its riches. The building still remains, and is used as a Turkish mosque. The heathen goddess Diana, to whom the temple was dedicated, was the object of general idolatrous worship. No wonder that when Paul went to Ephesus and exalted the one true God, as opposed to all other gods, the people got mad and cried out, "Great is Diana of the Ephesians." But even in that idolatrous city one of the best churches of the apostolic age was established.

"God has not given us our vast learning to solve all the problems or unfailing wisdom to direct all the wanderings of our brothers' lives; but he has given to every one of us the power to be spiritual, and by our spirituality to lift and enlarge and enlighten the lives we touch."

The Old Testament contains 39 books, and the New Testament, 27 books—66 in all. These books were written by about 40 different persons, during a space of about fifteen hundred years.

Plymouth Church Meeting.

On Sunday morning, June 28, 1903, at the appointed hour a large number of the Plymouth congregation were gathered at the Church, word having gone out that a sort of "jubilee" or "thanksgiving" meeting was to be held, because the Church debt was all paid. Bro. Tuttle had charge of the service, and told the early history of the organization in this locality, after which Bros. Barnhill, Thompson and Burch spoke briefly. A short history of the work of the Trustees since the start of the present building, having been prepared was then read, and resolutions were passed in accordance with the business in hand. The note and mortgage were then burned in the sight of all, and the "little church on the corner" is free from debt.

The following paper was read, and by unanimous vote was ordered to be printed in THE RESTITUTION.

"WHEREAS—In the early part of the year 1896, the Church of God, worshipping in the Hall at the corner of Michigan and Laporte streets, in Plymouth, Ind., being desirous of a more commodious place for worship, the subject of building a Church house was considered, and after due deliberation the work was undertaken and pushed forward until this house was completed. And

WHEREAS—The amount of money on hand at the time was insufficient to pay the full cost at once, we were compelled to have a "Church debt" for a time. (The property was worth much more than the indebtedness, so that there was no danger of loss.) This debt being an unpleasant thing, it was our earnest desire to have it settled as soon as possible. With this end in view we have paid in all we were able to do ourselves, and worked every way we could to get the necessary money, soliciting from those of our friends who felt disposed to aid us. At last, in the Providence of the All-Wise Father, we have come to the time when the last dollar has been contributed, and we are now disposed to render our thanks first to Almighty God for his tender watch care over us, and then to the friends at home and abroad who have so kindly given us of their money that we might be free from debt, and thus enabled the better to carry on the work of the Lord in this community. Therefore, be it this day

Resolved, That we, the Church of God at Plymouth, Ind., do most heartily thank our friends both near and far for their generosity toward us. Both to the giver of the largest sum, and to the giver of the least, we are indeed grateful, for we believe your gifts came from the heart. Our prayer is that God will abundantly bless and favor each one who has contributed, either in money, time or services, toward relieving this Church from debt, and to the Father above we give all glory and praise for his goodness toward us."

Special mention was made of Mr. Wm. O'Keefe of this city for his aid in endorsing our note, and other assistance. Of Bros. T. O. and John Taber for their generous contribution which finished paying the debt, and to their mother, Sister Rachel Miller for her contribution. Likewise to Sister Eva L. Underwood for her untiring efforts in reducing the debt, and inspiring others to work. Also Bro. and Sister Wince for their liberal donations that have seemed to come just when we were most discouraged.

While this meeting was of more than ordinary interest, and there was much rejoicing by all, it was especially enjoyable because Bro. E. K. Barnhill was able to ride to the house, after so many months of sickness. We will say to the friends of Bro. and Sister Barnhill that they are both some better, though yet far from well. Also Bro. Ben. Head who has been sick for some months, was able to be conveyed to the meeting. Sister Lizzie Dickson was able likewise to ride to Church, and to join with the others in songs as of yore. We trust it will not injure any of these sick ones, and that they may each recover strength so as to be able to be with us again.

In the evening the children of the Sunday School gave a very excellent programme of songs and recitations, a profusion of beautiful flowers lending their brightness to the pleasing scene.

We know that many of the brotherhood elsewhere will be glad with us at this happy time.

Dr. Hirsch and the Jews.

Editor of the Evening Press:

I am pleased with your efforts to keep your many readers in touch with current thought, letting ungrind, and occasionally report the sifted grist.

In your synopsis on April 21, of Dr. Hirsch's recent lecture before the Epworth League in St. James' Methodist Church, Chicago, are some thoughts that deserve careful attention.

1. Dr. Hirsh is a learned and eloquent speaker, but a loose logician. The thanks and cheers of his great audience perhaps indicated more politeness than agreement.

2. His "climax," "If Jesus Christ should return to the earth tomorrow he would be welcomed in every Jewish synagogue in the land," should be read from the steps leading to it. "They believe in a Messiah, but the Messiah of the Old Testament is a temporal prince who shall reign over the Jews after they shall have been reunited and become a nation again in Palestine. At least the orthodox Jews believe this, but the liberal Jews do not believe in the Messianic prophecies at all."

Probably the liberals are quite equal in numbers to the orthodox. They have been drifting apart many centuries. Would it not be a big job to reunite them in one day? And how are they going to get there without the Turk's consent? But no such action, no such reign, is promised. "Unto him shall the gathering of the people be." Gen. xlix. 10. "When the Son of Man shall sit in the throne of his glory," Matt. xix. 28, on Mount Zion, as covenanted with David.

3. If the Eden story is an allegory as Dr. Hirsch says, where does the allegory end and plain statement begin? It is conceded that Moses wrote the Pentateuch. Are the first five books an allegory? What then, becomes of the boasted Jewish law? That and the Jews and Judaism must be myths.

4. But the Pentateuch is a sober record of solid facts, and so is the New Testament. The Jews have themselves only to blame, that the terrible imprecation, "His blood be on us and on our children," still clings to them. The doctor has to admit that official Judaism "instigated the murder of Jesus." His effort to shift the guilt on the Roman governor and soldiers is at least awkward. Fifty days after the fact, Peter, a Jew, at the national convention of Jews at Pentecost, charged the guilt home upon the Jews as a national sin, and they did not deny it. See Acts ii. 22-24. Repentance was their only way out of the guilt; and the same day about three thousand passed through this honorable door by baptism. That door is still open. We should not forget that all the apostles were Jews, as were also many thousands of their converts. Christian Jews, but no less Jews, and these certainly can claim the residue of promises to Jews. "The twelve tribes of Israel," can be found without using infidels or murderers. They were represented in the return from captivity under Ezra; and John intimated that they could be called up from the rocks of Palestine.

5. "The Jews hold that Jesus preached nothing but Judaism..... All these (his teachings) we claim were taken from the Jewish writings, some of which were completed hundreds of years before Jesus was born." Why, then, were the Jews in constant conflict with him? They needed a Dr. Hirsch to tell them that Jesus was all right. "The law was given by Moses," a civil code to regulate external conduct, "but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ," requiring heart obedience. Six times the revising clause, "But I say unto you," occurs in Matt. x., twice in the Ten Commandments and four times the book of the law.

7. Dr. Hirsch says: "It cannot be denied that man has a soul." Nobody wants to deny it; and Moses says "every beast of the earth, every fowl of the air and everything that creepeth upon the earth has a living soul in him, Gen. i. 30. Dr. Hirsch also says, "The bare existence of a soul proves its immortality after death." Whew! No wonder we are getting crowded. We must have more worlds right away, or less immortality. The latter will be the cheaper relief. The Bible helps us here. It says a good deal about "mortal man," but not a word about immortal man. It says Christians are "seeking for immortality by patient continuance in well doing," Rom. ii. 7, and that they "will put on immortality at the resurrection," 1 Cor. xv. 51-54; and that is all the Bible says about man's relation to immortality. Of the soul—Jesus warns against fearing man, who can kill the body, but can do no more, and commands to fear God: "Who has power to destroy both soul and body in Gehenna," Matt. x. 28. The Old Testament says, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die," Ezek. xviii. 4-20; and Paul says: "The wages of sin is death," Rom. vi. 23. God has been careful that sin should not become immortal. Gen. iii. 22-24. The fires of Gehenna are not for torture; but for sanitation—to clean the world from sin.—O. E. L. Crozier in Grand Rapids Press.

Structure of the Bible.

"For my thoughts are not your thoughts, nor are your ways my ways, saith Jehovah. For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts." Isa. lv. 8, 9.

The Bible is venerable for antiquity, sacred in character, interesting because of its history, and attractive by reason of the unparalled sublimity and beauty of its style. In all these respects this Book stands alone, without compeer or rival, being as much superior to other books as the things of which it chiefly treats are to the ordinary pursuits of time, and as its Author is to other beings. Satisfied concerning its authenticity and inspiration, I commit myself to both with the confidence of certainty. So far as I am personally interested, the investigation of these points has long since terminated with the most pleasing results; and so far as the teachings of the Book are concerned, they are patent to every one's observation, even though the Book which contains them should be neither inspired nor authentic. The book itself is an indisputable fact in the history of man; and, of course, as a Book, it has a certain structure. Those who have read it know that it contains poetry, that it relates dreams, which are said to have occurred to individuals whose names are recorded; that it abounds with biographical notices, that it recognizes and teaches a well defined Deity, that it frequently speaks in parables, that it utters remarkable predictions, that it records stupendous miracles, that it avows a specific design or purpose, contemplated by its publication; and that, of course, associated with and springing out of this design, a certain destiny awaits it.

These things might be examined by the antiquary, the literary critic, and the moralist, though neither of them accepted the doctrine of supernatural inspiration: just as lectures on the beauties of Shakespeare or Sir Walter Scott have been delivered to crowded and gratified assemblies, though all knew perfectly that many of the circumstances sung by the great poet, and related by the prince of novelists, never took place in fact, but are indebted for existence to the creative genius and fertile imagination of those illustrious men. At the same time I will not consent (even if I could) to forego the advantage which I shall derive simply in a literary point of view, from my settled conviction that the writers of the Bible "spoke as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." But, on taking the Book into one's hand with this conviction, the impression of surprise is felt at its very singular structure, so different is it in this respect both from other books, and from the form in which we should probably expect to find it. A priori, men would not have concluded that a verbal revelation from the Creator to his intelligent creatures would assume the peculiar shape that, in fact, belongs to it. The interweaving of prophecy respecting the designs of God, for example, with the literal history of events that have occurred on the earth, is an idea which would not have arisen before a mind had set itself to solve the following problem: Given, the probability of a Divine revelation containing the will of the Creator concerning the moral conduct of his creatures; required, the form in which that revelation shall come, and the substance of which it shall consist. Perhaps the mind of the student would oscillate between two ideas, those of oracle and proclamation; as, in favor of either of these, there arose considerations which would go far towards probability. As the object of worship, God might utter his voice in some mysterious manner, either audibly from the heavens, or by superhuman messengers sent to the world for that express purpose; and the kneeling multitude would receive with becoming reverence the utterances of their great Creator. Or, in favor of the idea of proclamation, the thoughts of the student would revert to the fact of supreme authority, and he would imagine, seeing that Royalty issues its will in the imperative mood, that if God should reveal himself to his creatures by any verbal process, it would be as Sovereign, and in the form of measured, dignified, and perhaps stern proclamation. He would assign no reasons, condescend to no appeal, utter no entreaty, but simply declare that such was his will, and command instant obedience on pain of exposure to some fearful penalty. The heart of the Father would not appear in the document: it would be exclusively and terribly official. Men would look upon it and tremble, but not one would love. No tone of tenderness would fall upon the ear and touch the chords of the affections. It would be the revelation of irresistible Power, the dread apocalypse of Omnipotence.

That this a priori reasoning would have been erroneous, the structure of the Bible proves; but that such conjectures would have presented themselves in the case supposed, is inferable from the fact that multitudes find fault with the Bible, and refuse to allow its supernatural origin, just because it accords not with their idea of what a revelation from heaven might, would, or should have been. But why overlook the remarkable analogy between the material and verbal revelations? God's "thoughts," like his works, must be infinitely above those of man. May not the peculiarities of the Book form one of its special commendations? It is in reality the counterpart of the material revelation. Unity in diversity is the doctrine of the visible universe; unity in diversity is the structural character of the Bible. The former proclaims ONE presiding Power over the magnificent empire of God; the latter proclaims one directing Spirit through a series of not fewer than sixty-six different pieces of writing, which form, as a whole, the wonderful volume which we call "The Bible." What endless variety there is in the works of the Creator! What exquisite pictures nature presents to the eye! Behold her emerald carpet spangled with a thousand flowers, tinted with a thousand hues and whose odors perfume, the passage; her fertile valleys, rewarded by the hand of industry with wealth more valuable than ever sparkled in the crowns of monarchs; her vast forests, whose rustling leaves and waving branches, in harmony with the winged winds and the notes of birds of beauteous plume, produce one of her own imitable concerts; her crystal streamlets, softly stealing over the green sward, and kissing the root of many a gentle flower; her mighty rivers, now moving slowly over level regions, and imparting fertility in their procession; now flowing rapidly, in accordance with the declivity of the land, whilst their waters sparkle, like sheets of liquid fire, in the beams of the brilliant sun; now rushing with irresistible fury over the rock ledge or lofty cliff, and forming the earth-shaking cataract, whose spray glitters in the horizon with all the glories of the prismatic bow; and now, after the toils of the passage, and chafing of the fall, passing solemnly to the great ocean, to pour their waters in the bosom of that symbol eternity; her majestic mountains, lifting their summits above the region of storm and shadow, and covered with eternal snow and sunshine, upon which the eye of the eagle alone has gazed; her annual procession of winter, spring, summer, autumn—the royal four that she has delegated to bear rule successively over her children, and in turn to bless them with appropriate gifts; her mighty reservoir of water, whose liquid arms interlink the nations, and bear the produce of one continent to another for the purpose of amicable interchange; that great sea which now sleeps to the lullaby of the zephyr; placid as an infant's cheek which has never been stained by sin, and now roars with the voice of seven thunders, and tosses its mountain waves among the flying clouds of heaven, whilst navies are helpless before it, as a shell of glass beneath the foot of a giant, or a gossamer across the path of a careering lion; her vast drapery of clouds, now disposed, as if by the hands of angels, in graceful folds across the canopy of heaven, and now fearfully black with the coming storm, or rent by the flashing lightning, whilst the roar of the thunder awes into silence even the tongue of the blasphemer; her glorious sun, pouring life and light through her wide domains, and her midnight sisterhood of stars, studding the blue concave like golden and silver gems upon the forehead of night, and singing in mystic poetry "the music of the spheres." And yet amidst all this variety, there is positive and obvious unity; and from the least to the greatest, the evidence is overwhelming that they are the works of one God. Human skill could as soon make a sun as a snowdrop, or an archangel as a glowworm. Man pretends not to be a creator; that honor he is obliged to assign to another: for on every green field and lofty mountain, on the heaving ocean and the forked lightning, on the sparkling dewdrop and humble daisy, on the world which he inhabits, and on the sun, moon, and stars, he sees written in a universal language—"Jehovah hath made all things for himself."

Now, if we turn to the Bible, the verbal revelation of the same august Being, we shall find a most remarkable analogy. What variety of composition from the "In the beginning," of Moses, to the "Amen," of the apocalyptic Seer, two writers between whom fifteen hundred years at least must be placed, so long did it take from the commencement to the close of the Book. The astonishing variety of subjects may be thus condensed: History, like a picture, reproducing an extensive landscape, and fixing it permanently before the eye of the spectator; biography, immortalizing certain persons, for the imitation or warning of subsequent generations, though they themselves have returned to their dust; prophecy, anticipating the world's future, and the scenes of eternity, and submitting descriptions of both to creatures who are crushed before the moth; doctrines, some of which are clustered in the moral firmament for signs and for seasons to the man who is sowing seed in view of the great harvest; and others of which, deep as the nature of the Deity, and resplendent with the lustre of his brightness, dazzle the eye of the beholder, and become dark with excess of light; precepts, which find their way direct to the heart of man, and challenge the obedience of his most secret motives; denunciations, which impress the spirit with awful feelings respecting the purity and justice of him with whom all intelligences have to do, and tell us he cannot look upon sin as an evil of trifling magnitude; appeals, which demonstrate the Divine solicitude that men would render to him a hearty and intelligent service, and pursue that course which will terminate in honor; threatenings, which unequivocally declare that it is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God without a Mediator standing by, on account of whose glorious work justice and mercy may agree in a verdict of deliverance to the transgressor; promises, which pour the warm love of a Father's heart upon the burdened souls of his children, sustaining and encouraging them amidst the difficulties of their homeward journey; epistles, in which the thoughts of one man are familiarly given to another, or to many, concerning the character of the human family, the nature of the Christian Church, the mysteries of the gospel, the arrangements of redemption, the employments of angels, the results of the resurrection, and the purposes of God; and poetry, in which the hallelujahs of heaven are brought down to earth, and the grand future of the Church and the world is sung in strains of rapture and bursts of magnificent imagery, such as never yet issued from uninspired pen.

In the Bible also there is constant reference to the varieties of nature; and its grand, or majestic, or sublime, or tender, or soft characteristics, are all traced to him of whom the Book constantly speaks. When, therefore, he is reverently seen creating all this visible beauty, and appealing by it to the faculty in man which he has formed expressly to realize it, we are in a position to appreciate the attractive structure of the Bible. Our mental conception of the beauty is the result of a power with which the Creator has endowed us; and through the eye—the sensible medium of communication between material beauty and the understanding—those pictures are conveyed which we dominate beautiful, or sublime, or terrible, as the case may be. I have spoken of the green earth, but who gives it this agreeable color? I have pointed to the flowers that adorn it; but so did our Redeemer in his inimitable Sermon on the Mount, when, pointing to the rich oriental landscape undulating at his feet, he said, "Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow; they toil not, neither do they spin; and yet I say unto you, that even Solomon in all his glory, was not arrayed like one of these." I have alluded to the fertile valley: "God giveth the increase," is the explanation furnished by the Bible. I have directed attention to the forest, with its rustling leaves and waving branches, among which the breeze makes music. The commentary of the Bible is, "The trees of the Lord are full of sap; the cedars of Lebanon which he hath planted. He maketh the clouds his chariot; he walketh upon the wings of the wind. Thou hearest the sound in the tops of the mulberry trees. When the branch of the fig tree is yet tender and putteth forth leaves, ye know that the summer is nigh." I have referred to the crystal streamlet: "He brought streams out of the rock, and caused the waters to run down." I have pictured the mighty river in its course: "Thou didst cleave the earth with rivers," is the finding of the Bible. I have called attention to the majestic mountains: "Who hath weighed the mountains in scales and the hills in a balance? By his strength he setteth fast the mountains." I have glanced at the regularity of the seasons: "The day is thine, the night also is thine; thou hast prepared the light and the sun; thou has set all the borders of the earth; thou hast made summer and winter. He reserveth unto us the appointed weeks of the harvest. The north and the south; thou hast created them. Tabor and Hermon shall rejoice in thy name. While the earth remaineth, seed time and harvest, and cold and heat, and summer and winter, and day and night shall not cease." I have looked on the great ocean with its characteristic changes. So does the Bible: "Thou rulest the raging of the sea; when the waves thereof arise thou stillest them." "And Jesus arose and rebuked the winds and the sea, and there was a great calm." And I have viewed the brilliant sun and the midnight host of stars. The verdict of the Book is, "God made two great lights: he made the stars also; he commandeth the sun, and spreadeth out the heavens, and maketh Arcturus, Orion, and Pleiades, and the chambers of the south; he telleth the number of the stars; he calleth them all by name."—The Rainbow.

Dear Restitution:

I received THE RESTITUTION through the kindness of a dear brother in the faith, and I appreciate it very much. I pass away some lonely hours in reading it. It is a welcome here in the faith. My dear husband was a preacher of the true and living faith for a number of years, until his health failed him. He died last October and I moved from Paul's Valley, I. T. to Gillham, Ark. I have two little girls with me, and three married. Dear brothers and sisters, one and all, write to me when you see this, and pray for me that I may hold out faithful until Jesus comes to make up his jewels. My trials have been hard indeed since my dear husband died, but I am very thankful that I can work. I would be so thankful if I lived near some of the faith, but I try to be patient. None of my children have set out for eternal life. I would like so much for some of the brethren to come and preach for their benefit. One daughter, Mrs. J. B. Taylor, lives in Paul's Valley, and if any should pass through there will they please call on her and talk to her about her future. You would be kindly received.

Your sister in the one hope.

MRS. LEE BROWN.

MARRIED.

At the home of the bride's parents, Brother and Sister Wm. Hobbs, in Argos, Ind., Sister Grace Hobbs was married to Brother Lloyd Miller, on Sunday, June 21, 1903.

Strong in the faith, able in body, energetic in mind, united in love, they enter on life's work. We can but wish and expect of them a beneficial influence in the community and a power for the support of the truth. May it be so.

Our Helping Fund.

We whose names are given herewith, believing that it is our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending THE RESTITUTION to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our names for the purpose of aiding the managers of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund to be applied as the doners request, (or when left to the publisher to decide) only for those who themselves state their circumstances and need, or whose case is presented by some one known to be trustworthy.

Poetry.

Waiting on God.

Waiting on God? It is sitting down
By the way to rest awhile,
And learning the secret of perfect peace
In the light of a Father's smile.

It is ceasing to look with anxious eye
On the trials of coming days;
It is leaving the present to God alone,
With a heart overfull of praise.

It is never a thought of "how" or "why"
In the matter of daily life;
It is simply letting him take his way
Through the midst of all care and strife.

It is leaving everything in his hands,
As he seeth best,
Who never can make mistakes;
And perfect rest.

The Keys of the Kingdom.

My Dear Brother:

I write you to ask for your explanation of Matt. xvi. 19: "And I give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven, etc."

L. E. CONNER.

The word "keys" in this passage are in the plural number, from the Greek word kleis, and signifies to open to reveal, or make known, to give knowledge concerning that which was hidden. The student of mathematics has a key given him, to aid in the study of mathematics.

Now to Peter was given the power or keys to reveal that which hitherto had been hidden. Note what Peter says in 1 Pet. i. 9-13, and you will see that it relates to the kingdom of heaven, or the gospel of the kingdom, as a message of salvation. He says: "Receiving the end of your faith, even the salvation of your souls. Of which salvation the prophets have inquired and searched diligently, who prophesied of the grace that should come unto you. Searching what, or what manner of time the Spirit of Christ which was in them did signify, when it testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ, and the glory that should follow. Unto whom it was revealed, that not unto themselves, but unto us they did minister the things, which are now reported unto you by them that have preached the gospel unto you with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven; which things the angels desire to look into."

The prophets prophesied of things concerning the gospel of our salvation which they did not clearly comprehend, concerning which they "inquired and searched diligently," "which things the angels desire to look into."

Paul speaks of it being "kept secret since the world began," and "in other ages was not made known unto the sons of men." "For this cause I Paul, the prisoner of Jesus Christ for you Gentiles, If ye have heard of the dispensation of the grace of God which is given me to youward: how that by revelation he made known unto me the mystery; (as I wrote afore in few words; whereby, when ye read, ye may understand my knowledge in the mystery of Christ,) which in other ages was made known unto the sons of men, as it is now revealed unto his holy apostles and prophets by the Spirit; that the Gentiles should be fellow heirs, and of the same body, and partakers of his promise in Christ by the gospel."

These things were in a large measure hidden from the people until Peter used one of his keys on the day of Pentecost.

Jesus said: Mark iv. 11, 12, "And he said unto them, Unto you is given to know the mystery of the kingdom of God; but unto them that are without, all these things are done in parables; that seeing they may see, and not perceive; and hearing they may hear, and not understand; lest at any time they should be converted, and their sins should be forgiven them."

The knowledge of this "mystery of the kingdom of God," could either "bind" or "loose" them from their "sins."

This text shows that if they should perceive the mystery of the kingdom and become "converted" "their sins should be forgiven them."

See Rom. xvi. 25 27: "Now to him that is of power to stablish you according to my gospel, and the preaching of Jesus Christ, according to the revelation of the mystery, which was kept secret since the world began, but now is made manifest, and by the Scriptures of the prophets, according to the commandment of the everlasting God, made known to all nations for the obedience of faith."

That "which was kept secret since the world began" "is now made manifest," "for the obedience of faith," and according as they render obedience their sins shall be either "[loosed" or "bound in heaven."

It was never "made known to ALL NATIONS for the obedience of faith," until Peter used his keys. Previous to this, Jesus said: "I am not sent but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel."

Jesus charged the lawyers of his day and said: "Woe unto you, lawyers! for ye have taken away the key of knowledge: ye entered not in yourselves, and them that were entering in ye hindered." Luke xi. 52.

It is even so today, the self-appointed expounders of the Divine law have "taken away the key of knowledge," —the gospel of the kingdom, "made known to all nations for the obedience of faith."

The first key which Peter used on the day of Pentecost is found in Acts ii. 30–38. "Therefore being a prophet, and knowing that God had sworn with an oath to him, that of the fruit of his loins, according to the flesh, he would raise up Christ to sit on his throne; he, seeing this before, spake of the resurrection of Christ, that his soul was not left in hell, neither his flesh did see corruption. This Jesus hath God raised up whereof we all are witnesses. Therefore being by the right hand of God exalted, and having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Ghost, he hath shed forth this, which ye now see and hear. For David is not ascended into the heavens; but he saith himself, The Lord said unto my Lord, Sit thou on my right hand, until I make thy foes thy footstool. Therefore let all the house of Israel know assuredly, that God hath made that same Jesus, whom ye have crucified, both Lord and Christ. Now when they heard this, they were pricked in their heart, and said unto Peter and to the rest of the apostles, Men and brethren, what shall we do? Then Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost."

The knowledge Israel specially needed to know is in the 36th verse: "Therefore let all the house of Israel know assuredly, that God hath made that same Jesus whom ye have crucified, both Lord and Christ." When Peter applied the key and revealed the fact, that they had crucified the Christ, they sought how to be loosed from their sin, that it may not be bound against them in heaven.

The time came for Peter to use his second key and unlock the mystery of the kingdom of heaven to the Gentiles. The gospel must now be "Made known to all nations for the obedience of faith."

In Acts x. 31–37, is revealed the second key. "Cornelius, thy prayer is heard, and thine alms are had in remembrance in the sight of God. Send therefore to Joppa, and call hither Simon, whose surname is Peter; he is lodged in the house of one Simon a tanner by the sea side; who, when he cometh, shall speak unto thee. Immediately therefore I sent to thee; and thou hast well done that thou art come. Now therefore are we all here present before God, to hear all things that are commanded thee of God. Then Peter opened his mouth, and said Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons; but in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted of him. The word which God sent unto the children of Israel, preaching peace by Jesus Christ; (he is Lord of all;) that word, I say, ye know, which was published throughout all Judea, and began from Galilee, after the baptism which John preached."

The saving message is found in verse 37: "That word I say ye know, which was published throughout all Judea, and began from Galilee, after the baptism which John preached."

The message above referred to, is found in Mark i. 14, 15: "Now after that John was put in prison, Jesus came into Galilee, preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God, and saying, The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand; repent ye, and believe the gospel."

While I was in Danville, Virginia, a Campbellite preacher took exception to my declaration that God's kingdom was not yet established, and asked me if Jesus did not give Peter the keys of the kingdom. I affirmed that there could not be keys to that which did not already exist. The poor man could not get his notion much beyond metalic keys. His kingdom was a church kingdom set up on the day of Pentecost.

The words church and kingdom can never be used as meaning the same thing.

Ekklesia is the Greek word for church, and basileia, the word for kingdom. In the New Testament the word ekklesia (church,) is found about 115 times, and basileia (kingdom,) about 160 times, and are never in a single instance used interchangeably. Just try a few and you will make complete nonsense of it. "Thy kingdom (church) come." "The time came that the saints possessed the kingdom" (church.) "Fear not little flock (the church) it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom" (church.) "The saints (the church) shall take the kingdom (church) and possess the kingdom," (church.)

Peter used the keys and unlocked the mysteries of the kingdom. It is now revealed, and Peter had no further use of the keys, neither did he hand them down to any successor.

The only trouble we have today, is, that like of old blind guides, or theological lawyers take away the "key of knowledge" and like of old it is written against them: "Woe unto you, lawyers."

W. H. WILSON.

Usher's Chronology.

Archbishop Usher is the man entitled to the credit of furnishing the chronology which has been placed at the heads of Bible chapters and to which every reader of God's Word refers when he wishes to know where on the scale of time the events he is reading about took place. Time in the Bible is a subject of inspiration, a part of revelation. God placed it there and it is man's duty and privilege to trace it through the Word of inspiration, gathering up the many short spans or links and welding them into a harmonious chain reaching from the creation of Adam down to the baptism and ministry of Jesus the second Adam. I for one feel thankful that Usher gave us the result of his laborious researches. In my early reading of the Bible I looked to his figures at the beginning of the chapter to learn the date of things or events of which I was reading. And I do so yet, though I think we have at hand a better system of chronology, but it is not at all likely that this will be placed in our Bibles. Some one said not long ago that Usher's chronology is misleading. But how so? The reason assigned was that some readers would think it a work of inspiration instead of the result of human investigation. Yes, and some have regarded the [illegible] punctuation of the Bible as the work of the Holy Spirit. I met a preacher down in Huntington county who thought that the translation of the Bible by King James' committee was a work of inspiration and that it was a gross insult to God to quote any other translation. But the preacher and the laity need not be so ignorant when the means of knowing better is so abundant and at hand.

Usher's chronology is approximately correct. This is admitted by some of the best of chronologists of the present day. Some, however, have confidently asserted that he made a mistake of one hundred years in the length of the period between the date of the exodus and the fourth year of Solomon's reign. This notable period covers the sojourn in the wilderness, the conquest of Canaan, the rule of the judges after the entrance of the children of Israel into the land, the reign of Saul and David, and three full years of Solomon's reign. Those who believe Usher made a mistake of one hundred years in the length of the period in dispute proceed to prove him in error by the following summation based as they suppose upon the statements of Paul in Acts xiii. Their understanding of Paul's chronology is about as follows: 40 years in the wilderness verse 18; 7 years at least to the division verse 19; 450 years for rule of the Judges verse 20; 40 years for Saul verse 21; 40 years for David verse 22; 3 years to the fourth of Solomon; total 580 years instead of 480.

Usher took 1 Kings vi. 1 as historically and chronologically true. The verse reads, "It came to pass, in the four hundred and eightieth year after the children of Israel were come out of the land of Egypt, in the fourth year of Solomon's reign over Israel, in the month Zif, which is the second month, that he began to build the house of the Lord." No one has any ground on which to base the charge that Usher made a mistake unless it can be shown that 1 Kings vi. 1 should read 580 instead of 480; and that there is no overlapse in the times mentioned by Paul. The objector to Usher's time is bound in all fairness to harmonize the two passages before he pronounces judgment. The rule of the Judges began with Israel's appointment at the suggestion of Jethro, soon after the children of Israel came out of Egypt. It may be said that the office as first instituted and down to the division of the land was merely human. So it was, but there was an absolute need for these inferior courts to meet the demands of justice from the fact that more cases for adjustment crowded upon Moses than he was able to hear. Within a period of less than thirteen months Jehovah both acknowledged and confirmed the appointment of the judges. So the government of Israel by judges dates from their first appointment in the wilderness, nor were they dispensed with until the thirteenth year of David's reign. A misunderstanding of Paul's meaning may be the cause of the seeming contradiction of the two passages. It is observable that the several eras mentioned by Paul overlap. He knew of what he was speaking about, and Luke the writer of Acts must have understood him. For instance, as one example of overlapping, it is plain that the several years expended in the conquest and dividing the land are included in the 150 years of Paul for the reason that they are a part of Joshua's personal judgeship. At the other end of the line of Judges Samuel's 58 years must also be included in the 450, for it is written, "Samuel judged Israel all the days of his life." (1 Sam. vii. 15) and dying left his sons as his successors. (1 Sam. viii. 1. In conclusion, if we take the testimony of the Scriptures themselves, reference by reference, and follow the line across the stretch of years between the setting up of the tabernacle in the wilderness, and the fourth year of Solomon when the dedication of the temple took place is just 480 years. This forces us to believe that the statement in 1 Kings vi. 1 sets forth the truth.

JOHN L. WINCE.

Law and Gospel.

There was an article recently in THE RESTITUTION entitled, "Is the law of Moses the law of God." Doubtless the most of the readers will assent to the question, but the writer seemed to imply that if so, then the Mosaic law must necessarily apply rigidly, universally and eternally. This is one of the results of the many mistakes that have come down to us in various forms from antiquity and on which eternal hell's pains, vicarious atonement, and such God dishonoring doctrines are founded. It is the "immutable law of God" theory, and of which some speak largely and lustily, but in which there is no truth, for there is no immutable law of God. Were it so, all nature would be a mere automaton without a possibility of self adjustment and no hope of redemption. Now all nature testifies to the reverse. Wherever we see that mystery of God called "life" there we can observe that the most conspicuous feature is the capacity for self adjustment to varying conditions. A pine tree in the thick woods grows tall and straight, casting off all its latteral branches, it rushes upward to heaven and the light, leaving a stately stem, fit for a ship's mast; but the same tree grown in the open lawn forms a beautiful, symetrical cone, every side branch in full development, skirting down to the very ground. And so throughout all the realm of plant or animal life, whether in the wild, in the field, or the garden, adjustability and adaptability are wellsprings in their lives that overflow and overcome the obstructions interposed by change. And as in the physical so in the moral, intellectual and spiritual world. The requirements imposed by arbitrary law upon a nation specially prepared for its reception, would be utterly impossible of fulfillment in other circumstances: it would be fitting a square peg into a round hole. And so the great Father has altered the plan of his dealing with his creatures and adjusted his ways to our circumstances.

No use to explain here the use and object, educational and otherwise of the Mosaic law, Paul has done that satisfactorily enough in his letter to the Romans, but we ought to express our admiration as well as our thanks to the wise One who deals tenderly on our behalf, adjusts requirements to conditions and meets, and bends, and fits as only he knows how.

Even during the national embodiment of the law in Israel we have this principle of adjustment to conditions, illustrated by Jesus himself by the case of David and the shewbread and the "priests that profaned the sabbath and were blameless." But now when all the conditions were altered, Israel dispersed, temple destroyed, could strict obedience to the details of the law be fulfilled? Take the case of Sabbath law, for instance, in the early church of Christ. We know that quite a large proportion of the disciples were slaves, whose time was not their own, and whose refusal to work on certain days would have been as good as certain death. In Israel the law applied to master as well as servant, but Roman law offered no protection in such a case. Yet we never hear of any persecution of the early Christians on account of their refusal to work, and we would have been very likely to—such action would have struck deep in their purses and that is the time when Romans and others call very loud, and we would have been even more likely to have heard from them had the recalcitrant slaves practiced that assertive bravado that makes the modern seventh day Sabbatarian so conspicuous. Still there is no doubt that the early Christians observed the Sabbath, especially the Hebrew members, otherwise there would be no point in Paul's remark about regarding the day unto the Lord (Rom. xiv. 6), so they also regarded the temple and the circumcision.

Another thought in closing, some good brethren seem to think that when the "law goes forth from Zion and the Word of the Lord from Jerusalem," that it will be in the manner of an imperial mandate. I think that is a mistake. A careful study of the prophets as well as the other Scriptures will show that human volition will not be paralyzed and crushed out in the kingdom of God, but rather enlisted in living, loving service. The crushing out process which we hope is imminent is the destruction of that, and those that thwart the spiritual union of the human and divine. Law and force have to be applied correctively to minors and servants, but to sons and co-partners in the divine purpose, the private and local initiative so much treasured in all civilized communities under the names of "liberty," "home rule," etc., will be left free. Therefore it is written, the people shall say, Come let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, he will teach us of his ways and we will walk in his paths." This and the context as well as other testimony implies voluntary service, acceptance and submission, which is the glory and crown of that liberty with which Christ will set the world free.

Wisdom of Selrach.

CHAPTER 7.

1. Do not do evil and evil will not lay hold of thee.

2. Stand away from an unjust man and he will incline away from thee.

3. O son, Do not sow upon furrows of iniquity, and thou shalt not reap them sevenfold.

4. Do not seek leadership from the Lord nor a seat of glory from a king.

5. Do not justify thyself in the sight of the Lord, and do not practice sophistry in the presence of a king.

6. Do not seek to become a judge, lest thou be not strong enough to deliver from iniquity. Do not be overcome with awe before the face of a man of influence, and put a stumbling-block in the way of thy uprightness.

7. Do not sin against a multitude of a city, nor cast thyself down in a mixed multitude.

8. Do not bind up a sin twice; for in doing it once thou wilt not be guiltless.

9. Do not say, He will look upon the multitude of my votive-offerings, and in my having offered them unto a Most High God, he will accept them.

10. Do not be discouraged in thy votive-prayer, and do not disregard doing an act of mercy.

11. Do not laugh at a man who is in bitterness of soul; for there is one who humbleth and exalteth.

12. Do not plough a lie against thy brother, nor do the like to a friend.

13. Do not be willing to tell any lie; for the practice thereof is not unto good.

14. Do not carelessly reflect in a multitude of elders, and do not repeat a word in thy votive-prayer.

15. Do not hate painstaking employment and agriculture generically imposed by a Most High.

16. Do not reckon thyself in a multitude of obdurate sinners.

17. Humble thy soul exceedingly, Remember that wrath doth not tarry. That fire and worm are the requital of the irreverent.

18. Do not exchange a friend for an ordinary person, nor a noble brother for gold of Soupheir, (accent on last syllable).

19. Do not fail to attain a wise and good wife; yea, for her grace (or favor) is more than the gold.

20. Do not ill-treat a member of thy household who is working in truth, nor one who is giving his soul for small wages.

21. Let thy soul love a member of thy household who hath understanding; do not deprive him of liberty.

22. Are domestic animals thine, take an oversight of them, and if they are of good use to you, let them remain with thee.

23. Are children thine, chasten them, and bow their neck in their youth.

24. Hast thou daughters, give heed to their body, and do not make thy face hilarious toward them.

25. Give away a daughter, and thou wilt have done a great work, and give her to a husband of understanding.

26. Thy wife is as thy soul, do not cast her off.

27. With all thy heart glorify thy father, and do not ignore the birth-pangs of a mother.

28. Remember that thereby thou wast born, and what wilt thou repay to them even as they have given to thee.

29. With all thy heart revere the Lord and admire his priests.

30. With all ability love thy Creator and do not forsake his public servitors.

31. Fear the Lord and glorify a priest, and give the portion in distribution to him even as hath been commanded thee, a first-fruits namely of the sanctified-offering for a sin of error, and a gift of shoulders, and a sacrifice of sanctification, and a first-fruits offering of sanctified things (the loaves of bread for instance).

32 And extend thy hand to a beggar that thy blessing may have been perfected.

33. There is grace for a gift in the sight of every living person, and do not forbid grace to a dead one.

34. Do not deprive [illegible] of mourners and sorrow thou with those who sorrow.

35. Do not be slow to visit (take an oversight of) an enfeebled one; for on account of such things wilt thou have been beloved.

36. In all thy words be mindful of thy last experiences, and thou wilt not sin forever.

COMMENT.

In this last clause you will see the same idiom that John uses in Christ's language to Martha where he is teaching her the resurrectional truth that though the saint will die of course he will not die forever, translated in the C. V. and R. V. "will never die," and laid hold of by all "the immortal soul savers" as a proof-text for "natural immortality."

As you scan this chapter verse by verse you will see no conflict between the teaching here given and that of Christ himself and his apostles. For instance in the 3rd verse sowing and reaping. And in the fourth verse, Don't seek leadership; let it seek you, "Humble thyself that thou mayest be exalted" is good ethics in politics as well as religion per se, and in the 5th, 6th and 7th verses you will observe that there is no separation here taught between the religious and the secular relations of life.

In the 8, 9 and 10 our relation to God individually is again emphasized.

In the 11, 12, 13, 14, 15 and 16 the ethics of our relations to our neighbor resumed. In 17 and 18 again, humility and remembrance of "the fiery judgment" that follows a "death and the worm." The 18th fraternal relations, 19 to the 29 inclusive, household and domestic relations. 30 to the 32 inclusive our relations to God again though his priestly ministration private and public and all the means of grace. 33 and 34 our duty to the dead, 35 and 36 our duty to the enfeebled and weak in any way. 35th Let thy words show mindfulness ("ye are my witnesses") of the judgment to come and the glory to follow it. Why should such teaching as this have been made apocryphal?

The title page describes it as a Symposium of Writers on eternal life from the Bible Basis, and is selected from the works of a goodly number of Bible Students who have written during the past few years. It is compiled and published by Bro. John O. Woodruff, of Elizabeth, N. J., of whom it may be ordered. The paper and print are excellent, as is the durable cloth binding. Popular Lectures by M. Joblin.

Brethren and Sisters, Have you loved ones who think sincerity will save them? Have you friends who think they worship acceptably while ignorant of God's promises? Have you acquaintances with false hopes of heaven, or who believe themselves immortal by nature, or who think their sins are forgiven, although they are ignorant of the Law of Pardon, or who have no use for a God who consigns sinners to Eternal Torment, and are ignorant of Jehovah's beneficent purpose to fill the earth with his glory and bestow Eternal Life upon believers of the Gospel, so they can enjoy it for ever? If so, send for Popular Lectures by Bro. Joblin, entitled:—"The Kingdom of God;" "Old Mother Earth to Be Born Again;" "Strangers from the Covenants of Promise;" "Vain Worship;" "No Immortality Out of Christ;" "Hope Begotten by the Resurrection of Christ;" "God's Love and Solicitude for Mankind;" and "What Shall We Do to be Saved?"

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Kindness.

A little word in kindness spoken,
A motion or a tear,
Has often healed the heart that's broken,
And made a friend sincere.

A worst—a look—has crushed to earth
Full many a budding flower,
Which had a smile but owned its birth,
Would bless life's darkest hour.

Structure of the Bible. No. 2.

On a review of all these references to the grand, the sublime, the attractive, which meet our eye as it sweeps creation, and blend into one gorgeous picture of unequaled splendor, constituted of ten thousand times ten thousand minor pictures, are we not naturally drawn to the conclusion that this guide book to the beauties of creation must be in itself beautiful also? And how much do they lose who are satisfied with admiring the furniture of this outer court of the great temple, but have no heart-swelling desire to penetrate the arcanum—to lift the veil that they may reverently look upon the Ineffable Light and Life, the Divine Artist, who gave existence, color, and finish to this magnificent picture, and hung it up in the gallery of the universe for the study and delight of its intelligent inhabitants! Indeed, it is necessary thus to lift the veil; for this Book, whose structure so closely resembles that of creation—having mountains of unapproachable height, and abysses of unfathomable depth—contains a great truth respecting which the latter is totally silent. In three Divinely beautiful words this great truth relieves all our anxieties, and makes us leap with joy. These words are, "God is love." Never yet has philosophy embraced their full significance, nor poetry sung their inexhaustible treasures, nor eloquence reached their lofty altitude, nor [illegible] ology illustrated their living import. Nevertheless a child may lisp them and feel their joyous influence. But the truth which these words communicate is not revealed in creation. It is not written upon the heavens that "God is love;" for, with all their beauty, they are sometimes vocal with the terrific thunder, and lit up with the fiery glare of the blasting lightning. It is not inscribed upon the clouds; for, with all their variegated drapery, they are sometimes charged with the pestilence that walketh in darkness, and wasteth at noon day. It is not engraved upon the mountain summits; for, with all their magnificence, they sometimes belch out the destructive lava, and scorch with blackness extensive fields covered with food for nations, whilst man and beast are licked up by the desolating fire-tongue, as the dry stubble after the harvest. It is not inscribed upon the surface of the earth; for, with all its motherly care to nurse its myriad children, it sometimes rocks with earthquake, whilst its granite jaws open to devour cities, with their shrieking and doomed inhabitants. And it is not impressed upon the bosom of the great deep; for, with all its occasional serenity, it sometimes plays with human life, as a lion with a kid, and engulphs the pride of nations in its unfathomable caves. Yet this beautiful truth pervades the Bible, like an electric current, from its earliest to its latest page, vitalizing the whole, and giving animation to every part of its wonderful structure. It may be called the heart-song of the volume, whose melody is heard on every page, indistinctly or clearly, according to the sensibility of the listening ear. And although over some of its mountain passes there hang dark clouds, filling the mind of the solitary pilgrim with terror and apprehension, yet the genius of this utterance broods kindly above, whispering to the wearied traveller to toil on in hope.

And, once more, before I turn to what may be called the mechanical structure of the Book, suffer me to refer to the analogy of mystery subsisting between creation and the Bible. Every great truth nestles in the bosom of a mystery, and grows out of it. Creation is a grand visible fact, upon which the eye of the spectator may gaze habitually without fatigue. He will always see something new and beautiful; something to excite his admiration, or wonder, or awe; something to call forth gratitude to the great Being whose benign power built and furnished such a dwelling place for man; and something to convince him that to insinuate that all this is the result of chance is one of the wildest vagaries in which the human mind can indulge. He will see that which will make him exclaim, with the Royal poet of Judah, "O Lord, how manifold are thy works! in wisdom hast thou made them all: the earth is full of thy riches. So is this great and wide sea, wherein are things creeping innumerable, both small and great beasts. There go the ships: there is that leviathan, whom thou hast made to play therein. These wait all upon thee; that thou mayest give them their meat in due season. That thou givest them they gather: thou openest thine hand, they are filled with good." Or, with his celebrated son and successor, "The Lord by wisdom hath founded the earth; by understanding hath he established the heavens. By his knowledge the depths are broken up, and the clouds drop down the dew." And yet with all this, creation is full of mystery. Chemistry has labored long to find out the secrets of nature's laboratory; but with all her patient investigation she has scarcely yet crossed the threshold of the mysterious chamber. She has analyzed, arranged and classified; tried experiments, and obtained certain results [illegible] are they facts? Why water boils at a certain point and becomes frozen at another, remains a secret to this hour. To say that it is one of the laws of nature, is merely to repeat the proposition that water boils at a certain point and becomes frozen at another. In reality this phrase—"laws of nature"—is one which, whilst intended to conceal, betrays our ignorance. We cannot get behind the scenes. We have not stood in the counsel of the Lord, nor read the sacred secrets of even the meanest of his works. The common daisy, the grass blade, the thorn and the thistle, nay, the stones of the street and the particles of dust chased into restless circles by the dancing breeze, have each a grand secret safely locked from the prying eye of man. We speak of law, and we speak with certainty; but still we have only discovered that the law is, and that it operates. Beyond these points our keenest powers of vision cannot penetrate. Yet we admire and—if our minds are under healthy influence—adore. If nature had no mysteries the finest kind of literature, I mean poetry, would be lost to us. The poet tries to see the soul of things—the spiritual essence of visible realities—and to translate what he sees in gushing numbers that fall upon the ear like the gentle echo of those central harmonies that imagination supposes to exist.

Now a perfect parallel to this paragraph might be drawn from the mysteries of the Bible. "The works of the same author have a family likeness," says Dr. Endie. "The Bible often gives us the fact, but does not explain the manner in which it exists. The fact is enough for us—a sufficient foundation for our faith. It could not have been otherwise in a Divine Revelation, for there earth is in fellowship with heaven, the simple verges on the profound, the finite touches the infinite, the scon borders on the invisible, and time is brought into immediate contact with eternity. Such mysteries, moreover, are not without their benignant uses." "God," says Augustine, "has in the Scripture veiled his mysteries in clouds, that the love of truth in men might be inflamed by the very difficulty of apprehending it. For were there in Scripture only what we could easily comprehend, there would, on our part, be neither studious search, nor yet the sweetness of finding truth." [illegible] way to construct a strong infer[illegible] argument in favor of the Divini[illegible] Bible from the fact of mystery. [illegible] point before us, however, [illegible] parallelism between creation and Scripture, and the beauty which [illegible] mysteries give to both. Be [illegible] ceived or not, this is unquestio[illegible] given truth reaches [illegible] in such verbal simplicity. [illegible] of the common intellect readily apprehends it; but the splendors of its origins are veiled, otherwise we should be dazzled, not instructed—blinded, not enlightened. Associated with that given truth are circumstances high as heaven and deep as hades, which we can neither scale nor sound. These we call mysterious—a term which in our lips signifies nothing more than this—that our powers of understanding are exceedingly limited, and that we have yet much to learn. But the child is not allowed to reject its primer because the conjunction of letters into words, and of words into sentences, is to it a mystery; and we are not in the habit of tossing away the rose in disdain because we are ignorant concerning the mysteries of its life, its velvet texture, its colors, and its delicious fragrance; on the contrary, these all give a zest to our admiration, as it must ever have bloomed originally in the garden of the Lord. So the mysteries of the Bible are interwoven with its texture, and impart to it a sacred beauty, of which without [illegible] would have been des[illegible] We shall [illegible] what I have [illegible] the mechanical [illegible] about inter[illegible] Ver. 22. [illegible] and [illegible] are [illegible] prov[illegible] [illegible] mystery. Why [illegible] thirty-nine, and the New twenty-seven. Some of these compositions are of considerable length; such as those of the Pentateuch, or five books of Moses; and others comprise only a few sentences, such as the brief prophetic oracles of Obadiah and Haggai, the exquisitely beautiful letter of Paul to Philemon, and the second and third Epistles of John. But the longest composition in the volume contains no more matter than we should put in an ordinary pamphlet; whilst the two letters of John are simply what we should designate notes. Besides, there are other pieces still shorter, embracing only three or four verses each. I refer, of course, to several of the Psalms—sweet little flowers, breathing the perfumes of holiness among leaves which are for the healing of the nations. A cluster of writings by a great number of authors, on a vast variety of subjects, from the history of creation to the consummation of all things, in several languages, exhibiting much diversity of style, and all bound together in one volume, which for many generations has been deemed by the best and wisest men a treasure of inestimable value.

"Genesis" is historical, and records the fact of creation, the formation of the first human pair, the entrance of sin, and the promise of a Redeemer. The historian then relates the prevalence of iniquity in the line of the first murderer, refers to the origin of many arts, and gives a genealogy of the descendants of Seth to Noah. The terrible deluge at the end of 1,656 years, with the preservation of eight persons in an ark constructed under Divine direction for this special purpose; the re-peopling of the earth by the descendants of these persons, and the continuance of the genealogy from Shem, in the line of Abraham, to Jacob and his sons, are next recorded. The founding of Nineveh and Babylon; the source of the variety of languages which has long interrupted the intercourse of mankind; and the origin of the two most remarkable nations which have ever appeared on earth—the Jews and the Ishmaelites—are clearly shown. Important information is also given concerning the Moabites, Ammonites, Midianites, Edomites or Idumeans, all descended from Abraham. The most ancient war known to genuine history is here recorded, and the awful destruction of Sodom and the neighboring cities. The mass of interesting historical materials contained in this book, concerning those remote ages of which we have no other authentic records, must always render it an invaluable treasure. The inimitable story of Joseph occurs here. The narrative is continued to the death of Joseph, about 713 years after the deluge, or 2,369 from the creation, according to the common chronology. "Without this history," says Fuller, "the world would be in total darkness, not knowing whence it came or whither it goeth. In the first page of this sacred book, a child may learn more in one hour than all the philosophers in the world learned without it in thousands of years."

"Exodus," as the word imports, is an account of a most memorable departure—that of Israel from the cruel bondage of Egypt. A rapid view is given of the condition of the Israelites from the death of Joseph to that event, which took place about 144 years after; but the historian dwells fully on the particulars which preceded this departure, and which attended or followed it. The subject is introduced by Moses, with an account of his parentage, birth, exposure, preservation, education, flight into Midian, employment there, and reception of a divine commission to be the deliverer of the enslaved Hebrews. Then follows a narrative of the miraculous and terrible plagues by which the power of the despot was broken, and the bondmen liberated, while Pharaoh and his army were overwhelmed in the avenging sea. Then come relations respecting the wilderness-journey, the awful scenes of Sinai, the appointment of the Aaronic priesthood, the erection of a tabernacle, and the regular institution of worship. This book also contains some prophecies which were fulfilled before or soon after the death of Moses, others which were verified in subsequent ages, and others still, which, if I mistake not, yet travel towards a glorious consummation.

"Leviticus" records the solemn consecration of Aaron and his sons, who were of the tribe of Levi, to be the priests of God, and the confirmation of the priesthood to their descendants in all subsequent ages, so long as that dispensation should last. It contains little history, except that of the terrible death of Nadab and Abihu for irreverence in their sacred office. It chiefly consists of ritual laws, though moral precepts are frequently interspersed.

"Numbers" derives its name from the frequent numberings of the people and of the Levites which it records. It begins with an account of the arrangement of the twelve tribes into regular encampments, in four divisions, under their respective leaders, around the Tabernacle, the care of which, and of all its furniture, was committed to the Levites, in three divisions, according to their families. The history of Israel then proceeds; and the historian gives a heart-stirring account of the continuance of the Israelites in the wilderness for about forty years. With these records many moral and ceremonial laws are intermingled. War and conquest, and the striking prophecies of Balaam, are recorded in this book.

In "Deuteronomy" several of the laws previously given by the great Legislator are repeated, sometimes with further explanation, and enforced upon the people by the most earnest and eloquent addresses. It contains many explicit prophecies, which have been in process of fulfilment for more than three thousand years; and some of them remain unaccomplished to this hour.

The books of Joshua, Judges, Ruth, Samuel, Kings, Chronicles, Ezra, Nehemiah, and Esther, are all deeply interesting as containing history, national records, genealogies, specimens of oriental manners and customs, and illustrations of the noblest patriotism, together with vivid pictures of the incessant struggle between good and evil, righteousness and sin.

The grand poem of Job, the songs of the sweet Psalmist of Israel, and the writings of the Royal Philosopher, come next in order.

Then follow in succession the wonderful writings of Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, and Daniel—writings partly historical, but chiefly prophetical—and men whose moral sublimity is such, that we sometimes feel almost disposed to think they belonged to a race of beings superior to that of man. They seem to grasp the heavens as they speak, and to utter the destinies of the world's empires as if from the very foot of the throne of God. To say that a superhuman beauty adorns their writings, is but to repeat the unanimous opinion of every man, saint, sage, and sinner, who has attentively perused them.

The twelve Minor Prophets, so called in relation to the comparative brevity of their productions, conclude the Old Testament division of the Bible.

The four Gospels, written by the men whose names they respectively bear, contain narratives of the birth, infancy, life, experince, teachings, miracles, sufferings, death, and resurrection of our Lord Jesus Christ.

The book called the Acts of the Apostles, is a record of apostolic labors in the diffusion of the Gospel, of the planting of Churches in many places, of severe persecutions, trials and triumphs, of the descent of the Holy Spirit on the memorable day of Pentecost, and the remarkable consequences thereof. It contains specimens of the addresses the first preachers were accustomed to deliver to men. It abounds with passages of great energy and beauty; and its writer is generally supposed to have been Luke.

This treatise is followed by nine Epistles to Churches and four to individuals, and all of which are undoubtedly from the pen of the Apostle Paul; and the Epistle to the Hebrews, which comes next in order, is supposed by the most eminent critics to be also his—so large a portion of the venerable volume was this illustrious man honored to give the world. I shall merely remark at present respecting these fourteen letters, that they contain the most wonderful disclosures respecting the Divine government and purposes under the Christian dispensation; that they exhibit the very heart of man in the depth of its disorder and in the dignity of its recovery; that they describe prophetically the religious condition of the world, and especially of Europe, precisely as history records it for the last eighteen centuries, and as the aspect of things at this very hour shows it to the living generation; and that anything like a full estimate of their value to humanity is utterly and forever impossible. If they are not inspired, then a book that shall be really so will never shed its light upon the path of man; for they treat of the highest things within the wide circumference of being, and put it beyond the power of human language to represent either greater or holier thoughts.

In our Bibles we next find seven Epistles in succession, which are denominated general or catholic. One of them is written by James, two by Peter, three by John, and one by Jude. The title general, or catholic, is of no authority, as it was prefixed to these Epistles some ages after they were written, probably under the impression that it would characterize them as not addressed to particular Churches or individuals. But this is not strictly correct; as the latter of James is addressed "to the twelve tribes which are scattered abroad;" the first of Peter to those whom he calls "strangers resident in certain places in Asia Minor;" the second Epistle of John is inscribed to "the elect lady and her children;" and the third to "the well-beloved Gaius."

The last composition in the Bible is the Book of "Revelation." "How wonderful," writes George Gilfillan, "the mere outline of this book! The stage, a solitary island,

'Placed far amid the melancholy main;'

the sole spectator, a grey-haired apostle of Jesus, who once lay on his breast, but is now alone in the world; the appearance of the Universal Bishop, gold-girt, with head and hair white as snow, flaming eyes, feet like burning brass, voice as the sound of many waters, the seven stars in his right hand, and walking through the midst of the seven golden candlesticks; his charges to his Churches so simple, affectionate, and awful; the opening of a door in heaven; the throne, rainbow-surrounded, fringed by the seven lamps, and seeing its shadow in the sea of glass, mingled with fire; the Lion of the tribe of Judah opening the seals; the coming forth of the giant steeds—one white as the milky banner of the cross, another red as blood, a third black, and with a rider having a pair of balances in his hand, a fourth pale, and mounted by Death; the cry of the souls under the altar; the opening of the sixth seal, the four angels standing on the four corners of the earth, and blowing their blasts over a silent world; the sealing of the tribes; the great multitude standing before the Lamb; the volcano, cast, like a spark, into the sea; the opening of the bottomless pit; the emergence of those fearful hybrids of hell, the scorpion locusts, with Apollyon as their King; the unwritten words of the seven thunders; the prophesying, and death, and resurrection of the two witnesses; the woman clothed with the sun; that other woman, drunk and drenched in blood; the uprising of the twin beasts of crowned blasphemy; the Lamb and his company on the Mount Zion; the angel flying through the midst of heaven, with the Gospel in his mouth; the man on the white cloud, with the gold crown on his head, and the sharp sickle in his hand; the reaping of the harvest of the earth; the vintage of blood; the coming forth from the smoke of the glory of God, of the seven last plagues, clothed with linen, girded with virgin gold, and holding, with hands unharmed and untrembling, the vials full of the wrath of God; one for the earth—one for the sea—one for the fountains of waters—one for the sun to feed his old flame into tenfold fierceness—one for the seat of the beast—one for the Euphrates—and one for the fire-tormented and earthquake-listening air; the fall of the great city Babylon; the preparations for the battle of Armageddon; the advent of the Captain of the holy host; the battle; the rout of the beast, and the false prophet driven back upon the lake of fire; the binding of Satan; the reign of Christ and his saints; the final assault of the enemy, Gog and Magog, upon the camp and the holy city; their discomfiture; the uprising, behind it, of the great white throne; and the ultimate and everlasting 'Bridal of the earth and sky'—such are the main constituents of this most marvellous book, the Apocalypse, or Revelation of Jesus Christ."

I would add to this graphic summary of its contents, that it forms an appropriate conclusion to the structural arrangement of the Bible. It brings the long war of opposite principles to a grand crisis; exhibits error and sin confounded with a perpetual overthrow, and truth and piety exalted to eternal supremacy; shows the hand of the Best Being in the universe holding the reins of universal empire with unrelaxed grasp, and undisturbed serenity, over the leaping, roaring, boiling chaos of rebellion; teaches the loyal portion of humanity to be strong in hope and firm in patience, notwithstanding the cloud, the flood, and the furnace; and causes to fall upon our ear, with louder and clearer accents as the time approaches, the triumphant shout of ten thousand hallelujahs—hallelujahs in which we shall shortly mingle our voice, if we walk in the light of the beautiful Book, some of whose structural peculiarities I have thus endeavored to unfold.—The Rainbow.

The Bible is sometimes called the "Book of Books." This, for two reasons: (1) Because of its superiority over all other books. (2) Because it is literally one book made up of many books.

Plymouth, Indiana, July 8, 1903.

Word is again given out that the Pope of Rome is near to death.

Word comes from Bro. Joblin that he is improving slowly, which news will rejoice the hearts of all of our readers.

We learn from Mrs. T. L. Harwood that her father, Dr. H. Bowman, formerly of Ripley, Ill., died at her home in Waco, Texas, on June 20, 1903, at the aged of 84 years.

Russia still keeps the powers guessing as to what she will do in regard to leaving Manchuria. They are suspicious, and the United States, Japan and England are concentrating their Asiatic fleets in Chinese waters. This may be the means of Russia staying there, as her promise to get out is based on the actions of other powers. We can but watch for the outcome.

Enemies of the Cross of Christ.

The words selected as the foundation of my address are found in Phil. iii. 18 and read as follows:—"For many walk, of whom I have told you often, and now tell you weeping, that they are enemies of the cross of Christ;" and also the words of the Spirit by Peter's first letter, fourth chapter and 18th verse: "And if the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear?"

Another week has flown,—iniquity still rolls down our streets, the Lord still tarries; or, if he has come we are left out. And, in that case our doom is sealed. But, I believe and trust that he has not yet come; and unworthy and unprofitable a servant as I am, through rich grace in Christ Jesus I hope to meet him with joy.

When my eyes fell upon these Scriptures I was impressed with another note of warning; that I must again cry aloud and spare not, and not "confer with flesh and blood."

This is a startling statement to make respecting one of the churches planted by Paul, in his life time. My poor heart goes out toward him—I have been there myself and I can see the tears trickling down his dear old care-worn cheeks as he wrote to them as a prisoner at Rome, for the gospel's sake: "For many walk, of whom I have told you often, and now tell you even weeping, that they are the enemies of the cross of Christ." Just think of it! Enemies of the cross of Christ, in the church of God,—the Body of Christ. Had they apostasized from the faith? Not theoretically so far as I can see. "For many walk," ah, that's the kind of enemies he was deploring. There were many there who, instead of adorning the doctrine of the Anointed, disgraced it; and caused God's holy name to be blasphemed. I hope you will take particular notice of his reference to those who were

ENEMIES OF THE CROSS.

He did not hush the matter up. He speaks out plainly to them, who still kept in the narrow way, in terms of condemnation; while giving vent to his sorrow. Observe, too, that he had often done this before. Presumably, this was to warn them not to be influenced by the conduct of the parties complained of. The next verse says, "Whose end is destruction, whose God is their stomach, and whose glory is their shame." "They mind earthly things." He then continues: "For our commonwealth begins in the heavens; from whence also we are expecting a Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ, who will transform the body of our humiliation into a conformity with his glorious body, according to the energy by which he is able to subject all things to himself. Take notice that the apostle did not angrily denounce them, or attempt to overwhelm them with harsh invective. He was too deeply affected by their guilt to do this.

Jesus in the parable of the tares plainly teaches that there would be many who would profess his name, who would be strangers to him. He will well know of their existence, and their character; but he did not know them as part of his body, and as joint heirs with him to God's kingdom and glory. In Matt. vii. 21-23 we read as follows:—

"Not every one that shall call upon me, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? And in thy name cast out devils, and in thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you." Evidently there is much danger of self-deception. But let me say, The religion of the Bible is not responsible for hypocrites, or self-deceived professors that may at any time get into the church. No one ever denounced hypocrisy with more severity than did Jesus. We claim for Christianity the good it has done—the vicious it has reclaimed,—the proud it has humbled; the virtues it has cherished and its influence on the morals and deadlnes of mankind, as proof of its power. We claim not for it, the tares which have been sown in the field—an enemy has done this. I would not for a moment screen the hypocrite or be an apologist for deceit. What I mean is, that the religion of the Bible should be no more held responsible for hypocrisy than friendship is for

or the patriotism of Washington, for the treason of Arnold. There are those not in the church, who make false professions of friendship; men who make false professions of patriotism; who make false professions of honesty, temperance, chastity, and honor, as well as men who make false professions of religion. The existence of such in the Church is a subject of deep regret, and of tears. What a loss of strength to the cause of God and truth? How it tends to discourage those who with heart and soul long to see the whole household growing up into their Living Head in all things, to realize that as the months and the years pass away characteristic weaknesses crop out of some, as if there were in the gospel of God's grace to conquer them. And neither is there, under existing conditions. The truth of God has to be appropriated,—that is, assimilated before it can impart spiritual life or vigor. Mere intellectual acquaintance with it, be it ever so extensive, will neither generate nor sustain the begotten one. And this fact sends us back to the Word of the Spirit which says that it is "with the heart man believeth unto righteousness." And I solemnly believe that in many cases it is the lack of heart belief at the beginning, that is the cause of so many being found in the Church all down from apostolic times who, while ostensibly friends of Jesus, are really enemies. I do not say they mean to be, or determine to be,—or understand or realize that they are enemies. I charitably take it, that through mental or or both,—they never fully realized what a radical change of mind and conduct, and transfer of affection had to take place before a vital union with the Son of God could take place; before faith could be reckoned to them for righteousness. I have often said that the tendency of men's minds is to extremes. In other religious bodies we hear a great deal about conversion. By various means the religious faculties are aroused, and they are told to believe that Jesus died for them and paid it all,—and believe that he died for them personally, and pray for pardon, and believe they were pardoned, and they would be pardoned. And then by some mysterious spirit influence religion would be infused into them and make them happy, and this is called conversion, or being born again, or born of the Spirit. Oh, this is so wide of the truth in regard to conversion, that it is painful to speak of it. Paul says the

GOSPEL OF CHRIST

is the power of God unto salvation. That is entirely dispensed with. God's law of pardon, belief of the gospel, repentance toward God, and baptism into Christ for the remission of past sin. This law of pardon is not once referred to in the system I referred to. They make converts without reference to the Divine formula. They believe they are converted and that makes them happy. But what is their hope? Have they any well grounded hope? The gospel promises exceeding great and precious things, and those who comply with the conditions have a well grounded hope of what is promised. It is gloriously simple. I ask again what do the others hope for? I have referred to this in order to account for many being in the church at Philippi, and all down the ages who are really of Christ. I am fearful that, seeing the popular idea of conversion is not true,—they think that mental assent to the truth of the gospel and remorse, more or less, for sin, and baptism places them in a salvable state,—not realizing as they should the heart-belief called for nor the complete conversion, the actual change of mind and conduct that is required. If any man be in Christ Jesus, he is a new creature—mentally and morally, religiously—old things in that respect are passed away, and all things are become new. Brethren and sisters, this is a Scripture of awful importance! If one thinks and acts, and loves the same things as before, he is not a new creature! Old things have not passed away,—all things have not become new. If a person is just as cross and irritable as before, or as conceited, and proud, and stubborn, and headstrong, or just as reckless in matters of business, just as selfish, just as much given to exaggeration as before, and enjoys the same company as he did before, where does the great change appear? What say you, oh,—is he converted? Does he not need converting? If old things have not passed away, is he a new creature? There is but one answer. It is spelled by two letters. I do not know if he ever did know the blessedness of the man whose iniquities are pardoned, and whose sins are covered, or whether he has all the way through been deceived; or has through carelessness allowed to get control of him again,—But God knows all about it. In any event, he is in a deplorable state. If he has really and truly been an adopted child he needs to make haste to humble himself before God and repent, and through the great Mediator seek pardon, if perchance he may be granted repentance unto life. If he has been mistaken from the beginning, he must begin at the foot of the ladder. He needs to believe with the heart, reform, and obey before the Master rises up and shuts the door. But while we do not know the cause of such supposed cases, we can know, and do know, if we use the means, what their condition is. The Master says we shall know them by their fruits. "Do men gather figs of thistles, or grapes of thorns?" Our text teaches a powerful lesson by the fact that those who were enemies of the cross would in all probability be destroyed; certainly Paul did not anticipate their conversion. Oh, it is an awful delusion to imagine that one can presume on being saved with an unbroken heart, without self-denial and [illegible] fulness, and prayer, and with the [illegible] that God will not hold us to as

ENEMIES OF THE CROSS

THE OLD MAN

STRICT AN ACCOUNT

as represented in his Word; if we have believed the gospel and have been baptized! Baptism is of no benefit to us unless it means that we have died to sin, and risen out of the grave of water to walk in newness of life. There can be no walk in newness of life unless the mind is renewed,—it is the mind that directs the actions of the body. If the mind be not changed, it will direct the body as it did before. And this illustrates the words of Jesus,—By their fruits ye shall know them; that is those who claim to be in Christ. And one of the plainest indicators of what is within us, is the tongue. "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." This proves that what is most thought of, most esteemed, is most talked about. So the conversation of a person reveals to others what they really at heart are. We can all tell by this means what a person is,—spiritually, that is, whether he be spiritually minded or fleshly minded. What a spiritual indicator this is for me, and for each of you! Let us each turn on him or herself, and not go a step further without knowing just where we stand! It is a matter of solemn and serious import we are discussing, and one so common and so little thought of that it is next to impossible to get people to regard it with the attention its importance demands. Let those who have been called to holiness read the divine injunction not to let foolish talking and jesting be once name among saints; and ask if it is not often disobeyed; and ask if the reason of this is not because of a lack of spirituality. And ask if there be not less spirituality after every disobedience to this command? There is but one answer to this question. Then let us turn to the words of the Lord himself in Matt. xii. 36, 37 when he says that idle words are to be accounted for; and adds "For by thy words shalt thou be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned." The word argon rendered idle, means useless, unprofitable, hollow, barren, not profound. I appeal to you, if on this, the eve of the coming of that Lord, who said, "My words shall judge you at the last day," these words are allowed to have their due weight? Do the words of the Spirit uttered long ago, that despisers of the Word shall be destroyed, restrain us as they should? To despise the Word is to treat it as if of little account—not to obey it. These are by which we know men and women by their fruit. Beloved, when any who have named the name of Christ, for want of earnest heed to the things they have learned have let it slip, the prophetic utterances of long ago are fulfilled again:

THE SEARCH-LIGHT

SOME OF THE WAYS

"I WAS WOUNDED

in the house of my friends,—and he that hath eaten bread with me hath lifted up his heart against me." It becomes us all to remember that the mass of mankind form their opinion of Christianity from the conduct of its professors. They rarely go to the Scriptures for it. The ungodly will fix their attention upon one to his profession,—and never take account of a score of humble, honest devout believers. They have perhaps had dealings with him, and found him as close, as grasping, as unscrupulous as other men,—and this is all the evidence a man of the world wants,—and he will take no other. You may urge him to judge of Christianity by the precepts in the Scriptures, and that it is unfair to hold the system answerable for the faults of it professors,—but it will all be to no purpose. It is all that he sees; it is all that he will see,—all he can be made to see, and the reasoning falls upon ears and heart of Adamant. Praying that the God of all grace may so strengthen us as that we may keep to the narrow way of life, and never become a stumbling block to others,—I turn for a few minutes to my other text in 1 Pet. iv. 18 where it says: If the righteous

WHO IS A DISGRACE

SCARCELY BE SAVED,

where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear? These words contain two lessons,—one for the righteous, and the other for the sinners. The preceding verse teaches the same lessons in different words. It says, "For time is come that judgment must begin at the house of God—the Church; and if it first begin at us,—what shall [illegible] that obey [illegible] Wicked, [illegible] sinner appear?" The word scarcely does not suggest doubt as to the issue, only wonder. If we be righteous by faith in the Anointed, our salvation, however difficult, and apparently impossible, is as certain as Christ's own triumph provided we keep unspotted from the world. But the ungodly—where will he appear? Where will he find a place to stand and find an abiding place in the judgment? This is very similar to the 4th and 5th verses of the first Psalm. It says the ungodly are like the chaff which the wind driveth away,—therefore the ungodly in the judgment. I am almost convinced from the connection in which the words, "Because the time is come that judgment must begin at the house of God, occur that they refer to the fiery trials mentioned in the 12th verse, which were to try or test them; and, be a part of the judgment. Because it goes on to say they were not to think it strange that they suffer in that way, because they were partaking of Christ's sufferings, and in view of this they should rejoice because at the revelation of his glory they may be glad with exceeding joy.

SHALL NOT STAND

Were it not for the forewarning of the Spirit that at the last day a great falling away would take place—and that in the mad rush for wealth and pleasure and praise of man we are every moment in danger of being sucked into the great whirlpool and be for ever lost; yea, but for the timely warning of our Lord one would think that the signs of his near approach would keep us all on tip-toe with the expectation of seeing him; but no! The word comes to us from all directions that contact with the world of business and folly, and tradition has ruined not a few of those who once professedly espoused the cause of Christ. And it becomes more and more apparent that we are in imminent danger of by contact with the world; unless we constantly watch and pray. I do not know how it is with you,—but the parable of the ten virgins is not long out of my mind. I want to go in, but I know I shall not unless I am ready when the cry is made, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him." What a fearful proportion—one half were foolish, although they were all virgins, and all started out to meet him,—but while he tarried the lights of one-half of them went out, for want of oil. Brethren and sisters, let us take heed to this solemn warning and be ready to go in to the marriage supper of the Lamb. Amen.

Come Over and Help Us.

Yes, come over and help us in this our first Conference in Salem, O. If you had planned for a vacation spend it here. If you had not planned commence now to do so; a little rest from the cares of life will do you good. If the older ones cannot come and you have any young people that you think would enjoy or be benefited by the meeting, send them. All will receive a hearty welcome by the Salem Church, whether you are from Ohio or other states. We are but few in number, but for the week of Conference we will do as the disciples did, throw our houses open and have all things common. You will be met at the trains.

Our speakers will be Bros. Zilmer, Wagoner, Joblin, Robison and others, and I can assure you you will hear some good speaking when you hear them.

Again we would say, come over and help us to hold forth the word of life; that we may rejoice in the day of Christ, that we have not run in vain, neither labored in vain.

Your Sister,

Mary Knowles.

Debate.

A debate on the following propositions will be held at the Restitution Church, Moriah, Ill. commencing Aug. 4 and continuing four days. The Mr. Roberts mentioned is a representative of the Christian Church.

1. The Holy Scriptures teach that man is wholly unconscious and mortal in death. That is to say, from the time of his natural death to the time of his resurrection, he is incapable of exercising any mental or physical activity during that time.

L. E. Conner Affirms.
W. G. Roberts Denies.

2. The Holy Scriptures teach that man possesses an immorted nature and entity, which survives the natural [illegible]

[illegible] Christ of Jesus Christ, [illegible] ganized and set up on the day of Pentecost.

W. G. Roberts Affirms.
L. E. Conner Denies.

4. The Holy Scriptures teach that the kingdom of God, the kingdom of Jesus Christ, preached by Jesus Christ and his apostles, is yet future, and will be set up, organized and established at or after the second personal coming of Jesus Christ.

L. E. Conner Affirms.
W. G. Roberts Denies.

Method in Bible Reading.

Compare one Scripture with another. The Bible is like an inexhaustible mine: for, however much you take out of it, there is always much more left. So search diligently into its meaning. And to do all this, I need not say that you must be patient. Did it ever strike you that the Bible is not merely a collection of detached books, but really something like a body? You were not pitched together anyhow—legs, arms, hands, feet, and head—but every part of your frame was so fashioned as to belong to every other part, and your limbs were constructed after a certain definite plan, and all made to hang together. So with the Bible. The books of the Bible; written though they were by so many different authors, and some of them at such wide intervals of time, really are connected with each other by a living bond of connection, and form a beautiful whole. It will be well to think of this sometimes when you are reading the Scriptures.

A rich mind will cast over the humblest home a radiance of beauty and wholesomeness which an upholsterer or a decorator can never equal. Emerson says: "There is no beautifier of complexion, form or behavior like the wish to scatter joy, and not pain, around us."

The Vice of Intemperance.

If war has slain its thousands, intemperance has slain its tens of thousands. And where is the father who would not prefer to see his son shot down before his face than to behold him poisoned to a degrading death by those foul harpies whom legion has employed?

And who are the men whose fate has been thus sealed in hopeless ruin?

They are young. They were seized and bound while young. Hardly one in hundreds has passed the maturity of his earthly days. Did they begin as purposed, willing drunkards? Nothing was further from their thoughts or their desires. They have waded out most gradually, almost imperceptibly, into the deep. They once looked down upon the inebriate not with sorrow and contempt, as others now look down upon them. They started with the drop their fathers gave them, or with the offered glass of friendship, at noon or night, when they lacked the courage to refuse. The demon seized them when they were sheltered, as they thought, far from his abodes, and led them on, his purpose fixed, though yet unknown to them, for their final ruin.

Where did this work of ruin begin? Do not tell me at the tavern or in haunts like that. What gave to pure and innocent youths that taste for taverns? Where did they get the appetite which sought its objects and its pleasures there? You will be compelled to look back far beyond their public limit, and to feel and to acknowledge the responsibility often coming nearing home. The moderate drinker is but an indentured apprentice to the drunkard. A gracious divine providence may cripple his ability in his youth, and he may not thoroughly learn his trade. But the habitual glass, however apparently refined, signs his indenture. And no one who starts as an apprentice of the craft, or who leads another to take a single step in its clearly marked line, has power to define the limits of the course.

God grant that we may never live to see our sons and daughters, so precious in our sight, cast out to perish under the destroying power of this demon drink. But if we would avoid connection with the habit or the trade. Let us remember that he plucks the lambs from the flock at home, and selects the victims for his holocausts when they and theirs least expect his approach. If you will save the souls of your children from the destruction, or yourselves from all participation in the ruin, banish the "accursed thing" from your habitation; lock up the tempting bottles from their sight and neither have nor offer upon your tables this unnecessary inducement to vice, this direct provision for impoverishment of the health, poison to the bodies, and destruction of yourselves and your children and your friends.—Stephen H. Tyng.

The Doom of Egypt's Ruins.

The whole course of the Nile is of almost mystic beauty, but three views of signal charm stand out above all others—those near the sites of Cairo, Thebes and Philæ. Of all the ruins of Egypt, the latter are probably the fairest, and yet in a little while they will have become a memory, for the days of the Sacred Island have been numbered, and she will sink beneath the rising waters with her precious crown of sculptured stone when the mighty gates that are now being built to hold in check the river are once firmly closed.

And so will these fair temples pass away. Built two thousand years ago by the Greeks, after Egyptian models, but with some of the lighter features of their own more lovely art, these noble edifices have evoked the enthusiastic admiration of succeeding ages, and the fairy kiosk of Augustus which adjoins them—a tall cluster of tapering columns, lifting their slender beauty between the river and the sky—is perhaps the most widely renowned picture on the Nile. Egypt has lost the lovely island, but she has gained a rich province in its stead; for the pent-up waters have submerged the fair temples of the Greeks, and flow through long canals across the desert, to claim more than a million acres from its splendid wastes.—From the July Cosmopolitan.

Notice is given that taking effect on July 4, and until further notice, the Vandalia train No. 20 due to leave Terre Haute at 1 p. m. and train No. 22 due to leave Logansport at 5:10 p. m. will on each Saturday leave the points named one hour late, and remain one hour late to the end of their run. Connection made at Colfax with Big Four train No. 19, which will stop there on same days.

Poetry.

How About It Now?

You intend to do so many things—
Some time you will endow
The needy, with your gifts and deeds,
But how about it now?

You expect to help the poor, distressed,
You are debating how
To best assist and succor bless,
But how about it now?

You're going to ease the breaking forms
That bow with burdens low,
Because of envy's grasping greed,
But how about it now?

You're going to do, expect, intend,
Will this the Christ allow?
What will you say when he shall ask
But how about it now?

Christ in the Revelation, No. 10.

In chapter iii. v. 11, to the church of Philadelphia we read, "Behold I come quickly;" Diaglott, "swiftly," which would seem to be the correct idea, especially when we consider how swiftly one event follows another in fulfilment of prophecy, preparatory to the establishment of God's kingdom. And now during the turmoil and excitement, how opportune is the advice, "Hold that fast which thou hast, that no man take thy crown." And to give courage to his brethren he says, "Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God, and he shall go no more out: and I will write upon him the name of my God, and the name of the city of my God, which is New Jerusalem, which cometh down out of heaven from my God; and I will write upon him my new name." When Christ's name is written upon the overcomer, it will be an indication that he upon whom the name is written belongs to Christ. And the same will be true in relation to the city, he upon whom the New Jerusalem is written, will belong to the city; and will be a component part of the city. This is the city that Abraham looked for, a city that hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God. And he that looks upon this city, sees the finished handiwork of the Architect of the universe, for whose "pleasure they are and were created." This city will be the capital of [illegible] heaven and new earth, that John saw, after the first heaven and earth passed away; "and there was no more sea." Not the literal, that will be no more, but the symbolic sea; because it is written of Christ that "He shall have dominion from sea to sea, and from the river to the ends of the earth." Therefore it must be the symbolic sea, that will be no more, in the age to come. And this view is the most reasonable because this language occurs in the midst of symbols. That there is a symbolic sea, see Jer. li. 42, "The sea is come up upon Babylon: she is covered with the multitude of the waves thereof." This has reference to the army of the Medes and Persians. It is also written concerning Babylon, "I will dry up her sea, and make her springs dry," chap. l. 38. And in Hab. iii. 15, "Thou didst walk through the sea with thine horses, through the heap of deep waters." We see by these references that God said that he would dry up the sea of Babylon; and that it was accomplished by the army that destroyed her. And in the ode of Habakkuk we read, "Thou didst march through the land in indignation, thou didst thresh the heathen in anger.....Thou didst walk through the sea with thine horses, through the heap of deep waters." When God marches thus with his Anointed, he will dry up the sea of all nations; and it will be true as said by John, "And there was no more sea." John sees the city, "Coming down from God out of heaven." What John sees is the symbol; the thing taught is that God is the builder of this city; it first existed in his mind, before Adam was created. He was engaged in making ready the material, when he called Abraham to leave his country and his kindred; and when he brought Israel out of Egypt, and when he gave directions for the building of the temple, the material of which was to be made ready before-hand, so that no axe nor hammer was heard in the building of the typical temple. The voice heard, verse three, says, "Behold the tabernacle of God is with men." The words of this voice is an antidote for the erroneous doctrine that men go to heaven to dwell in the New Jerusalem. In v. 10 John is carried to "A great and high mountain," and there he sees the city descending out of heaven from God. The mountain of observation is the "Mountain of the Lord's house" which Isaiah, says, "Shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills, and all nations shall flow unto it." In ver. 9 the angel informs John saying, "I will shew thee the bride, the Lamb's wife." And he shewed him the city. Therefore the city is the bride, the Lamb's wife, whose light is like a jasper stone, clear as crystal. Her high wall is God's protection as he says, "For I, saith the Lord, will be unto her a wall of fire round about, and will be the glory in the midst of her." Zech. ii. 5. Her twelve gates will be the restored tribes of Israel, located on the four sides of the New Jerusalem. The nations of the earth will make known their petitions to the chief Council, the municipality of the world to come, through the several tribes of Israel restored. Therefore the names of the tribes are on the gates. They bring the means of access to the royal city. Ver. 14. The names of the twelve apostles are in the foundations of the city. This is made plain by reading what Paul says of the household of God who are "built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone." Eph. ii. 20.

The golden rule of verse 15 is to measure character—gold being the symbol of purity. Ver. 16, "The city lieth four square.....The length and the breadth, and the height of it are equal." Light is shed upon this statement by reading the account of the holy of holies in Solomon's temple. "And the oracle in the forepart was twenty cubits in length, and twenty cubits in breadth, and twenty cubits in the height thereof: and he overlaid it with pure gold." 1 Kings vi. 20. By comparing notes we find that the oracle, or most holy place of the temple, was typical of the New Jerusalem. Both were four square and gold entered largely into their composition. In the most holy place God met with Israel. "And there will I meet with thee, and I will commune with thee from above the mercy seat, from before the two cherubims which are upon the ark of the testimony, of all things which I will give thee in commandment unto the children of Israel." Ex. xxv. 22. In like manner in the New Jerusalem he will meet with Christ and the saints; and will give them com[illegible] not only for Israel, but [illegible] of the earth. Ver. [illegible] are the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Obituary.

Died suddenly in his home, Burkeville, Va., June 7, 1903, Melbourne Harding in the 48th year of his age.

The subject of this notice had been in partnership with his brother Solon in the mercantile business for 21 years, and between them no unpleasant thoughts or harsh words ever existed. Their beautiful friendship would remind one of the friendship of a David and a Jonathan.

It was quite a heart-rending scene for his brother Solon when he went to his room to awaken him from a supposed afternoon nap, to come to supper, to find him in the sleep of death.

To human eyes in perfect health, and in the strength of a noble manhood, yet, without a moment's warning he is cut down without seeming pain or struggle. Of a family of eight children he is the first to depart this life in forty years.

Blessed with an unusually happy disposition he was the joy and happiness of the home. It was hard to say "good bye."

We laid his manly body to rest beneath the sod of his own native land, surrounded by his life long friends, who watered his grave with their tears and covered it with the sweetest flowers.

In early life he gave his heart to Christ, confessed his dear name before men and was buried with him in baptism by Wiley Jones, of sainted memory. He lived a consistent member of the Christadelphian Church and died in the blessed hope of a glorious resurrection morning. With father and mother he rests from his labors "beyond the dark sea," and ere long the other seven of us will be gathered one by one.

We all gathered round his lifeless body to take a lingering look and with hope and confidence in God we expect to gather around his glorified body

"When the mists have cleared away."

"O how sweet it will be in that beautiful land,
So free from all sorrow and pain:
With songs on our lips and with harps in our hands,
To meet one another again."

FLORENCE ALLARD, Sec'y.

Following God blindly is not the courage of faith but the recklessness of credulity. A man of faith finds strength to go through hard places, not by shutting his eyes but by keeping them open, not by ramaining ignorant of God's ways but by watching him in all his ways.

For the Illinois Bereans.

I wish to remind the Bereans that the dollar pledged last conference is about due, and we want to have all funds in by August. Let us all attend to this and have a full treasury to work on at the next conference.

Have you acquaintances with false hopes of heaven, or who believe themselves immortal by nature, or who think their sins are forgiven, although they are ignorant of the Law of Pardon, or who have no use for a God who consigns sinners to Eternal Torment, and are ignorant of Jehovah's beneficent purpose to fill the earth with his glory and bestow Eternal Life upon believers of the Gospel, so they can enjoy it for ever? The Sermon of the Sprout.

I marveled at the dead of trees,
What miseries they have to bear!
How the storms flash the ugly thoughts,
Lest we have some light.
I wish the good Samaritan to be alive
And a doctor at the sight.

I marveled at the things that rise
From gifted man's compelling thought,
And then I watched a tiny sprout
Its way upwards through the soil—
Forgetting, it that tree it ever could,
Bear other fruits to God.

Selections.

The Church Not the Kingdom. No. 1.

"This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come." Matt. xxiv. 14.

"When ye pray, say, Our Father, which art in heaven, hallowed be thy name, thy kingdom come, thy will be done, as in heaven, so in earth." Lu. xi. 2.

Jesus was seated upon the Mount of Olives overlooking the city and temple of Jerusalem. The disciples had called his attention to the goodly stones and costly gifts which adorned the latter celebrated structure; and he had said, "There shall not be left here one stone upon another that shall not be thrown down."

"And as he sat upon the Mount of Olives, the disciples came unto him privately, saying, Tell us when shall these things be? and what shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world,' or age? These momentous questions our Lord answers by a prophecy remarkable for its minuteness of detail and the darkness of its shades. He first cautions them against deceivers and false Christs. "And ye shall hear of wars and rumors of wars; see that ye be not troubled; for all these things must first come to pass, but the end is not yet. For nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom, and there shall be famines, and pestilences, and earthquakes, in divers places. All these are the beginning of sorrows. Then shall they deliver you up to be afflicted, and shall kill you, and ye shall be hated of all nations for my name's sake. And then shall many be offended, and shall betray one another, and shall hate one another. And many false prophets shall rise, and shall deceive many. And because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold. But he that shall endure unto the end the same shall be saved. And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come." Matt. xxiv. 6-14.

This is only part of the long prophecy delivered by the great Prophet on this memorable occasion, but it is enough to impress every reader of the history of the last eighteen centuries with the fact that our Lord saw the entire future of the age which was then just beginning. The future story of the world and that of the Church until the time of the end is declared with an exactness for which omniscience alone can account; but the point to which attention is here specifically called is "the sign of the end." What is it? Not the growing prosperity and continuous successes of the Church until she shall have brought all nations into professed subjection to the truth; not the destruction of the mutual hostility of nations evidenced by beating their swords into ploughshares and their spears into pruning-hooks; and not the increased love of professing Christians to each other, and their ever-deepening consecration to him whose name they would bear; but wars, famines, pestilences, earthquakes, persecutions, betrayals, hatreds, false prophets, abounding iniquity, and dreary love. And amidst such trying and dismal circumstances this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come.

Such is the answer our Lord gave to the question of the disciples, "What shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the age?" It is, of course, needless to say that the unity of Scripture in this, as in other matters, is perfect. There is no representation elsewhere that suggests a different conclusion. Uniformly we get the idea of testimony borne to the truth amidst corruption and error, on the part of many of those who nominally receive it, and of growing ungodliness on the part of the world. There is no hint of general, far less of universal, belief of the witness-bearers; men will live and act as if there were no God, no Christ, no gospel, until this practical atheism shall culminate in a positive denial of the Father and the Son. The arrogant question of Pharaoh, "Who is the Lord, that I should obey his voice?" Exod. v. 2, will yet be asked by others with equal haughtiness; and the swelling tide of unbelief, which has already submerged many of our old ecclesiastical and doctrinal landmarks, will rise higher and higher until the multitude shall speak proud things, saying, "With our tongue will we prevail; our lips are our own; who is lord over us?" Psa. xii. 4, whilst they bend the knee to Antichrist, and bear the fatal mark of that fearful incarnation of Satanic malice against the anointed of Jehovah, the Man of his right hand. "Now the Spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of demons; speaking lies in hypocrisy; having their conscience seared with a hot iron; forbidding to marry, and commanding to abstain from meats, which God hath created to be received with thanksgiving of them which believe and know the truth." 1 Tim. iv. 1-3. "This know also, that in the last days perilous times will come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, trucebreakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof; from such turn away. Evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived." 2 Tim. iii. 1-13.

Jesus declares the grieving and mournful [illegible] in the presence of [illegible] gospel; nay, the most [illegible] of these characters are professors of the faith of Christ; they have a form of godliness whilst they so scandalously deny its power.

But let us suppose the case entirely reversed. Imagine that you find the Spirit speaking expressly in a totally different strain, and assuring us that the gospel of the kingdom shall not only be proclaimed as a witness to all nations, but that the testimony shall be at once credited by every man whose ear it shall greet. Let us grant, for the sake of argument, that there is sufficient reason to conclude, both from the nature of the gospel and the declarations of inspiration, that Church agency will subdue humanity to Christ and fill the world with light, liberty, and holiness. Let us imagine the issue of Christian ministry a Christianized world, every land basking in the Sun of Righteousness, every language sending up its daily anthems of adoration to the Savior, and every form of idolatry, superstition, injustice, oppression, and moral wrong absolutely abolished, from the rising to the setting of the sun; we ask, what then? Would not this satisfy the regal claims of Christ? Would not this fulfill all the predictions, on the pages of both Testaments, regarding his kingdom and dominion? and would not this entirely supercede the doctrine of the pre-millennial advent, and prove conclusively that those who taught it had all along labored under a mistake? I say No! emphatically, fearlessly, No! Were every people and tribe Christian tomorrow, not in name only but in reality, the kingdom of "the Son of Man" (Dan. vii. 9-14; Matt. xxiv. 29, 30; Matt. xxv. 31; Matt. xxvi. 64; Rev. i. 7; Rev. xix. 11, would be still future, all the prophecies that foretell and describe that kingdom would remain unfulfilled, and the doctrine of the pre-millennial advent would require to be taught as earnestly as ever. Still the prayer would ascend from the lips of faith, "Our Father which art in heaven, thy kingdom come," and still the saints would be looking for that blessed hope, even the glorious appearing of our great God and Savior Jesus Christ.

Let this point be well understood, for error here lies at the foundation of the popular theory respecting the kingdom of Christ. It is believed that the proclamation of the gospel, through the agency of Christian zeal and devotedness, will, at some future period, reach every ear; that its testimony will be accepted by all; and that then, as a consequence, the era of millennial blessedness will have dawned. But admitting, as we have done, merely for the sake of argument, that the first and second of these positions are true, we still deny the consequence which is supposed to flow from them. A world universally Christian is unimaginable before the return of Jesus in his kingly glory, but the golden age of David and Isaiah would be still future.

The current fallacy on this great theme arises from the confusion of things that differ, the conception that the universality of the Christian faith and the kingdom of God are one and the same thing. But this is a mistake. They differ essentially and circumstantially, and the dispensation of grace ends before the theocracy, or kingdom of God, casts its blessings over our long-afflicted world. The preaching of the gospel, then, however successful, by no means meets the claims of Messiah the Prince; his kingly rights [illegible] secured even by a w[illegible] is not the Ch[illegible]ch is in question here [illegible]ospel of the kingdom that we are to preach, and its voice, like that of the Baptist in the wilderness, is, "There cometh One after me." Yes, after me! It is, in solemn truth, a testimony in the wilderness that the Church bears; and if she would hear it clearly, distinctly, and perseveringly, she would say, "The kingdom long prayed for is coming, for the King is coming!" The rejected of men, the chosen of God, is about to take to himself his great power, and reign. The kingdom will come, as surely as the herald gospel is sent to the nations to announce it. It has been promised, and it will surely come. He who promised it forgets not the word that has gone out of his mouth, and upon which he has taught his people to rest. The golden age of humanity—the time of universal light and peace—of heaven's smile and earth's fruitfulness,—of the removal of the ferocity of wild beasts, and the more terrible tyranny of despots—of Satan's imprisonment and man's true freedom—will certainly arrive; for holy men of God, who spake as they were moved by the Holy Spirit, have repeatedly said so in many a passage warm with life and full of beauty. The signs of its approach are accumulating with wonderful rapidity; and if the Church were true to her profession and her Lord, she would hail them with profound gratitude and joy as the harbingers of glory to herself and of inestimable blessings to the world. One would think that the bare possibility of a new and better era would gladden every benevolent, every human heart; how much more its absolute certainty! For this is not a thing that may be; it is a fixed, determined, decreed, announced reality.

That there will be no chiliasm of human happiness; no cessation of wars and rumors of wars; no end of slavery, and injustice; no rectifying of the multitudinous errors that trouble and divide what is with bitter irony called the Christian world; and no setting up of the visible kingdom of God until the personal advent of the true King, is perfectly clear on the pages of the Holy Book; and there can be no greater mistake than to suppose otherwise.

Politicians may preach a political gospel of international peace, based upon the instincts of self-interest, and united by the golden bonds of commerce; but they are thoroughly mistaken. Selfish as men unquestionably are, even their selfishness is not strong enough to exorcise the evil spirit of discord that dwells in the human breast, and will dwell there until the true Sovereign of humanity returns to subdue all things to himself. Philanthropists may urge their touching sentiments, and appeal to the better instincts of men; but whilst the sentiment is admired and the appeal appreciated, cruelty, suffering, sorrow, groaning, sighing, grief, and the ten thousand calamities that make men shudder, will continue to run their accustomed course, until the Lord himself shall set his blessed feet once more upon our earth. And Christians may encourage each other in the hallowed missionary enterprise with brilliant pictures of complete success, the preachers of the gospel gaining the ears and winning the hearts of the eight hundred millions of idolators that put our very rationality to shame by worshipping that which is not God; but it is a hollow ground of encouragement, a deceptive hope, and a picture which will not be realized as a fact, for it is without the sanction and warranty of God's Holy Word. Nothing but disappointment can come of a belief which has a Divine foundation, a faith that has neither doctrine, promise, nor prediction on which to lay its hand.—Rainbow.

Beasts.

"I said in mine heart concerning the estate of the sons of men, that God might manifest them, and that they might see that they themselves are beasts. For that which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts; even one thing befalleth them; as the one dieth, so dieth the other; yea, they have all one breath; so that a man hath no preeminence above a beast; for all is vanity. All go unto one place; all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again. Who knoweth the spirit of man that goeth upward, and the spirit of the beast that goeth downward to the earth? Eccl. iii. 18-21.

It will be remembered that Solomon was endued with an unusual amount of wisdom. We are told in 1 Kings iii. 11, that he prayed for wisdom, that he might be able to rule Israel justly; and God answered his prayer, and because he had not asked for riches, or fame, or the death of his enemies; that he should not only have knowledge, but should be blessed with riches and honor above any who had been before him or any who should succeed him; and a sample of his wisdom was manifest in the way he decided who was the mother of the child, and his fame was so great that the Queen of Sheba, went to see him in order to know for certain as to the truthfulness of the report, and her decision was that the half had never been told. 1 Kings x. 1-7.

Dear brothers and sisters, do we imitate Solomon in our prayer? Do we only ask God's blessing in order that we may be able to do our duty as God's servants to the advancement of his cause, or do we pray for the perishing things of the world.

In Solomon's day there were people, the same as in our day, who thought and taught that mankind belonged to some class of a celestial being that though they were a little lower than the angels they were composed of a higher grade of nature than the horse or ox, and consequently they had an immortal soul or spirit that went to heaven at death, and all other animal's soul or spirit went down to the earth; and Solomon was so solicitous for their welfare that he was compelled to pray from the bottom of his heart, that God would show them and make them realize that they belonged to the animal kingdom, and by nature stood on the same plane. All had the same breath, all went to the same place, so he puts the question, Who knoweth that one went up and the other down? Then as now there were those who held to the old pagan or Egyptian theory of an immortal soul, a doctrine borrowed from the Egyptians during their sojourn in Egypt, and by mingling with heathen nations, and it being nowhere taught in the Old Scriptures which they had, or by any of the prophets, Solomon wanted to know how they knew it. The question is pertinent today while so many of the nominal churches believe and teach it as a fact. How do they know it? The Bible nowhere says or teaches it, and it is just as absurd to suppose that people go to heaven, by the parable of the rich man and Lazarus, Luke xvii. 19, or the vision of Paul 2 Cor. xii. 1, 2, as it would be to believe that beasts go to heaven, by the version of Peter, Acts x. 12. Yet, men, apparently of good judgment and sound mind will persist in teaching such foolishness. I can only account for it by applying 2 Thes. ii. 11, 12, and 1 Kings xx. 22, for it seems that the gods of this world have so blinded their eyes that they cannot see the light of him that lighteneth every one who will come to him.

That man and beast are alike in their physical makeup they are alike in their natural temperament. Webster in his old dictionary defines man by saying, "distinguished from all other animals, as well by the powers of reason and speech, as by his upon and dignified aspect." The Bible all the way from Genesis to Revelation compares not only mankind generally to beasts, but the church also, and even Christ is compared to a lamb and a lion, "The Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world," and "The Lion of the tribe of Judah." Rev. v. 5.

Of course there is a distinction made between the good and bad, between those who follow Christ, and those who follow their own fleshly promptings, the righteous are called sheep, the wicked goats, Matt. xx. 32.

The beasts are designated by their natural disposition, some are more ravenous than others. So it is with men, their natural disposition depends both upon their physical nature and their environments. The beastly disposition of mankind is manifest in nations, states, co-operations, politics and religion as well as in individuals. We see nations vieing with each other for mastery; for wealth and fame. The powerful swallowing up the weak, the late Philippine and South African wars as a sample. We see it in national and state governments, in excluding or granting favors, in denying statehood on account of politics, in denying emmigration of one nationality and admitting another, particularly in favoring the wealthy. We see it in trusts and corporations, the Pennsylvania coal mine strike last year is a fair sample. It will be remembered that public sympathy was in favor of the miners, so much so that contributions were made to aid them in holding out, and as a result when winter came and coal was needed the operators showed their beastly dispositions by refusing to supply the people with coal, like the infuriated beasts they sought revenge, when there were thousands of car loads of coal standing on the tracks they would not dispose of it until they were compelled by public sentiment.

Power or strength consists of physical and mental strength, and wealth, and rank or position. The farmer who keeps hogs will have some big strong ones, and some lame, and some small pigs. He takes out a pail of slop, pours it in the trough and there is a rush among the herd, the big strong ones will run over and tread upon the weak and small to get the slop. So it is with men; they all want the slop.

When one political party gets into power they turn down all the other parties, they want all the slop. The farmer who has a herd of horses will see them snapping at one another occasionally, but let a strange horse come into the herd and they all will attack it. You see an attorney go into another city to try a case and all the home lawyers will unite to beat the case, without any regard as to the merits of the case, manifesting the same disposition as the herd of horses, they want the slop. You see a preacher of some other faith go into a city where there are several churches and they will use all the power they have to kill his influence, and keep the people from hearing him, they want all the slop. We have heard a great deal of late about trusts, good trusts and bad trusts. What is a trust? It is only a combination of capital and labor to do a certain kind of business; the two farmers that unite and buy a thrashing rig, is a little trust, the two or more men that unite their capital and skill to manufacture thrashing rigs is a large trust, and if they use their means to advance mankind and labor it is a good trust, but if they use their skill and capital to crush out the weaker ones and monopolize that line of business, it is a bad trust, like the big hog they want all the slop.

We are now living in the age spoken of by Isaiah xli. 15, when they no more use the flail for thrashing. Progress has demanded "instruments with teeth." The stacks of grain have become "mountains and hills" and are blown through the wind stacker "like a whirlwind." We are living in an age when men run to and fro in the world, and the old modes of transportation do not meet the requirements, so we have the iron horse which runs like the lightning and roars like the lion. Isa. v. 28, 29.

We are living in the age when the people have made a covenant with death and hell, and say when the scourge comes, it will not hurt us; but Isa. xxviii. 18, says "And your covenant with death shall be dissolved and your agreement with hell shall not stand, when the overflowing scourges shall pass through, then ye shall be trodden by it."

The people that constitute governments [illegible] trust [illegible] are a civilized nation. But what is a stockholder in the liquor trust. They have all made a covenant with death and hell, and selling the poor and weak for money, sending thousands down to drunkard's graves annually, distressing the poor and needy for money, they know it is wrong but they want the slop, that beastly greed, that beastly ravenous appetite has robbed them of all human feeling. Satan the old serpent has led them to the top of the mountain, and they have accepted his offer and fallen down and worshiped him. Even professed Christians give their influence and sanction the death-dealing traffic. He that God speeds them on their way are equally guilty. How can they be so broken as to claim to be Christians, when they help to send their fellowmen to drunkard's graves? They certainly know that "No drunkard shall enter the kingdom of heaven." 1 Cor. vi. 10.

The question is, What are we going to do about it? How are we going to change the present existing circumstances?

The answer is, They can not be changed for the better, "evil men and seducing spirits shall wax worse and worse even to the perfect day." 2 Tim. iii. 13. The world can not stand only a hundred years, or a thousand, the progress of the world has passed the present conditions, and there will be no permanent remedy during the present age or Gentile reign. One man can not build and operate a system of railroads; one man can not connect the two continents by cable, it requires capital, skill and labor to build and operate the institutions that are required at the present day, and the present order of things will continue, no amount of clamor, no amount of legislature will block the wheel, there will be trusts, oppression and crime. Presidents and kings will be assassinated, anarchy will continue until he comes, who will execute "judgment with justice." Isa. ix. 7. Then we shall have relief, then "one shall build and not another inhabit. Then every one shall sit under his own vine and fig tree, and none shall molest or make him afraid." Micah iv. 4; Isa. lxv. 17-25. "Then they will beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning hooks," when he comes "whose right it is to reign." Isa. ii. 2-4; Ezek. xxi. 25-27. May God hasten the time is our prayer.

"The Restitution of all things Which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets."

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief in the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, prerequisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JULY 15, 1903.

THE Pope was reported as better a few days ago, but the last word received indicates his early death.

UNDER the heading "War Fever in the Orient," the Chicago Tribune prints the following dispatches, dated July 8, from Kin Chau, Manchuria:—

"Foreign and commercial officials at New Chwang and Port Arthur believe that the possibility of war between Russia and Japan is increasing steadily. The Russian policy is believed to be to hold the present positions in Manchuria, including New Chwang, and to take no steps to avert hostility with Japan, if it is assured that Japan will fight unaided. The war feeling among the Japanese in north China is intensifying.

Much will depend on the result of the conference of Russian officials, now in progress at Port Arthur. Those attending the conference are the minister of war, Gen. Kouropatkin; Admiral Alexieff, the Russian minister at Pekin and Seoul, the political agents in China and Corea, including M. Pokotiloff, recently Russian financial representative at Pekin; Gen. Dessino, the military agent in China; the civil and military officers Mukden, Harbin, and Kirin; and the administrator at New Chwang.

The proceedings of the conference are enveloped in profound secrecy, but it is believed that the Russians are considering war questions.

The Russian civil administrators with the governor general of New Chwang have commenced the erection of a government building designed to hold all Russian offices, including the telegraph and telephone departments, in the center of the foreign settlement, partly on land ceded by the Chinese, according to the Russian explanation, and partly on the public square, about which the foreign consulates are congregated. The residents of other nationalities are preparing to protest against this encroachment on the public square.

Japan, England [illegible] Russia.

An editorial in the Chicago [illegible]hume of July 8, gives the following opinion as to the situation in China and the far East:—

"Japan and England have presented a note to China asking that empire to require Russia immediately to evacuate Manchuria. An answer in five days is requested. The five days are up today. From the present position of the three powers toward each other the step to war is not a long one.

Russia by many Englishmen is considered the natural enemy of their country. The designs of the bear and the lion in Asia are supposed to be antagonistic in the near east, the middle east, and the far east. England is jealous of Russia's continuing expansion in Asia, and Russia is angry at England's persistent and, as it deems, gratuitous opposition to its plans.

In Japan the hatred of Russia is intense. When Russia muleted Japan of Port Arthur, the great fruit of the Chinese-Japanese war, the hatred nearly flamed into the blaze of war, and it was only by the utmost efforts of Marquis Ito that war was averted. In 1900 the Japanese soldiers distinguished themselves in the march to Pekin, overshadowing the exploits of the Russian troops. From that moment hatred of Russia in Japan has been reinforced by confidence.

In 1901 Russia promised Japan, England, and the rest of the world to move its troops out of Manchuria as soon as that province was sufficiently pacified. The world now comprehends that Russia intends never to move out. The realization has alarmed particularly England and Japan—the former because of its chronic suspicion of Russia and dislike of losing Manchurian trade, the latter because Manchuria is coterminous with the land boundary of the kingdom of Corea.

Now Corea is the granary of Japan. The Japanese people could not live unless they imported great quantities of rice from that country. Tens of thousands of Japanese have settled therein. Japan has always considered Manchuria primarily from the viewpoint of Corea; has always felt that Russian weight impending on Corea would mean eventually a Russian invasion of Corea and the threatening of the national life of the mikado's empire. A week ago, to its astonishment, Japan [illegible] only was Russia determ[illegible]. In a position threatening [illegible] Japanese granary, but that Russian troops had actually crossed the Yalu river on to Corean territory. That was too much. Immediately the note was presented requiring the evacuation by Russia of the whole province of Manchuria.

England and Japan having different reasons for disliking Russia, are allies in the far east. They may have concluded that the time has finally come to call a halt to Russian advance, and if the command to halt be not heeded, to strike. They may believe their adversary weaker and themselves stronger than will ever be the case again. It is not improbable that the present acute situation will result in war. Such a war would be one of the bloodiest and bitterest within the recollection of man. In the event of it, our state department would have but one proper course open to it—to issue an immediate declaration of neutrality and to see that the neutrality was not violated.

The Gospel the Power of God. Rom. 1. 16.

Power, "in a philosophical sense, is the faculty of doing or performing anything; the faculty of moving or producing a change in something, ability, strength."—Webster. Man does things by muscular power, or physical force, which is directed by the will. When he wishes to raise a house for which his physical power is not sufficient, he makes a combination of mechanical contrivances, by means of which he lifts the weight. Or, he wishes to transport himself through space more rapidly than he can move himself by the use of his limbs, and he makes a steam engine which can travel many times as fast as he can, which carries him at a much greater speed to his destination. This is mechanical power. When he lifts his hand, or a weight by main strength, we call it physical power.

There is also mental power, as the power to think, to reason. Power may be exerted by one man over another, either physical or mental. The latter is generally done by means of words. A word may be of great force, as when a command is given by one in authority to his subordinates. Some one is told that his house is afire. What a power that word is. How it moves to haste if perchance the danger may be averted. Some one receives word that he has fallen heir to a fortune. How that word moves on his mind, and controls his entire being. A promise, if believed, may be a great power to move a man. God made promises to Abraham, and the latter, being fully persuaded that what God had promised he was able also to perform, lived a life of obedience. So strong was the Word of God in which the patriarch put faith.

Paul was not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, for the reason that it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth. Rom. i. 16. This gospel, then, is the power which God employs to move men "unto salvation." The gospel is glad tidings. The feature which makes these tidings "glad," is the promise of salvation, or everlasting life; which promise, when believed in, inspires hope—"the hope of life eternal which God that cannot lie promised before the times of the ages." Titus i. 2. Paul was thoroughly familiar with the gospel, he believed it from the heart, and therefore he held the hope which it brings. It moved him to a life of self-denial. He was willing, as far as the matter rested with him, to preach the gospel anywhere, everywhere. For it he did not count his own life dear, but counted all things but loss for the excellency of Christ Jesus the Lord. Danger on land, at sea, among wild beasts, among his kinsmen according to the flesh, among false brethren, "bonds and afflictions—none of these things move me." Acts xx. 23, 24. Many and great as the difficulties might be, they had no power to "move" him away from the hope of the gospel or the defense of it. How did all this come about? By "the gospel which is the power of God." The gospel moved him. Did it do this without his consent? By no means. He had done some serious "reckoning" on the subject, and reached the conclusion that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy of a comparison with the glory that shall be revealed in us. Rom. viii. 18. Here notice what he says in Rom. i. 16. "For it (the gospel) is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." It is the power of God to the believer, truly, but not to the doubter or the unbeliever. Faith is, as it were, the switch by which the electric current is turned on and made to produce light or propel machinery. There is just as much capacity for power before the switch is turned as when it is on, but the turning of the switch is a very essential element. So with the power of God. It must be turned on; and this is the office of faith. Man when left to himself, cannot accomplish his own salvation. On the other hand, God does not compel him against his will to be saved; and if he fails to put faith in the gospel, it is not to him the power of God. "They have not all obeyed the gospel," is a plaint which we find more than once in the Bible. Solemn warnings are given against "an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God." Heb. iii. 12. And the "brethren" are cautioned to "take heed lest" such a disposition be found in them. This shows that while God's provision for man's salvation is ample, man may frustrate God's purpose for his salvation by unbelief, and thus become the cause of his own ruin. "He that believeth not (the gospel), shall be damned," is a statement of which we should never lose sight. Mark xvi. 16. The gospel is said to be "the gospel of the grace of God." Acts xx. 24. Paul said, "I do not frustrate the grace of God" (Gal. ii. 21), and also warned others "not to receive the grace of God in vain." 2 Cor. vi. 1. How could men "take heed" to that which they could not help? 2 Cor. vi. 1. How could men "take heed" to that which they could not help? How could such grave consequences as "damnation" attend the disbelief of the gospel, if its hearers were acting from necessity in either accepting or rejecting it? How could the apostle hope to influence the brethren against receiving the grace of God in vain, if they could not exercise their choice in this matter? Do not misunderstand me. No person can make God willing to save by believing the gospel and obeying its commands. But by so doing, he places himself where God can save him upon the terms he has proposed. Thus, then, the responsibility rests with man who can, if he will, believe the gospel, and be saved with everlasting salvation; or he can, if he prefers, refuse him that speaketh (Heb. xii. 25), neglect so great salvation (Heb. ii. 3), be condemned (Mark xvi. 16), punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord (2 Thes. i. 8, 9), and thus come to an inglorious "end." 1 Pet. iv. 17; Phil. iii. 19; Rom. vi. 21. Reader, do not think lightly of this matter. Do not neglect so great salvation which has been made possible at so great cost, which is so freely offered to you, and on such favorable terms. "To-day, if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts, as in the provocation." Heb. iii. 15.

Wisdom of Seirach.

CHAPTER 8.

1. Do not contend with a man of prevailing power, lest perchance thou fall into his hands.

2. Do not strive with a man of wealth, lest perchance he weigh too much for thy weight; for the golden weight hath destroyed many and hath inclined away the hearts of kings.

3. Do not contend with a tongueyman and do not heap wood upon his fire.

4. Do not sport with an unchastened man that thy progenitors may not be dishonored.

5. Do not reproach a man who is turning away from sin; remember that we are all under reproof.

6. Do not dishonor a man in his old age; for some of us also are growing old.

7. Do not rejoice over a dead person because we are all coming to an end.

8. Do not disregard the discourse of wise men because from them thou wilt learn chastening instruction and how to be of public service to great ones.

9. Do not fundamentally differ with the discourse of old men; yea, for they learned from their fathers; because thou wilt learn from them in an understanding way and how to give an answer in a time of need.

10. Do not kindle the coals of an obdurate sinner lest thou be burned with the fire of his flame.

11. Do not arise and stand away from the face of the Most High, that he may not be sitting in ambush, as it were, in thy mouth.

CHAPTER 9.

1. Do not be jealous of the wife of thy bosom, nor teach thyself wicked chastening instruction.

2. Do not give unto a wife thy soul for her to walk upon thy strength.

3. Do not go to meet a woman who conducteth herself as a courtesan lest perchance thou fall into her snares.

4. Do not dally with one who plays and sings, lest thou be taken with her artifices.

5. Do not get too well acquainted with a virgin, lest perchance thou stumble at her reproofs.

6. Do not give thy soul to harlots, that thou mayest not lose thine inheritance.

7. Do not be looking about in the narrow streets of a city, and [illegible] slums lest thou go astray.

8. Turn away thine eye from a woman of good form, and do not get alien beauty too well learned; for many have been led astray with a woman's beauty, and from this source there burneth like fire.

9. As a rule do not sent tl yself with a married woman, and do not go to a wine feast with her, lest perchance thy soul incline out toward her, and in thy spirit thou slip into loss.

10. Do not forsake an old friend; for the recent one is not on a par with him; new wine, a new friend; if it hath become old drink it with rejoicing.

11. Do not envy the glory of an obdurate sinner; for thou knowest not what his catastrophe will be.

12. Be not satisfied with the satisfaction of the irreverent: remember that until hadees (the grave) they will not have been justified.

13. Withhold thyself far from a man who hath qualification to commit murder, and thou wilt not suspect fear of death; and if thou shouldst approach him, err not, that he may not take thy life; know well that thou art walking in the midst of snares, and art walking upon the battlements of a city.

14. According to thy strength regard thy neighbors and take counsel with wise men.

15. And with men of understanding let thy discussion be, and all thy discourse in the law of the Most High.

16. Let justified men be those who sleep with thee, and let thy boast be in the fear of the Lord.

17. At the hand of artists will a work have been praised; and the leader of a laity should be wise in his word.

18. To be dreaded in his city is a chattering man of prominence, and the precipitate in his speech will have been hated.

[illegible] these two chapter[illegible]s today, whether tried by the highest secular philosophy or the theological standards of today, and the tropes by which they are illustrated though occasionally somewhat foreign to modern use, are always striking and well chosen to illustrate and send home the moral intended in each case.

For instance see in the 18th verse of this last chapter the demagogue and the political incendiary of our day here "pinned up" in the "bug-collection" of old Seirach's day; or the 3d verse of the eighth chapter which emphasizes the futility of contending with a man who has more tongue than brains or good purpose. Then in the second verse see how heavy the "golden weight" was then as now in the balance of justice and right.

There are twenty-four "do nots" in these two chapters, any and all of which are just as significant in their warning notes today as in the older prophet's day. That "ambush" figure in the last verse of the eighth chapter is a singular but most striking trope for so many "evaders" who perhaps have answered the divine challenge of "Come let us reason together," but like Job's comforters dodge the main issue, which is the truth always, and think to find cover under some specious lie to their own advantage, when stript of the rags of their hypocrisy they stand "naked as a pestle" before the bar of God's righteous arraignment.

WORSHIP.

"Oh, come let us worship and bow down. Let us kneel before the Lord our Maker; for he is our God, and we are the people of his pasture and the sheep of his hand. Today if you will hear his voice, harden not your hearts.

His Word has gone forth before him and we are commanded to worship him in spirit and in truth. Is it a grievous command or are we willing and ready to obey his command? To those that have been enlightened by his Word it is a great pleasure to meet and worship our great Redeemer who laid down the plan of salvation, and we cannot comprehend what he will do for us in the ages to come, for those that own him as their Lord, and saves us.

Let each one of us that has started in the work of the Lord, gird on the armor a little closer, that we may stand approved of him in that day, for the trumpet shall be blown, and they shall come which were ready to perish in the land of Africa, and the outcasts in the land of Egypt and shall worship the Lord in the holy mountain at Jerusalem. He will remember every one that has worshiped him in spirit and in truth, whether Jew or Gentile; for he will in nowise cast them off, for he is Lord of all his believing children. We know how often his chosen people, the Jews, would offer incense to strange gods, and forget him who had delivered them out of many dangers. So it is at this day with the Gentile nations. He has plead with them and laid down his precious life for them, and now he is about to be revealed from heaven, and who will believe the report, although his Word tells it over and over. Oh, if we could warn them to flee the wrath to come, but it has come to pass that the love of this present world has blinded and dwarfed their understanding, the tempter lures them on. Our Savior when tempted of Satan rebuked him, saying, It is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God and him only shalt thou serve. Then the devil leaves him and angels come and minister to him. Jesus will help us in great temptations if we call on him, for so it is written, As the Father has loved me, so have I loved you. Continue in my love. If ye shall keep my commandments ye shall abide in my love.

A certain orator informed the governor against Paul, saying, We have found this man to be a pestilent fellow, and a ring leader of the sect of the Nazarenes. Paul in his defense, says, I confess unto thee after the way they call heresy so worship I the God of our fathers, believing all things that are written in the law and the prophets.

I confess that I am not ashamed to believe the same things that Brother Paul did. Rev. iv. 10, says, "The four and twenty elders fell down before him that sat on the throne and worshiped him that liveth forever and ever and cast their crowns at his feet or before the throne, saying, Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive glory and honor and power, for thou hast created all things and for thy pleasure they were created," and it is our privilege to worship thee thou King of kings and Lord of lords.

M. ELIZABETH KNOWLES.

WORSHIP.

Jehovah, the Creator of heaven and earth and all that in them is, makes the request that man, the greatest of all his works, shall worship him. He is divine, all powerful, able to create and able to destroy, and his works declare him such. When he created man he held out life to him for obedience, man disobeyed and lost life, but God promised a Redeemer, and by the obedience of faith, we can attain unto life, and it is all of God's great love, for without him we are nothing. He reaches down to man, the creature of his hand, in loving kindness, and leads him step by step all the way. Do we realize how great a thing it is that God offers divine life. Do we dwell upon the sublimity of this offer to appreciate the magnitude of it, life like the years of God absolutely without end? No wonder the prophets of God fell down before him. But what is it to worship him, it is to adore, to praise, to honor, to offer thanksgiving, to supplicate, to confess, to ask forgiveness. To adore him we say, Thou art my God, the only living and true God, thou art my rock, my fortress, my strength, my high tower, my salvation, and there are none greater than thee, I will love thee with intense devotion, and will extoll thee all the days of my life. To praise him, we say, Oh God, how excellent is thy name, how marvelous are thy works, how righteous are thy judgments, who is like unto thee, when I dwell on the works of thy hand I am lost in wonder, love and praise. I will be glad and rejoice in thee, I will sing praises unto thy name. Oh, thou Most High. To thank him, we say unto him, we thank thee, oh God, for the great and precious promises made unto the fathers of the Hebrew nation, that by these we might become partakers of divine nature, we thank thee for the gift of thine only begotten Son, that through the blood of the everlasting covenant we can draw nigh unto thee, and cry, Abba Father, we thank thee too for thy watchful guardian care over us by night and by day, supplying our every need. Blessed is the man that putteth his trust in thee. To supplicate is to beseech or entreat earnestly a favor. We must acknowledge our weakness, our inability to do any thing of ourselves, acknowledge our need of a Savior and his power to save, and entreat him to keep us by the power of his Word. Then there is confession, and when we think how often we transgress, we feel like saying with Paul, Who shall deliver us from this body of death? Yes, he realized that when he would do good evil was present with him, and so with us, our sin is ever before us, and oh, how often we need to go confessing, but how precious the promise, that if we do, he is able and willing to forgive, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Confession and forgiveness go hand in hand, and when we think how often we have to ask forgiveness, it is then we feel, how gracious is our God, and how full of tender mercy toward us, I realize as never before, that there is nothing so elevating, so ennobling, so inspiring, so sublime, as true and earnest worship of God. Oh! let us all worship God in spirit and in truth. Amen.

MRS. MATTIE NEELS.

Announcement.

On account of the recent high water at Kansas City, it is thought best to change our Conference, to Severance Kan., commencing Aug. 28, and continue ten days. Severance is 25 miles west of St. Joseph, Mo. on the Grand Island Railroad. Those coming from points in Missouri will change cars at St. Joseph Union depot, and come direct to Severance. The tent ground is five blocks from the station. Let all who expect to attend notify me at Ransom, Kan. at once. Board and lodging has been arranged for at a price not to exceed 60 cents a day. Board and lodging is arranged for with parties near the grounds, thus avoiding the disagreeableness of looking after bedding and sleeping in tents in case of wet weather.

The mornings will be taken up with praise and song services and Bible readings, and the brethren present will arrange for the afternoon service. The evening and Sunday services will consist of the following discourses:

Friday evening, General talk.
Saturday, Why I believe the Bible.
Sunday morning, The Atonement.

The Battle in England.

The real nature and importance of the struggle which English Baptists and other non-conformists are making against the Education Bill is not yet widely appreciated in this country. If a single case should occur in Boston in which Baptists or Congregationalists or Methodists should be obliged to pay taxes for the support of a school in which the doctrines and practises of the high church Episcopalians or Roman Catholics are instilled into the minds of the people, there would be an outcry all over the country. But this is just what the Education Act proposes to do to all the Baptists and Independents and Wesleyans and all other non-conformists in England and Wales. The act is an anomaly in this enlightened age of the world. It is a relic of the dark ages dropped into the current of modern civilization. It cannot stand in the light of these days; but it may cause our non-conformist friends in England much suffering, and they ought to have the sincere and active sympathy of all friends of religious liberty in their struggle against it.—Watchman.

Thy Kingdom Come.

Thy kingdom come! we watch, we wait,
With fervent lips we pray;
Ride on O King, in regal state,
Oh, come, the glorious day!

Oh, joyful scene! Oh, world-wide swell
When lea, and stream, and main,
From earth to earth, from east to west,
Shall own thy peaceful reign.

Speed thy glorious kingdom come,
As comes the morning ray,
And fills heaven's wide expanding dome
With pure and peerless day.

We watch, we work, for thee alone,
On thee, our help, we call;
O King of saints, come, take thy throne,
Triumphant, Lord of all.

The Messiah of the Prophets is to be the King Over all the Earth.

It is more than forty years since I commenced to show the people of Cleveland that the everlasting home of God's saints is to be in a kingdom which he intends to set up on the earth. And that it is to embrace all of its territory. And that the very Jesus who was born at Bethlehem, and cradled in a manger, and toiled as a carpenter till he was about thirty years of age, and who was then baptized of John in Jordan, and was made the Anointed of God by Holy Spirit, and then delivered the message from God to the people, respecting his coming kingdom, and urging them to repent in view of it. He travelled on foot over the hills and valleys of Judea; and all Galilee,—teaching in their synagogues and preaching the glad tidings of the kingdom. I wish you to notice that Jesus did not stop to explain what the kingdom of God was. The explanation is that God had for ages been promising to establish a kingdom of his own on earth; with a Son of David on its throne who should occupy it for ever.

Before referring to the Messianic promises in the Old Testament, I wish you to identify the Jesus we have been speaking of in the New Testament, as the future occupant of the throne of God's everlasting kingdom on earth. I want it to be proven to you by the New Testament, because in that way we discover that it takes both Old and New Testaments to make one book of God. In other words I wish you to see that although the Mosaic laws and ordinances were nailed to the cross of Christ and a new and living way has been introduced has been offered,—the same is taught in the New as in the Old. The first testimony I have to offer is found in Luke i. 26-33, where we read that the angel Gabriel was sent from God unto a city of Galilee, named Nazareth, to a virgin of Israel espoused to a man whose name was Joseph, of the house of David; and the virgin's name was Mary. Being troubled at the angel's approach, he said to her, fear not Mary; for thou hast found favor with God, and behold thou shalt conceive in thy womb and bring forth a Son, and shalt call his name Jesus, and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David, and he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end." This leaves no room to doubt what the destiny of Jesus is to be. Further on in this first chapter of Luke we find Zacharias, the father of John the Baptizer, full of Holy Spirit prophesying of Christ, as follows: "Blessed be the Lord God of Israel; for he visits and redeems his people, and raises up a horn of salvation for us in the house of his servant David; as he spake by the mouth of his holy prophets, which have been from the beginning of the age.....to perform the mercy promised to our fathers,—and to remember his the oath which he sware to our father Abraham," etc. This additional testimony shows that God had promised Abraham something and confirmed it with a oath, and also that all God's prophets in Israel had uttered things hundreds of years in advance about this child to be born of this virgin. We will now see what great things were promised to Abraham and confirmed by an oath. In Gen. xii. we learn that God called Abraham out from his native country and kindred to a land that would be shown him,—saying "I will make of thee a great nation, and I will bless thee, and make thy name great, and thou shalt be a blessing, and I will bless them that bless thee, and curse him that curseth thee;" what besides? Why it adds, "And in thee shall all families of the earth be blessed." He did not know where the Lord was going to take him,—but he started at the word go; and he was directed by God to Canaan. On arrival there the Lord told him to look from the place where he stood, "northward, southward, eastward and westward; for all the land which thou seest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed for ever." Now friends, is of no account here, and so I refer you to the 3rd of Galatians and let Paul tell you who this seed of Abraham is who is in partnership with Abraham in these great promises of land, and is the means of blessing to all the families of the earth. In Gal. iii. 16, the Apostle Paul says, "Now, to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, and to seeds, as of many; but as of one, and to thy seed, which is Christ." That settles it. The Seed of Abraham coupled with him as joint-heir is Christ. It is this Seed who is to bless all the families of the earth—the Savior. It may sound strange to some perhaps, to hear me say that the gospel was preached away back there, but it is true. These covenanted blessings to Abraham and his Seed, the Christ, was the veritable gospel Abraham believed, and was in, and by which he will be saved. But as this will doubtless be almost incredible to some, I must get Paul to bear the responsibility of this also. This same third chapter of Galatians is the Scripture I appeal to. "And the Scripture, foreseeing that God would justify the nations by faith, preached beforehand, the gospel unto Abraham, saying," (now we are going to hear what the gospel preached to Abraham was:) listen, saying, "In thee shall all nations or families be blessed)." The very words I quoted from Gen. xii. 3. The word gospel means good news, or glad tidings. The terms of the covenant are explicit. It deeds the territory in question to Abraham and Christ forever. You see from this that that involves everlasting life. As Abraham has been dead nearly four thousand years, it involves a resurrection, in order to inherit

HOLY COVENANT,—

GUESS-WORK

JUSTIFIED BY FAITH

THE ESTATE PROMISED HIM.

One not familiar with this line of thought will perhaps be wondering what part the territory promised has to play in the scheme for blessing all the families of the earth. To this I reply,—we saw that Jesus is to have the throne and kingdom of David and occupy it forever; and the land deeded to Abraham and Christ, is the land once occupied by David's kingdom and throne; and Jerusalem the seat of his government. Let us now consider some of the things God's prophets have said respecting that kingdom and its King. We are told in the first of Acts that he who visibly ascended from the Mount of Olives and a cloud received him out of sight, shall so come as ye have seen him go into heaven. This language is too plain to be mistaken. He went away literally, and he is going to return literally. We have a magnificent description of his return in power and glory from the lips of Jesus himself in the 25th of Matt. v. 3, "When the Son of Man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then, when he comes in his glory, and all the holy angels with him—that is the time when he sits upon the throne of his glory." And v. 34 says, "Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world or ages." Remember he comes here, and having come here with all the holy angels,—he will be here, and seat himself upon his throne of glory here; and welcomes all the blessed of the Father, to share the honor, power and glory of his kingdom here on earth, and thus they realize the fulfillment of his Word Matt. v. 5, "Blessed are the meek, for they shall not heaven above. Now we have found that the everlasting kingdom of God the righteous are to inherit in co-partnership with Jesus, is on this earth. We found it in the New Testament,—we have it direct from the lips of Jesus. Now please follow me back to the Old Testament and see the same grand truth vividly set forth. In Isa. ix. 6 we find this striking prophecy of 700 years before Christ, "For unto us a child is born, (prophetically—to be born) unto us a Son is given, and the government shall be upon his shoulder; and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, the mighty God, the everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace. Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even for ever. The zeal of will perform this." Here we find the same throne and the same child occupying it on the same earth and the same land and same city, as we have found in the New Testament. And in the 72nd Psalm we find the inspired penman saying, "He shall come down like rain upon the mown grass, as showers that water the earth," so refreshing and fructifying shall his presence be: and that he will break in pieces the oppressor; that in his day the righteous shall flourish, and abundance of peace as long as the moon endureth. He shall have dominion also from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth. All kings shall fall down before him; all nations shall serve him; "for he shall deliver the needy when he crieth, the poor also and him that hath no helper. His name shall endure for ever; his name shall be continued as long as the sun; and men shall be blessed in him; all nations shall call him blessed." Friends, between the original promise that in Abraham and his seed all nations shall be blessed, and this psalm I have been quoting from something over 1200 years had elapsed, and we find that God in all that time had neither nor altered his purpose to bless all nations in Abraham and his seed; and a thousand years still later we find in the words of Jesus a description of his coming to inaugurate that age of blessedness; so we have positive evidence down to the time of Christ that God had not changed his mind. Enough has been proven to show that the world cannot be blessed agreeable to God's promise except by means of a Divine government in place of human governments—and that he foresaw that this would be the case, we have proof in the promise to Abraham and his seed, the Christ, of land for the kingdom to be established upon.

IN LIKE MANNER

INHERIT THE EARTH;"

CHANGED HIS MIND

I will now take you to the time when Jesus had finished the work given him to do at his first advent, and was about to [redacted] heaven. He had to [redacted] disciples thrones, [redacted] and reign over a tribe of Israel, when he assumes his royal prerogative. And as he led them out to the Mount of Olives,—or rather having led them thither, he was asked: "Lord, will thou at this time restore again

THE KINGDOM TO ISRAEL?"

This was a very natural question to ask after all that had passed, including their own tours to announce the coming of God's kingdom. They seemed to realize that some startling thing was about to happen; and so in anxiety and wonderment, they said, "Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?" The answer our Lord made was this, and I beg you will listen closely to see whether the kingdom was about to be set up or not. He said, "It is not for you to know the times or the seasons, which the Father hath put in his own power." But, something else was about to happen. "But ye shall receive power after that the Holy Spirit is come upon you; and ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth." They had to be equipped for it and then commence

WITNESSING FOR JESUS RIGHT

where he had been put to death 50 days before and throughout Judea, Samaria and in all the earth. There was to be no kingdom set up in the near future, but they had to preach Jesus, that he was alive again, and that he would return at the appointed time and set up the kingdom God had promised him. Also, if they wanted to live and reign with him when he comes, they must believe the good news, reform their lives, be baptized for the remission of past sins,—then live godly lives till Jesus comes. And we have shown from Matt. xxv. 34 that it is when he comes in power and glory at the end of this age that the kingdom is set up. Do you all realize what the long delay—nearly two thousand years, was for? It was for selecting and training people to reign with Christ when he comes. In Acts 15th chapter it is called taking out a people for God's name. This means those who believe the gospel, reform their lives, and put on Christ by baptism become children of God, are legally now, and are constitutionally in God and Christ,—with the right of being physically or wholly, complete sons of God by attaining to his everliving nature of existence. The officials of the government of the United States, just one of the governments of earth embrace a vast number of men,—and this will give an idea of the innumerable company it will take to rule the whole earth under the King of kings and Lord of lords. Every one of them will be immortal and glorious like their Lord. But in order to become such they have to purify their hearts by obeying God's truth now. Every one who is converted, changed in mind and conduct toward God, through the influence of the Spirit of truth, the gospel,—yes,—all such become candidates for candidates, I say, but every one can make his election sure by holding fast and walking worthily till Jesus calls for them, or to the end of mortal life. All can see from what has been said that we hold little in common with other religionists. The reason is this, we believe nothing but what we read out of the Book of God.

CHILDREN OF GOD

I will now move off in another direction. You all know Jesus taught us to pray, "Thy kingdom come," when we offer that prayer we ask God to set up the kingdom we have been talking about. In all the Book of God there is but one kingdom of God spoken of. Just one. It is always kingdom; never kingdoms. The motive, or rather some of the motives we have for wanting that kingdom to come, are that all human efforts to convert the world have failed. The world can never be morally better than it is today by human instrumentality. The Lord himself has said that he will find the world in the condition it was in, in the days of Noah, when he comes, instead of being converted. Another for praying for the kingdom to come is, that it is then, if faithful, we shall enter the kingdom, and not only enter it, but reign in it. Paul says if we suffer with him now, we shall reign with him then. Speaking from heaven to John Jesus says, "Hold fast till I come, and to him that overcometh and keepeth my works unto the end—to him will I give"—what will thou give, dear Lord? "To him will I give power over the nations." Every overcomer is to be a king or a priest unto God and reign on the earth. Once more he speaks in Rev. iii. 21 on the same subject, saying, "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne." That is exactly what will happen to every overcomer. They will sit down with Jesus on his throne just as he is set down in his Father's throne. Oh! what an exalted privilege! What an eternal weight of glory!!!

Still another line of testimony showing the universality and reality of God's kingdom. In Dan. ii. 44 we read that at a time faintly indicated, "Shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed, and the kingdom shall not be left to other people;" that shows that those to whom Jesus says of my Father, inherit the kingdom, are all immortal. They hold office for ever. The kingdom never changes hands. But what next? it,—the kingdom God will set up,—that shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms—on earth,—and it—God's kingdom shall stand forever." You are aware that many suppose that the church is the kingdom, and was set up on the day of Pentecost, but has it destroyed all the kingdoms of men? Did the church ever destroy any one kingdom even in the 1900 years? If not, we know the church is not the kingdom.

COME YE BLESSED

In Dan. vii. 18 we see the prophet had a vision of the Son of Man coming with the clouds of heaven, and there was given him dominion and glory, and a kingdom—how large?—"That all people, nations and languages should serve him; his dominion is an everlasting dominion which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed." There is room in the world for only one kingdom of that description; there is no territory for any other,—no subjects for any other. Four verses further on says, "The saints of the Most High shall and possess the kingdom for ever, even for ever and ever." And 9 verses further on it says, "And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom, under the whole heaven" [illegible] above the whole heavens, "shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him." Nothing can be more certain than that they can never be anywhere else for ever. I have proven that the kingdom of God will be just as literal as any kingdom now on earth, because the kingdoms of men have to be removed to make room for it; at first the land of Canaan was promised as the territory proper, to Abraham and Christ; but in the second psalm God says to his Son, ask of me, and I will give thee the nations for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession, and that accounts for Daniel's saying it shall be under the whole heavens. Having seen that God's King is to sit on by absolute promise, we would expect his seat of government to be at Jerusalem. And Isaiah says that is just where it will be. He says the law of the Lord shall go forth from Mount Zion and the Word of the Lord from Jerusalem to the uttermost parts of his possessions. And Jeremiah iii. 17 says At that time they shall call Jerusalem the throne of the Lord, meaning of course that his throne will be located there. And in this connection, how interesting to remember that Jesus speaks of Jerusalem as the city of the great King, alluding to himself in that modest way. In teaching this Old and New Testament gospel we have uphill work,—for every body almost thinks he lies of off to heaven at death, if he does not descend to hell; but we are obliged to teach what God has revealed. There is no other source of information on the subject; and we have for it, that in his day no man had ascended to heaven; and more than that, he told even his disciples that they could not come where he was going, but that he would return to them.

DAVID'S THRONE

Lest I weary you, I draw to a close. Before leaving for the court of heaven Jesus said this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness. For a witness! These who accept it by faith and obedience it will witness for; those who reject it, it will witness against; how so? Jesus said my Word shall judge you at the last day. I pray God it may condemn none of us. It is a serious matter to reject his loving voice, "Come unto me;" that is an invitation to his kingdom and glory. But we are all flesh and blood and that is not eligible to the everlasting kingdom. Keeping that fact in mind, think of his words, I am come that ye might have life. Think of him at the last supper saying this is my blood of the new covenant shed for you,—think of his sweating as it were great drops of blood. Think of his prayer, "If it be possible let this cup pass from me, nevertheless, not as I will, but as thou wilt." Think of him on his mock trial, see them spit upon him, crown him with thorns, flog him till they plowed long furrows upon his back,—see him fainting under the cross on the way to Calvary—hear him cry, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? Hear him pray for his murderers, Father, forgive them, they know not what they do; and finally say: It is finished, after three dread hours of agony. All this was to conquer death and bring life and immortality to light for us. He promises yet to raise up at the last day all who believe in him. Is there one sin-sick soul in the house tonight who will forsake all to follow Christ through evil report or good? If so, there is a glad announcement for you in 1 Thes. iv. 16, 17, "For shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord. Wherefore comfort one another with these words." Yes; with these words,—not some other words. This is he who has conquered death, and holds the keys of the grave that this speaks of. He is coming in person to superintend this work. The dead in Christ rise first, the living in Christ are then changed in a moment—in the twinkle of an eye. They rise to meet the Lord in the air, who is on the way to meet them. Oh, what a meeting! The saints of all ages meet for the first time. Oh what greetings! From east and west they come, from north and south, and every clime they come. O it is the Lamb and his Bride,—the marriage takes place,—they are like the Lord glorious in their apparel; and are ever with him. Glorious consummation! Soon may it come; and may we all be there. Amen.

AGONY IN THE GARDEN,

Among the Indiana Churches.

Believing that the brethren and sisters in Indiana will be interested in a brief report of the work in the various churches, and that such reports will serve to cultivate the feeling of brotherhood, and to bring all our members closer together, I shall from time to time give such items of information as seem calculated to operate toward that end.

The Church at Roll has supported a Sunday School for nearly two years. An active part is taken by most of the members. The school has a membership of sixty, and is held each Sunday forenoon. The brethren have made great improvements in the church building at Roll, having furnished it with folding chairs, papered the walls, and painted the exterior. It presents a good appearance both externally and internally. The preaching services, which are held the first Sunday in each month, are usually quite well attended. There is a number of energetic workers in this Church. We also have opposition at this place. Church people and Sunday School workers warn their neighbors and children against attending our meetings, telling them we are "Infidels," "do not believe the Bible," and that kind of talk. Brethren, let us be active and hopeful.

The little class at South Bend, a busy manufacturing city, has faithfully and with commendable zeal against great odds, have shown their interest in the cause of truth by contributing of their means for the support of the gospel, have kept up their hall rent for preaching once a month, and Sunday School and Bible study each Sunday. A few strangers attend the preaching services from time to time. We trust we may sow some seed that will grow and produce fruit to eternal life. "Thou hast a little strength, and hast kept my Word, and hast not denied my name." Rev. iii. 8. May this be true of the Church at South Bend.

Plymouth is our home, having lived here most of the time since March 1898. Of course, we are interested in the work at Plymouth. This is historic ground. Here and in this vicinity many [redacted] have faithfully proclaimed [redacted] word of life. It is not possible for the writer at present to attend the Sunday services, but we greatly enjoy the Thursday evening meetings for Bible study. We never leave the meeting without taking with us some new truth (new to us) that refreshes and cheers us on the way. Bro. Wince preaches for this church on the third Sunday in each month. Other Sundays are occupied by some of the brethren of the Church. Sunday School is held each Sunday. There are some faithful workers in this Church. We are very much encouraged by the payment of the debt which for years rested on the building. The latter is a very suitable place of worship.

Elections in Germany.

Returns from the Reichstag election last week in Germany indicate that the Socialists have almost swept the country. Their vote has increased from 2,107,000 in 1898 to nearly 3,000,000 at the present time. They are now not only the most numerous of all parties, but are approximating to the strength of all the other parties combined. In Saxony the Socialists have polled a clear majority of all the votes cast. Despite inequalities of apportionment, they have probably this year increased their representation in the Reichstag from fifty to eighty members, which makes them second only to the Clericals in Parliamentary strength. The Imperial government can hardly afford to ignore this rising tide of socialism, which apparently has not yet reached its high water mark.—Zion's Herald.

Scriptures Opened.

A third edition of the above named work is just out, and ready for delivery. This book has been before our readers so long now that its worth is well known. The author is Robert Ashcroft. Popular Lectures by M. Joblin.

Brethren and Sisters, Have you loved ones who think sincerity will save them? Have you friends who think they worship acceptably while ignorant of God's promises? Have you acquaintances with false hopes of heaven, or who believe themselves immortal by nature, or who think their sins are forgiven, although they are ignorant of the Law of Pardon, or who have no use for a God who consigns sinners to Eternal Torment, and are ignorant of Jehovah's beneficent purpose to fill the earth with his glory and bestow Eternal Life upon believers of the Gospel, so they can enjoy it for ever? If so, send for Popular Lectures by Bro. Joblin, entitled:—"The Kingdom of God;" "Old Mother Earth to Be Born Again;" "Strangers from the Covenants of Promise;" "Vain Worship;" "No Immortality Out of Christ;" "Hope Begotten by the Resurrection of Christ;" "God's Love and Solicitude for Mankind;" and "What Shall We Do to be Saved?"

Each Lecture of 16 pages $1 per 100 post free; or an assortment of the whole, same price. Address M. Joblin, 634 Woodland Av., Cleveland, O.

The Restitution.

"The Restitution of all things Which God hath Spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets."

VOLUME LII. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JULY 22, 1903. NUMBER 28.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Poetry.

Sincerity.

Prune thou thy words; the thoughts control
That o'er thee swell and throng;—
They will condense within thy soul,
And change to purpose strong.

But he who lets his feelings run
In soft luxurious flow,
Shrinks when hard service must be done,
And faints at every woe.

Faith's mightiest deed more favor begets,
Where hearts and wills are new
[illegible]
In such bloom their hour, and fade.

Palestine Letters.—No. 6.

Editor Citizen:

The streets of Jerusalem are very narrow and generally very dirty; some of them being perhaps not more than six feet wide between the walks and many arched overhead, at so great a distance that the light of day is so much excluded that it is necessary to resort to artificial light in the shops. In one place I noticed that it was so dark in the middle of the day that I could not see my hand before my face. In some places these arches are so low that one has to stoop in passing, and this in a public street. Of course these arches, evidently were not so low at first, but the streets have been filled up, while the walls have remained the same height. In many places in the main walks these arches can scarcely be seen, on account of the land near them having been filled up with rubbish, the accumulation of ages.

A considerable portion of Jerusalem has been filled up so that it is evidently nearly a hundred feet higher than it once was. Near the Church of the Holy Sepulchre (so called) are some very ancient ruins, covering as much perhaps as a common-sized block in a town in America. Some of these ancient buildings have fallen down or have been taken down even with the ground around them, and some have one story more or less, still standing, with broken columns carved and mearved, and square blocks of building stone scattered promiscously around, with here and there a cistern.

In passing around among the ruins, under archways, through door-ways and over heaps of stone and rubbish, I discovered an underground building arched overhead even with the ground I stood upon, but the arching had been broken in in one place so that I could look down into darkness, but could see nothing but darkness. I threw a stone down, and from the length of time it occupied in going down. I judged the room must have been fifty feet deep. This building must have been a part of ancient Jerusalem, the modern Jerusalem being built on the tops of houses that were fifty feet below and they in turn on the tops of another Jerusalem. There are some excavations that prove that the street ways of the old Jerusalem are 150 feet below the streetways of the present Jerusalem.

To sum all up, I will say that Jerusalem of today is a strange city. I do not wonder that thousands of people come every year to see the sights in and around Jerusalem. This, perhaps is the very way that the glory and honor of the nations is to be brought into the city.

Under date of Jaffa, Palestine, Mar. 2, Mr. Howard wrote his sister as follows:—Having just returned from Jerusalem I sit down to write you a letter on this 65th anniversary of my birthday.

Since I have been in Palestine I can more than ever realize the need of a wise and righteous government, such as Jesus of Nazareth, the King of the Jews will inaugurate when he shall come again to earth, to gather the tribes of Israel, and set up his everlasting kingdom.

The hated Turk is here with all his ignorance, superstition and barbarity, and yet the Turk is not all barbarity. The Turkish government has some very good traits, but the Turk is opposed to all reforms. What he was a thousand years ago, he is today. He is cruelly despotic, not willing that his subjects shall make a single movement looking to their own condition, or the improvement of the condition of their prospective successors and children. Islamism must go. The followers of Mohammed have long and cruelly reigned in Jerusalem, but the Jews are slowly and surely crowding out the Ishmaelites and occupying their places. Said an Arab shopkeeper [illegible] the other day, I hate the Jews, for they are crowding us out. They can work and sell goods cheaper than we can, and I can see plainly that I must go.

I have been told by an intelligent Jew who had lived in Jerusalem 26 years, that there are 12,000 families of Jews in Jerusalem; many of them however are extremely poor, suffering for the necessities of life. Mr. Taylor told me that there was an immense amount of suffering in his immediate neighborhood, and in order to see for myself something of their situation I engaged Mr. Taylor to go with me and show me some of the houses in which these people lived. But, before starting out, however, I provided myself with about three dollars in small coin, so that I might have the pleasure of lighting up a small corner of the hearts of a few of them, but I saw so much wretchedness and suffering that I could not stop until I had given them fifteen dollars. I had within a day or so made a sale of 2400 clothes-pins for about that sum, that had cost me very little, so I thought I would express to my Heavenly Father a thanksgiving for thus favoring me.

Among the dwellings that I went into, was one of a Rabbi, and as it was so very small I took out my pocket rule and measured it and found it only 7 by 11 feet. He had but little furniture [illegible] very poorest kind, and only two or three seats all told, and not chairs at that, no stove, and no place to make a fire except a dug-out in a stone holding perhaps a quart of charcoal when he can get even that. I visited several families that were as destitute as this Rabbi, and rooms as small as this. One room in which a family lived was only wide enough for the length of a bed, not an inch to spare, and about 15 feet long. All of the rooms were very low, and some of the roofs leaked so badly that the floors were kept wet all the time and but few of them had any ventilation or place to admit light except the door-way, and some of them had a small apperature near the door. Such squalid poverty and wretchedness and suffering I hope never again to witness.

But, it may be asked, Why so much poverty? Why do they not go to work and do better? These questions are easily enough answered by any resident of Jerusalem. There is no work that they can get to do. The number of laborers is manifold greater than the demand for labor. Capitalists, as a general thing are not willing to invest money where the government is so corrupt and property so insecure. Let England, France, or in short, any progressive government get control in Palestine and there would be a different state of things immediately. We hope that a different state of things will grow out of the complications caused by the False Prophet of the Soudan. England getting control in Egypt, (according to last reports) we believe is a mighty stride towards a better government even here. It looks as if the False Prophet was raised up by an over-ruling Providence at this time for this very purpose, and Palestine only needs a good government as a stepping-stone towards becoming the glory of all lands, and Jerusalem a praise in all the earth. Then the glory and honor of the nations shall be brought abundantly "into the city" and Jerusalem will become the Capital and mistress of the world in an everlasting age of peace and righteousness. This Scripture, "The glory and honor of the nations shall be brought into the City" is already partially fulfilled.

Millions of money are brought into Jerusalem every year, both by pilgrims to be spent there and also by capitalists to build houses for schools, churches, monasteries, and general aggrandizements, but the poor get but a very small share of it, simply for this reason if for no other. He is a Jew, and will not change his religion for any other, even to get his bread. It is generally admitted that many, if not the most of those proselytes that have become Christians, have done so to get the loaves and the fishes.

In enumerating the 12,000 Jews in Jerusalem as above stated, Mr. Taylor did not reckon proselyte Jews, as Jews recognize none as Jews who have abjured Judaism. There are several thousands of Christian Jews in Jerusalem, and these all are beloved for their father's sake as much as those of the law.

I went to Jerusalem about two weeks ago, and was detained there longer than I expected to be on account of continued rain. I think I never saw rain so continuously in my life as since I have been in Jerusalem this time. A few days ago the rain ceased and it has been clear and nice since. Yesterday I came back on horseback, but it was too hard for me. I feel much the worse this morning for my days work yesterday. My old difficulty of palpitation of the heart is troubling me very much lately.

The crops here are looking unusually well as I am told. The rains commenced last fall, some five or six weeks earlier than usual, and as soon as the rains began the vegetation began to grow, wheat and barley was sown, gardens were planted and all nature began to put on her livery of green. So much rain has seldom been seen in Palestine as came last winter. The cisterns are all full, and the aspect of an abundant harvest in the ensuing summer.

I feel fully confident that a brighter day will soon dawn upon this benighted land, and that the rust of ages will soon begin to be cleared away, and that Palestine will become the glory of all lands, according to the Word of the Lord by the mouth of his servants the prophets.

The road between Jaffa and Jerusalem is as good as one could expect considering the nature of the ground over which it passes. The Sharon plain a distance of about 25 miles is generally pretty level, and the government has laid out a great deal of labor on this road. The balance of the way to Jerusalem is very hilly or mountainous. The road zigzags back and forth perhaps a half a dozen times in ascending, only there are far more ascents than descents.

Some time in January there was a heavy snow storm in Jerusalem, while in Jaffa there was no snow, only rain. The snow in Jerusalem was attended with a hard wind, almost a Wisconsin blizzard, which piled up the snow in places, three or four feet deep, but it only lasted a few days. The weather now is as delightful as I ever saw it in Wisconsin in May. Very soon the crops will begin to grow in earnest, and the orange trees will be in bloom, but I will not say that the people will begin to make gardens, for that was done last fall as soon as it began to rain.

The land on the plain of Sharon is very rich and fertile. The orange gardens extend about a mile, or a mile and a half from Jaffa. The trees are so thick that one cannot see into the gardens generally more than a rod or two. The land is so fertile that the people think there is no need of manure on it, and this too after using the land I suppose for ages.

Beside planting oranges and lemon trees very thick and raising immense crops of these fruits, the gardeners plant vegetables, two or three crops in a year among the trees, and thus take as much off the land as possible, without ever putting anything back in the way of a fertilizer. I think the soil here is the richest that I ever saw anywhere. The same may be said of the soil anywhere in Palestine where there is any soil, but the stones are so thick in many places that there is no soil to be seen; nothing but stone.

But the time is coming by the prophets foretold that the stones shall be gathered out. Isa. lxii. 10. Read Isa. lx; lxi; lxii. Begin at the three last verses of lix. Then what of Palestine? The richest land and country on the face of the earth. The glory of all lands and Jerusalem the Metropolis of the world. O hail, happy day. [illegible] it comes.

"We Cannot Get Along Without the Physical."

The writer of this article recently heard an address which had for its subject, "The unsatisfied longing of the human soul." It was said, among other things, that the mind has a remarkable capacity to travel from place to place; and examples were given of the mind being at one moment in Cincinnati, at another in the Rocky Mountains, at another at Niagara Falls, and then suddenly at this meeting. All of which was given in support of the statement that "the physical is not the real man." The real man, it was said, is unseen, as the mind is unseen, and yet exists. Then finally this important concession was made by the speaker: "Of course, we cannot get along without the physical." We want to "get along" in the matter of living, moving, and having our being. That we manage, somehow, to "get along" with "the physical," is a fact that is patent to every observing mind; but that we could "get along without the physical," is not so easily proven. Hence the concession above referred to.

Let us make an observation or two upon that remarkable capacity of the mind to travel from one place to another. [illegible] Does it really do this? [illegible] mentioned above, [illegible] mentioned, and his mind frequently recalls things which he observed at the time. This is said to be the traveling of the mind. But is it that in fact? Is it not, rather, a recalling of impressions as they were made on the sensorium of the brain at the time when the places were visited, and as they then existed? The question is its own answer. If the mind actually travels back to the places, why can it not see the objects as they are now, instead of drawing on the memory of the past? You remember the faces of your childhood playmates. How do they appear to you now? As they are today? No, but as you saw and know them in former days. Your mind has often dwelt with them, and perhaps you imagined yourself conversing with them. But when you meet them, the lines on their features, as well as their physical forms, have undergone a most remarkable change, and you hardly recognize them. But why all this, if the mind could overleap the distance between you, and actually be in the presence of your friends? Why not in this way, save carfare and avoid anxiety and danger, by simply letting the mind wander on a visit to places and persons? It will not do, because "we cannot get along without the physical." We can only bring, and that faintly [illegible] compared with the reality, the impressions that were made upon the mind by sweet converse with dear ones and by enjoying that which comes to us through the "physical" senses. The mind, abstractly, cannot see the grandeur of Niagara; it cannot hear the deadening roar of its rushing waters; nor feel the invigorating effects of an outing in the park; nor taste the sweets that are offered to the palate, nor smell the fragrance of the flowers. The "physical" senses are the avenues through which the mind receives its impressions. The brain is, we may say, the central station with which the various organs are connected by means of nerves, and the impression made upon the brain is more or less distinct, in proportion as every part of this system is or is not in proper working order. Man sees, and it is the function of the eye to perform this office. He hears, and it is by means of the ear. If these organs are in their normal condition, so as to perform their respective functions well, he sees and hears well. If the functionary action of these organs, through any cause, is interfered with, a corresponding deficiency is observed in the eye and the ear. Man thinks, and he has a brain to think with; and "without" this brain, the "physical" organ of mental activity, he "can not get along." Now, what shall we say when men tell us that we can "get along" better than ever when once we are entirely "without the physical?" How can we "see God" (Matt. v. 8), if we have no eyes to see? How can we keep tune and time with the song of the redeemed, if we have no ears with which to hear the joyous strain?

If "the physical is not the real man," why is it that "we cannot get along without the physical?" Who or what is the "we" that "can not get along?" And where do we want to "get along?" If "the physical is not the real man," is it a "man" at all? Or is it an unreal man? The "man" whom God formed out of the dust of the ground (Gen. ii. 7), was a "real man," and he was a "physical" one, with senses for physical enjoyment and physical suffering. The reason why "we cannot get along without the physical" is obvious: it is because man was made a physical being. Physical pertains to natural objects or natural productions, or to material things. Man was made of tangible matter—dust—and hence is a material, physical being. When violence is done to his organs, they are either permanently or temporarily rendered useless, in proportion to the injury received; and the Bible plainly states that "the dead know not anything." Eccl. ix. 5. "His sons come to honor, and he knoweth it not; and they are brought low, but he perceiveth it not of them." Job xiv. 21. What does this, and a great [illegible] as is matter "of course, we can not get along without the physical." Then why not be consistent, and stick to the text?

Dear Restitution:

It is now four months since we came to Portland. We like the city and climate very much. There have been many rainy days since we came here; yet the rain in this country does not interfere with work as it does in the East, since there is little or no wind with it. This is a city of roses. We have never seen them elsewhere so large and beautiful nor grown in such profusion. The Willamette River passes through the city dividing it into East and West Portland. The older as well as the business part of the city is on the West side. The residence portion on this side extends to the Heights. To the East the valley is wide and the city is growing in that direction. Many beautiful residences and other fine buildings are already there. The electric system is extending its street rail ways, and with its transfer tickets one can reach the business center with little trouble. We think if we had our friends of the east with us, if we could meet on each first day with the little congregation at the Plymouth church we would be happy to wait here the coming of the Lord.

In answer to a letter of inquiry, Sister Skeels of Scholls, Oregon, wrote us that teams would be sent to Portland to convey all who wished to attend the Conference at Scholls on July third, fourth and fifth. We accepted the invitation to be with them, and we shall ever remember this meeting as one of the rich blessings of life. It was to us as a spring in a dry land; a tropical island, fragrant and beautiful in mid ocean. Those who live under the sheltering influence of our Father's house know but little of the joy it gave us to meet with his children. It did us good to look into their kind faces and note the gleam of hope as they extended to us their hospitable welcome. The little church at Scholls are faithfully and earnestly working for the Master. They have Sunday school as well as preaching each first day. Bro. W. L. Skeels has worked for many years in this new West and has been the means of aiding many to see the truth. He is a workman that needeth not to be ashamed. Bro. J. Foore of Kansas was present and did most of the preaching. We had the pleasure of meeting Brother and Sister N. D. Tichenal of Wenatchee, Washington, and learned to love them. They have both consecrated their lives to preaching the Word, and we believe will be a help and strength to each other in the work. We heard Brother Tichenal preach. He knows the gospel message and how to present it in a spirit of love. With great pleasure we recommend him to any congregation or Conference as an evangelist. May God bless their labor and keep us all in the love of truth.

Dear Restitution:

The household of faith in Salem, O., were again delighted Sunday morning July 12th, to welcome young Sister Anna Burton, daughter of Sister Esther Burton, to share the blessedness of those whose transgression is forgiven, whose sin is covered. For several weeks she diligently searched the Scriptures to see for herself what God had set forth in the gospel of the kingdom, and to find out what was required of her in order to obtain a hope of eternal life, or what she must do to be saved. Realizing from her earnest study of the Word of life, that she was without Christ, an alien from the commonwealth of Israel, a stranger from the covenants of promise, having no hope, and without God, she desired baptism, and Tuesday, July 7th, we went to the brook gladly, and there on confession, before witnesses, of her faith in the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, she was immersed, washing away her sin, and rising to walk in newness of life. Our prayer [illegible] and receive a crown of life.

P. NEILL.

MARRIED.

At the home of the writer, in Oregon, Ill., on Friday, June 5, 1903, Mr. Anda T. Tilton of Chana, Ill., and Miss Nellie McRoberts of Ashton, Ill. These young people start out in life with the good wishes of a host of friends, and judging from the kind parental care and the good homes they are leaving to make one for themselves they will make a success in life. We trust they may never forget the good old Book which has been the guide in the homes which they have left.

Debate.

A debate on the following propositions will be held at the Restitution Church, Moriah, Ill. commencing Aug. 4 and continuing four days. The Mr. Roberts mentioned is a representative of the Christian Church.

1. The Holy Scriptures teach that man is wholly mortal, and is unconscious in death, that is to say, from the time of his natural death to the time of his resurrection, and is incapable of exercising any mental or physical activity during that time.

L. E. Conner Affirms.
W. G. Roberts Denies.

2. The Holy Scriptures teach that man possesses an immortal nature, and entity which survives the natural death of the body, and continues to exist in a conscious state.

W. G. Roberts Affirms.
L. E. Conner Denies.

3. The Holy Scriptures teach that the kingdom of Jesus Christ, the kingdom of God, preached by Jesus Christ and his apostles, is the Church of Jesus Christ, and was established, organized and set up on the day of Pentecost.

W. G. Roberts Affirms.
L. E. Conner Denies.

4. The Holy Scriptures teach that the kingdom of God, the kingdom of Jesus Christ, preached by Jesus Christ and his apostles, is yet future, and will be set up, organized and established at or after the second personal coming of Jesus Christ.

M. JOBLIN, SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JULY 22, 1903.

As there are five Wednesdays in July this issue and Aug. 5 will be consecutive papers.

BROTHER Joblin writes that he is just able to be around, and that his wife is also sick.

DON'T forget to plan to attend the different Conferences that are announced. Go and help in the work of spreading the good news of the soon coming kingdom and King. The cause needs your assistance.

POPE LEO. XIII, on Feb. 20, 1903, reached his twenty-fifth year of wearing the triple crown, being 93 years old. His mind was then clear, and he was able to go through the ceremonies at the celebration in commemoration of the event. In many ways Leo. XIII was a remarkable man, and it has been said that he is "the last of a trio of aged men of such commanding stature that they towered above their times like oaks in a meadow." Bismarck and Gladstone were the other two, and however good the association and comparison may be, it is certain that no one of all the popes that have gone before him, has lived at a time when it required so much skill and tact to steer the Catholic Church through the difficulties that have assailed her. The troubles with the Italian government, and with Germany and France have been met, as well as the "liberalism" in America, and each so managed that the Church has seemed to gain by his skillful management. The next pope will likewise have many hardships to go through with, among them not the least may be the differences between capital and labor. Pope Leo XIII was born March 2, 1810, and died at four o'clock July 20, 1903. Cardinal Oreglia, Dean of the Sacred College, is the head of the Catholic church until a new pope is elected.

ACCORDING to the following dispatch from Pekin it would seem that Russia is determined to provoke Japan into [illegible] the pretense of Russia to vacate Manchuria, or allow any principle ports to be opened for any length of time. Russia and open ports is an anomaly. "According to diplomats here the greatest factor in the eastern situation is the increasing danger of war between Russia and Japan. They believe it is becoming plain that Russia is willing to fight Japan if convinced that no other powers will assist her. The Russians are confident of their ability to easily defeat Japan, and are said to be anxious to settle definitely her position in eastern politics and end her ambitions to oppose Russia's progress in Manchuria. The belief is attributed to the Japanese that the Russian policy is to attempt to placate Great Britain and America and provoke Japan into beginning hostilities. They regard Russia's consent to opening ports in Manchuria, the Czar's promised visit to England, and the occupation of the Corean border as parts of that policy. Russia's activity on the Yalu River is more irritating to Japan than the retention of Manchuria, and all Japanese officials in China speak of war as a "probability."

AT the Epworth League Convention at Detroit, Mich., Dr. J. M. Buckey, of New York, in speaking on "Christ, our King," gave vent to the following words:—"We cannot affiliate with the Unitarians or any other body that does not recognize Christ as King. If we are right in our belief and assertion of his kingship they are unwittingly, if honest, blasphemers. If they are right we are idolators. We must everywhere declare and maintain belief in his deity. I would be willing to receive an honest doubter into the church, but if he dogmatically declare that Christ is not God I would be as willing to receive a Mormon." The "Dr." seems to think it would be impossible for any one to recognize Jesus Christ as their King without believing he is also God. The trouble with Dr. Buckley is that he has not studied his Bible with the view of learning about Jesus' Kingship. If he had he would have learned that the Christ is not now a King, but that he will soon come and then will be made King of kings and Lord of lords. He does not hold the office yet. He is declared to be the only begotten Son of God, and therefore he can not possibly be God himself, any more than Dr. Buckley is his own father. If this people who without question swallow what is given them by such teachers as this "Dr." is, could only see that the kingdom of God is yet future; that Jesus is now at his Father's right hand acting as Mediator,—not as King. That he is to come to earth and establish his kingdom and reign; that as he was raised from the dead, so his saints are to likewise be resurrected and made immortal. If they could only see the beauty in the plan as given in God's Word, they could be a power for good and for God. But they are blind and their leaders are blind, and the Word says both fall into the ditch. Brethren and sisters, let us strive to pluck a few brands from the burning. Let us try to enlighten some one and show them the truth, present to them the hope of the gospel, before it is too late.

The Lord's Portion.

Speaking through the prophet Isaiah, Jehovah tells us of a time when "darkness shall cover the earth, and gross darkness the people." Isa. lx. 2. Is there a soul in the house that does not know that we are living at that very time? Can we not all see that this prophetic Word is having its fulfilment in our day—before our eyes? This intelligent little congregation needs not to be told that the darkness spoken of, is not physical darkness. It is not darkness caused by the obscurity of the sun. The gross darkness here referred to, is the converse of the light which the Psalmist says is given by the entrance of God's Word. So we know from this that the darkness is mental and moral darkness. And this condition of things is shown to exist now, by the fact that if we speak to them of man's nature, they tell us that he is immortal, and can never die,—must somewhere,—either in happiness or woe! But when we turn to that subject as revealed in God's Book, we read that God only hath immortality; and we read too, that Christ came and suffered and died to procure immortality for us; and that those who seek for it by patient continuance in well doing will obtain immortality, or eternal life. You see both these statements cannot be true. If man is immortal then God has not told us the truth. But we hold, that he has told us the whole truth [illegible] fore the human view cannot be true.

If we ask the multitude of religious people what of man's state after death, they tell us that he knows more than he ever knew before. At funerals we are told of the pious dead, that they are cognizant of all that is being said and done at the funeral of what they term the tenement of clay. But the Word that giveth light says, Eccl. ix. 5 the dead know not anything; and that there is no wisdom or knowledge or device in the grave, whither man goeth. Need I say, we just and that accounts for our separation from all others. If we ask these same people where the everlasting home of the saints is to be,—we are told that it is to be in heaven. But turning again to the sure Word of God spoken by Jesus, we find him saying Matt. v. 5, "Blessed are the meek for they shall inherit the earth." As he could not deceive us this is what we believe, and advocate, and what we would die for,—before we would renounce it. And Dan. vii. 27 says the kingdom of God under the whole heavens is to be given the saints, and they are to

POSSESS IT FOR EVER,

even for ever and ever. And the redeemed hosts in Rev. v. 9, 10 say they will reign on the earth. And the 115th Psalm says the heavens are the Lord's —but the earth he has given to the children of men. We simply believe this, and hence, as Paul says there is only one faith, one hope and one baptism, we do as he tells us to come out from all those who disbelieve these great fundamental truths. The popular doctrine has no use for the Old Testament, or very little, which reveals God's purpose to set up a kingdom on earth that shall be the means of abolishing the curse, and the thousand ills that afflict humanity. Supposing they hie off to heaven at death has led them to teach that the New Testament is all sufficient for salvation purposes. But remember Jesus taught men to search the Scriptures for in them they think they have eternal life, and they are they that testify of him. There was no New Testament when he said this. And here let me try to give the true place and set the true value upon both the Old and the New Testaments. Both are ABSOLUTELY ESSENTIAL.

Neither is of any use without the other. And you will see the truth and force of this when I say, and could abundantly prove, that all the glory honor, majesty and power offered to man is promised in the Old Testament,—and the

PROMISES ARE SWORN TO

by God, so that we cannot doubt he means what he says. We now, perhaps some one before me is saying, that if this be so what is the use of the New Testament? What use, do we need if the old contains all that? I will gladly answer you dear friend, yes, I am thankful for an opportunity to explain the value of the New Testament. The New Testament shows us what kind of people the promises in the Old Testament are made to. 2d, It shows what steps those people have to take in order to become heirs of those promises; and 3rd, it shows them what kind of lives they must live after they become heirs; and fourthly, it shows the laws of Christ by which we have to regulate our lives. The promises in the Old Testament would be without instructions as to how we could obtain them. And the instructions in the New Testament would be of no value at all to us, if God had not set before us some grand promises to believe and hope for. Seriously, solemnly, earnestly, friends, do you not see from this simple outline, why it is the New Testament never once holds out heaven to us as something worth living for? If God wants us to live godly so as to inherit heaven,—is it not most amazing that he has never once said so? We are most distinctly told that God has set something before us to believe and hope for? What is it? Is it heaven? If so, where in all the Book of God is heaven set before us? How could heaven be set before us by God, when he has set something else before us to hope for, and says the saints shall possess it for ever? How could they be eternally in two different places? If forever

WITHOUT VALUE TO US

UNDER THE HEAVENS,

how could they be above? I have taken up considerable time by way of introduction,—and while my subject proper "The Lord's Portion", may suffer considerably by curtailment I felt it would be useless to speak on Old Testament themes to people who had no clear conception of the plan [illegible] promises. In ending my introduction, I beg you not to treat the Old Testament as if it were out of date. It surely is not,—the constant reference to it in the New shows that. Referring again to the darkness the prophet said should cover the earth, I ask if the Son of God when here in weakness and suffering could upbraid the Pharisees and call them hypocrites for not discerning the signs of the times, how much more could he upbraid those of this age who fail to discern that the time is near for his return from the far country? Not in weakness and poverty and suffering, —a man of sorrow, but to inherit Judah his portion in the Holy Land, and choose Jerusalem again. Zech. ii. 12. The Pharisees were blinded by the traditions of men, and from this cause were unable to recognize the fact that their Messiah had to first come as the Lamb of God to take away the sin of the world,—and to come the second time as the Lion of the tribe of Judah, to overthrow those who have possession of his inheritance, and to take possession. Scripture says there was a veil over their hearts, which will remain until they return to the Lord, which time is still future,—for the Apostle says that blindness in part is happened to Israel until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in, —and so all Israel shall be saved,—as it is written, "There shall come out of Zion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob." Rom. xi. 25, 26. Alas, when we turn to the mass of religious Gentiles we find that they make void the Word of God by

IN POWER AND GLORY

THEIR TRADITIONS.

Some of them say that the Son of God will never be man as himself by setting his foot upon this cursed earth again, far less come here to dwell for ever," thus ignoring the fact that God has willed to him a special portion of it, and besides that, says to him in the 2nd Psalm, "Ask of me, and I will give thee the heathen for thy inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession." So you see, he who cursed the earth for the first Adam's sake can and will remove it for the Second Adam's sake, the Lord Jesus Christ, for we read in Rev. xxii. 3, "There shall be

NO MORE CURSE."

He who came in weakness and lowliness was the one spoken of by the prophet Isaiah who was to be despised and rejected of men came in fulfillment of the prophecy in Zech. ix. 9: "Rejoice greatly, O daughter of Zion, shout O daughter of Jerusalem." Why Zechariah, what are you so excited about? Listen, and you will soon find out. "Behold unto thee, he is just, and having salvation; lowly, and riding upon an ass, and upon the colt the foal of an ass." Take notice that this is a prophecy in the Old Testament, and fulfilled in the New. And I trust you will notice that it was not figuratively or mythically fulfilled. He literally rode into the literal city of Jerusalem on a literal colt of a literal ass,—amid the literal hosannas of thousands of literal Jews. The prophet said it should be the King of the Jews that was to thus come—not in fact, then, the [illegible] was the King to be. We are told by John that he came to his own (land and people) and they received him not,—that is, the leaders, those in authority received him not, but the common people received him gladly, and would have made him king on the spot; but to correct the idea that he would then and there re-erect the throne and he spake the parable of the nobleman going to a far country to receive a kingdom and return, and at his return he reckons with his servants and rewards them with authority in proportion to their deserts.

THY KING COMETH

LITERALLY FULFILLED

And here, friends, I want you to notice that just as the Jews would not recognize this lowly one,—this man of sorrows as their king, neither will professing Gentiles. They overlook all the glorious truths written in the prophets concerning him as the heir to David's throne and kingdom. As a nation the Jews will only recognize as the Messiah, one who comes as Judah's Lion. The Gentiles will only recognize him as God's Lamb, and yet the same prophet speaks both of his lowly ride into Jerusalem, and of his coming in majesty and might, and of his being the one King, and one

LORD OVER ALL THE EARTH.

Now if you please put these Old Testament things alongside of something [illegible] the New and you will understand all [illegible] and introduction. As and that of Luke an angel came and told Mary she should have a Son, his name Jesus, he should be great and the Lord God would give unto him the throne of his father David, and he should reign over the house of Jacob for ever, and of his kingdom there should be no end. Now, I ask this intelligent audience what sense would there be in this, if we did not know that God had for ages been promising to set Abraham's Seed and David's Seed upon the

THRONE OF THE WORLD

and bless all nations with a righteous government after destroying the human governments. Professors who discard the Old Testament see nothing in the wonderful promises of Gabriel to Mary because they have taken up with the traditions of men that nullify what the angel said,—and when Jesus calls Jerusalem the city of the great King they do not know that he himself is referred to, and that he is going to make Jerusalem the capital of his world-wide kingdom. And when they read the sign placed over his cross they do not realize that he must one day be King of the Jews or else the oath and promise of God will fail,—and when they read Acts xv. 16, 17 where the Spirit for Jesus speaks back [illegible] from heaven to tell us he is not going to stay there, but is coming again, as he said he would before he went away. Just listen to him, he says, After this I will return. You know he had been in earth, and had gone away to the Father's right hand, and it is from thence he says, After this I will return. I submit that if he returns as he says he will, he will be in earth again. Would you like to know what he is to return again for? I mean would you like to know what he is going to do when he comes again? If so, you can know, for the very next verse tells what he will do. "After this I will return and build again which is fallen down, and I will build again the ruins thereof, and I will set it up, that the residue of men, that is the remaining portion of mankind—may seek after the Lord, and all the Gentiles upon whom my name is called, saith the Lord, who doeth all these things." Friends if you are in earnest to know the truth of the matter,—put what Jesus will do when he returns besides what in Luke i. Gabriel said to Mary before he was born, and then you will see that God is surely going to carry out the programme revealed ages ago by the prophets. But before I conclude I must call attention to what the Spirit in Peter said soon after the Lord

THE TABERNACLE OF DAVID

ASCENDED TO HEAVEN.

He said heaven would retain Jesus—How long? For ever? No! but that heaven would retain him till the time comes for restoring all things God has spoken by all the holy prophets since the world began. Friends, if you disregard the prophets how are you going to know what Jesus is coming for, —just as sure as that Peter was speaking for God, so sure is it that he sends you back to the prophets to find out what

JESUS IS COMING FOR.

Will you do it? Will you? I tell you it is a serious matter,—a subject of awful import to you. Just think! Jesus is heir of all things—he is to be King over all the earth—that is his portion, in its full dimensions. Paul says [illegible] ter with Christ now, we shall reign with him then. If you believe the promises of the life and kingdom when Jesus comes, and turn away from sin, and be baptized for the forgiveness of past sin, you will that moment become a joint heir with Christ, and he tells us what he will say to all such when he comes in power and glory in Matt. xxv. 34. Come ye blessed of my Father inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world! Jesus has died that you may have life after death to inherit that kingdom,—will you accept it?

"Hear Ye Him."

"For God commanded, saying, honor thy father and mother; and he that curseth father or mother, let him die the death." Matt. xv. 4.

Mark in recording the same conversation of the Master says, "For Moses [illegible] of the Master says, For Moses said, Honor thy father and thy mother, and whoso curseth father or mother, let him die the death." Mark vii. 10.

This shows conclusively that the Master made no difference in what God had said, and what Moses had said. If God said it, it was all right, if Moses said it, it was all right, as he was divinely authorized to say what he said—God told him to say it.

Where is the difference? Yes, where is your foundation for the two laws gone? The Master knew nothing about the two-law theory. That theory, like many other human theories is simply the invention of man and women, and has sprung up since the Master was here. He sowed the good seed, an enemy sowed the tares. Was the Master right? Was he the Light of the world? and will you hear him? or, was he a back number? Lord to whom shall we go? "Thou hast the words of eternal life." Peter.

Among the Indiana Churches.

I will make special mention in this contribution of the isolated ones in Indiana. We have such at a great many places, of which I will mention Akron, Athens, Austin, Black Hawk, Brazil, Bremen, Colfax, Denver, Goodland, Grayford, Hartford City, Huntington, Indianapolis, Kendleville, Kokomo, Loree, Linton, La Fayette, Marion, Mauson, Middlebury, Monterey, Noblesville, Remington, Rochester, Seeleyville, Sheridan, Shoals, Stockwell, Tegarden, Tiosa, Tipton, Warsaw, Wabash, Walkerton, Windfall, and many other places. I have obtained the names of nearly one hundred isolated who live in different parts of the State. The most of these do not get to hear any gospel preaching once a year; and the only kind of preaching a good many of them have is through the study of the Bible and the reading of THE RESTITUTION. They have a veritable hunger for the sincere milk of the Word, and they plan when the time of our Conferences draws near, to attend these gatherings, [illegible] acquaintances are renewed and new [illegible] strengthened in the faith and built up for warfare against the powers of evil. Quite a number of such isolated believers were in attendance at our June Meeting, some of whom we had met on former occasions, and others we met for the first time. It is an easy matter to begin a conversation with such, for they seem eager to learn and drink in all they can of God's saving truth; and not infrequently we who are blest with opportunities which they cannot enjoy, can learn a lesson of loyalty and devotion. There they are in the interval of the meetings, all by themselves, far away from those of like precious faith, little appreciated in their struggle to be just, often misunderstood, their motives misconstrued, with little to help and much to hinder their faith and religious life. Yet they come to our gatherings not only receiving but also imparting good by their spirituality. It is a great privilege to commune with them, because, in their isolation, they commune with God.

I would say to such who live in proximity to some of our churches: Come to the meetings as often as you can. Bring some one whom you can interest, with you. During nearly the entire last twelve months we have had visits at the Church at Scircleville, from some of the isolated living within fifty miles of that place. There have been some from Sharpsville, Tipton, Cyclone, Sheridan, Noblesville, and elsewhere. And the brethren and sisters are always glad to welcome them. There is plenty of room in their homes, plenty to eat, and they feel honored with such visits. And then another thing. Let the churches see that their meetings are like a warm fire to warm by. A lump of ice does not attract us when we are cold, but a warm, cheerful fire will.

Our Helping Fund.

We whose names are given herewith, believing that it is our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending THE RESTITUTION to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our names for the purpose of aiding the managers of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund to be applied as the doners request, (or when left to the publisher to decide) only for those who themselves state their circumstances and need, or whose case is presented by some one known to be trustworthy.

Poetry.

I Must Abide in Thee.

O Father, help thy troubled child,
So spent—so tempest torn;
I cannot bear the storm so wild,
By every wave upborne.
Be thou my Refuge and my Tower,
To which my soul may flee;
In every troubled, trying hour,
I must abide in thee.

Life has such strange vicissitude,
Such fiercely rending gales,
Such blinding storms, such lashings rude,
I cannot trim my sails.
Oh, I shall perish here at length,
Wrecked in the yawning sea,
Unless thou, Lord, will be my Strength,
And come, abide with me.

I cannot be the sport of waves,
Of every eddying tide,
I must find power that helps and saves—
I must in thee abide.
Speak peace, and make my peace secure,
Whatever else must be;
My anchor must be strong and sure—
I must abide in thee.

Selections.

The Church Not the Kingdom.

Let us then look at a few of the prophetic glimpses of "the kingdom," that we may see how impossible it is that the gospel which heralds it can satisfy the claims of the appointed Heir, or can be the kingdom which it heralds.

Take the Book of Psalms, a great portion of which is in reality the millennial psalter, and cannot therefore be understood if it be not accepted as descriptive of a state of things which is to take place after the return of David's Son and Lord from heaven, and in consequence of his most blessed government of the nations upon earth.

It is remarkable how this precious book reaches the heart, soothes sorrow, cheers the desponding, and pours its heavenly balm on the wounded spirit. Unconsciously the reader finds himself in the presence of the King, and knows not that the things that gladden him are actual descriptions of what shall be when the Lord he loves shall bear rule over all the earth; the kingdoms and dominions of the world having acknowledged the sovereignty of him whose right it is to reign over all nations and tribes of the habitable world. There is an unsuspected feeling of something greater, better, holier, than has ever yet been realized even in the most Christian communities; a scarcely heard whisper of the soul that there is something here that tells of the royal presence of the King. The heart lingers on those hallowed scenes, and receives the impression, as if from the finger of the Holy Spirit, that the outward and the visible are in harmony with holy truth; that the will of the Father is done in earth as in heaven; that there is no longer any jarring element to mar devotion; and that the world has at last become a magnificent temple, vocal with the praises of innumerable rejoicing worshippers.

In the first Psalm we look through the light of prophecy upon the congregation of the righteous; and the ungodly and the sinner are no longer among them. They have not stood in the day of judgment. Clearly the dispensation of gospel witnessing is past, for that allowed tares and wheat to grow together.

In the second, the conspiracy of the kings and rulers against Jehovah's Anointed is described; a conspiracy which began as soon as Herod heard of the birth of the King, and which will reach its impious height, and its final overthrow, when the Antichrist and his confederates shall make war with the King of kings; and the calm assurance is given that the decree is not to be recalled, for Jehovah hath set—by appointment—his King upon his holy hill of Zion; for here, though the actual accession is in the far future, its absolute certainty is such that it is spoken of as accomplished. The kings are, therefore, warned, and called upon to be wise now, for God's purpose concerning his Son is immutable.

In the seventh, in the midst of terrible disorders and persecutions, the exulting cry is heard, "The Lord shall judge his people!" and, as a consequence, the just shall be established, and the wickedness of the wicked shall come to an end.

The eighth describes the Lord's name as excellent in all the earth, and the "dominion" of Jesus, the second Adam (See and compare Heb. ii. 6-9), over all things.

In the ninth, He shall judge the world in righteousness, and dwell in Zion; and, consequently, the heathen are rebuked; the wicked destroyed; and their name put out for ever; and the enemy comes to a "perpetual end."

In the tenth, the Lord is King for ever and ever, and the heathen are perished out of his land.

In the fourteenth, there is a vehement cry, "Oh, that the salvation of Israel were come out of Zion!" and the royal poet adds, gratefully, "When the Lord bringeth back the captivity of his people, Jacob shall rejoice and Israel shall be glad."

In the 22nd, the sufferings of Christ and the glory that shall follow are spoken of; and part of this glory is thus described: "All the ends of the earth shall remember and turn unto the Lord; and all kindreds of the nations shall worship before thee." Why? "For the kingdom is the Lord's, and he is the Governor among the nations."

The 24th contains a rapturous welcome to "the Lord mighty in battle," the victor, "King of glory," returning to reign over the earth, which will then be truly his, "and the fulness thereof;" the world and they that dwell therein. I do not stay to vindicate my application of this joyful welcome to the second advent, because I am satisfied that no other interpretation can meet the requirements of the [illegible] tumult and terror, the Lord is represented as King for ever, giving strength unto his people, and blessing them with peace.

The 45th is an exquisite epithalamium in anticipation of "the marriage supper of the Lamb," the sceptre of whose kingdom is celebrated for its righteousness. The majesty and glory of the King, and the blessings of his reign, meet here in dazzling splendor.

In the 46th, "the Lord of hosts is with us," and the time of universal peace has come. "He maketh wars to cease unto the ends of the earth; he breaketh the bow, and cutteth the spear in sunder; he burneth the chariot in the fire." The tumults of the nations have ceased; the people know that he is God; and he is exalted in the earth, facts which have never yet taken place, and which never will until the glorious King be manifested.

The 47th is a gem of rarest lustre, calling upon all people to clap their hands, and shout unto God with the voice of triumph. "For the Lord most high is terrible; he is a great King over all the earth." The poet-prophet is excited with the splendid vision, and calls repeatedly for adoring songs: "Sing praises to God, sing praises: sing praises unto our King, sing praises; for God is the King of all the earth; sing ye praises with understanding."

The 48th describes Mount Zion in her glory, as the mountain of the Divine holiness, and the city of the great King.

In the 50th the Prophet sees the Advent, and describes some of its imposing circumstances: "Our God shall come, and shall not keep silence; a fire shall devour before him, and it shall be very tempestuous round about him. He shall call to the heavens from above, and to the earth that he may judge his people. Gather my saints together unto me, those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice. And the heavens shall declare his righteousness, for God is Judge himself."

In the 67th, the sufferings of Christ and the glory that shall follow come before us again. The psalm closes with this delightful declaration: "God will save Zion, and will build the cities of Judah, that they may dwell there and have it in possession. The seed also of his servants shall inherit it, and they that love his name shall dwell therein," all which, of course, is future.

The 72nd is a magnificent and charming description of millennial felicity, in consequence of the government of the Son of God upon earth.

The 74th contains a prayer which we would do well to use in view of the dark places of the earth and abounding iniquity: "Arise, O God, plead thine own cause," which, in New Testament language, would be, "Come, Lord Jesus!"

The 76th is a judgment scene, and future, when our Lord shall "cut off the spirit of princes, and be terrible to the kings of the earth."

The 82nd prays, "Arise, O God, judge the earth, for thou shalt inherit all nations," the peaceful inheritance of the earth by the Heir of all things invariably following his assumption of his royal rights.

In the 87th, "glorious things are spoken" of the metropolitan city, and "the Highest Himself shall establish Zion;" his establishment of her being the cause and the glorious things the consequence.

In the 93rd, "the Lord reigneth," and "the world is established that it cannot be moved;" cause and effect again.

In the 95th, the heavens, the earth, the sea, and the fulness thereof, are summoned to gladness; and the field and the trees of the wood are asked to rejoice before the Lord. But why? "For he cometh to judge the earth. He shall judge the world with righteousness, and the people with his truth."

The 97th brings us into the presence of the reigning Sovereign, and all the people see his glory.

The 98th demands a "new song" to him who has done marvellous things, whose right hand and holy arm hath gotten him the victory. Israel is restored, and all the ends of the earth have seen the salvation of our God. Therefore, "make a joyful noise before the Lord the King."

In the 99th, the Lord reigneth, is great in Zion, and is high above all people, &c.

In the 102nd, "when the Lord shall build up Zion, he shall appear in his glory;" and subsequently, and consequently, the people will be gathered together, and the kingdoms to serve the Lord.

The 110th sees the Son sitting at the Father's right hand for a time, and then striking kings in the day of his wrath and judging among the heathen, that he may put down evil, and establish his reign of peace and righteousness in the earth.

The 145th extols the King, describes men as speaking of his kingdom, and talking of his power, and affirms that his kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and that his dominion endureth throughout all generations.

The 146th says that the Lord shall reign for ever, the God of Zion unto all generations; and the poet concludes with a grateful "Hallelujah!"

The 147th gives us a beautiful glimpse of Jerusalem rebuilt, the outcasts of Israel regathered, the broken in heart healed, and their griefs at an end. The Lord of great power and infinite understanding hath done all this; and again the sweet singer closes with a "Hallelujah!"

The 148th summons all creation, animate and inanimate, to adore him who exalteth the horn of his people, the praise of all his saints—even of the children of Israel, a people near unto [illegible]

In the 149th, the children of Zion are joyful in their King, and the "saints" are in possession of glory, executing judgment under their glorious King.

And the last of the series in the millennial psalter is a burst of praise from "every thing that hath breath," and a final "Hallelujah!"

You see, then, whereto all this conducts us. It establishes the proposition that the claims of the Heir are not met by the gospel, even on the supposition that its testimony is believed by every child of man, for in that case, its message to the nations that a kingdom is coming would necessarily be credited, and all men would, in consequence, be what are called millenarians. It proves, besides, that the kingdom and the church are two distinct things, both in essence and circumstance.

The truth is, the gospel has two testimonies. It proclaims the salvation of grace to all who believe in Jesus, and the future establishment of a kingdom of righteous rule in our world. It points upward to the glory with Christ, and onwards to the government of peace under Christ, when he shall "reign in Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously." Isa. xxiv. 23.

But when we take into account the fact that the witnesses are unheeded by most men as regards the salvation which is by grace through faith during the present dispensation, and by a still greater number as regards the kingdom of righteousness in the next dispensation, the doctrine that the gospel meets the regal claims of the Lord Jesus is seen to be utterly untenable. "And it came to pass," said Paul to the Jews, "that when I was come again to Jerusalem, even while I prayed in the temple, I was in a trance, and saw him saying unto me, Make haste, and get thee quickly out of Jerusalem; for they will not receive thy testimony concerning me." Acts xxii. 17, 18. This is the history of eighteen centuries anticipated. The world has not received apostolic testimony concerning Christ. The majority of men, though the voice of the witness has been heard in all nations, care nothing about him; and the majority of the inhabitants of so-called Christendom are destitute of the characteristics of saints, and sadly ignorant of the double message with which the witnessing gospel is charged. Our Lord distinctly told his apostles that their testimony would be rejected by many. "And into whatever city or house ye shall enter, inquire who in it is worthy; and there abide till ye go thence. And when you come into an house salute it. And if the house be worthy, let your peace come upon it, but if it be not worthy, let your peace return to you. And whosoever shall not receive you, nor hear your words, when ye depart out of the house or city, shake off the dust of your feet. Verily I say unto you, It shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom and Gomorrha in the day of judgment than for that city." Matt. x. 11-15. Again: "He that heareth you heareth me; and he that despiseth you despiseth me; and he that despiseth me, despiseth him that sent me." Lu. x. 16.

Great multitudes have, during the entire dispensation of grace, down to this hour, rejected the testimony of God. Comparing the throngs of [illegible] have returned to the Shepherd and Bishop of souls, the complaint of the witnesses has all along been, "Lord, who hath believed our report?" Surely it requires no ingenious argument to convince any one that these things are so, when the fact is so painfully visible to us all. I would not state a thing so obvious, but for the important bearing it has on the subject of this paper. If even under the supposed case of a Christianized world, through the instrumentality of gospel witnessing, the royal claims of the Lord Jesus would not be satisfied, what shall we say about those claims in the face of existing facts? Oh that I had the means of putting this simple question before every Christian minister in England! I am sure that an honest answer to it would dispel the delusion that the Christian dispensation and the kingdom of Christ are one and the same thing. The witness to the nations, even if its voice were heard, could never so far forget itself as to suppose that testimony and the fact of which it testifies are one: that the herald and the Prince who follows are the same person; but to see it falling into this mistake when so few hear its voice is matter for deep lamentation. Under no circumstances could a messenger sent to the nations to testify that the kingdom of God shall shortly appear, [illegible] his testimony was itself the kingdom, without rendering himself liable to punishment for want of his fidelity to his Master; but to say it under the actual circumstances of the case as we see it at this late hour of the dispensation whose last sand are running out, is distressing, perplexing, mournful; although, as usual, the sure word of prophecy has prepared us for it by telling us plainly that the promise of the Lord's coming would be the scoffer's jest in the last days,—the very time when that promise shall receive its fulfillment to the overwhelming terror of the scoffers.

Would, then, that the Church, as long as she has the opportunity, would take up her forgotten testimony, and cry, "Behold, the Bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him." Matt. xxv. 6. "Behold, he cometh with clouds; and every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him; and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him. Even so, Amen." "Behold, I come quickly." "He which testifieth these things saith, surely I come quickly. Amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus." Rev. i. 7; xxii. 12, 20.—Rainbow.

Dear household of like precious faith:

I was reading in a political paper about what great times they are having over the President and also over Kings and rulers. Now you may say, "What is of earth is earthy. So it is, but Christ used earthly illustrations if it made anything more plain, and I think this is a good one. The title is, "Move People From the Yard." "The guarding of the governor's mansion, and keeping the crowd away was a particularly difficult job, but it was carried through successfully by the squad of police detailed for that purpose."

Dear brothers and sisters, are we looking for our King or our President? How many police are on guard at our Governor's mansion; if our King should come? He has said he will come, and we should watch. Their ruler said he was coming, and they watched and he came, and just as sure are our King will come. Oh, let us watch, for he will come in such an hour as we think not if we are not watching.

The difficulty lay in the fast increasing darkness and the wide lawn. Is darkness not spreading over the land? Yes; sometimes I think it very gross darkness, so dark that a small light can not be seen very far, and often, as if it were in a fog, and we would try to lift it above the fog, they would not try to see.

When the president and his party drove up, the police failed to keep the people out of the yard, and they leaped the fence and lined the walk to the doorway.

Who will be so ready to see our King come, for he sent the message long ago so that we might have our garments ready. Will there be any so anxious to get close to him as they were to get to this man? Only think, he was of the earth, his gifts are only for a little while, but our King is to reign forever, and if we are fortunate enough to hear the welcome, we can see his smiling face and dwell in his presence. Our King will not have to have soldiers as body guard, for fear some one would try to kill him. No, no, for all wickedness will be done away with, thistles and thorns will be no more and the desert will blossom as the rose, when Jesus comes there will be no more strife.

CATHARINE MILLER.

Brother Underwood:

We thank God for the opportunity of again being able to write you a few words and to renew our subscription to THE RESTITUTION. I have not had a copy of the paper for six months, and I am at a loss for words to express how much we have missed its weekly visits laden with the story of love and mercy of Jesus the Christ, and the letters which convey so much encouraging love and truth from the brethren and sisters who are scattered abroad, for we are a scattered few. It has been the great desire of our hearts to be where we could reach a church of the one faith, but alas, have never been able to be within the walls of a church, except once in Cleveland, which will long be remembered and cherished as a bright spot in our lives. We hope that when we lay down the burdens of this life to await the call of the King of kings when he will come in power and great glory to raise the dead and change the living, and when the time comes may we all be found ready to meet our dear Savior.

KING OF GLORY.

"Lift up your heads, O ye gates, even lift them up ye everlasting doors and the King of glory shall come in. Who is this King of glory? The Lord of hosts, he is the King of glory. Yet have I set my King upon my holy hill of Zion. I will declare the decree. The Lord hath said unto me, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee. Ask of me and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession."

When Jesus was brought before Pilate, Pilate said unto him, Art thou a King? Then Jesus answered, Thou sayest, I am a King. To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness unto the truth. Every one that is of the truth heareth my voice. And Pilate wrote a title and put it on the cross and the writing was, Jesus of Nazareth, the King of the Jews. And when Jesus was taken up and a cloud received him out of their sight and while they looked stedfastly toward heaven, as he went up, behold, two men stood by them in white apparel which also said, Ye men of Galilee, Why stand ye gazing up into heaven? This same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven. And while he was yet with them he said, If I go away I will come again and receive you to myself that where I am ye may be also. Matt. xix. 28. "And Jesus said unto them, Verily, I say unto you, That ye which have followed me in the regeneration when the Son of Man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel, for the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first, and the saints of the Most High, shall take the kingdom and possess the kingdom forever, even forever and ever, and the kingdom and dominion and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him. And they sing the song of Moses, the servant of God and the song of the Lamb, saying, Great and marvelous are thy works, Lord God Almighty. Just and true are thy ways thou King of saints and the Lord shall be King over all the earth. In that day shall there be one Lord and his name One. Blessed are they that do his commandments that they may have right to the tree of life and may enter in through the gates into the city. When he shall come to be glorified in his saints and to be admired in all them that believe in that day, where unto he called you by our gospel to the obtaining of the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ."

ESTHER BURTON.

GLORY OF GOD.

It gives me great pleasure to meet with the household of faith in Salem, this morning, and especially with you, Bro. and Sister Crawford, who have recently put on Christ. I thought it would be appropriate to speak to you upon rejoicing in hope of the glory of God. These words are familiar to us, we often hear them quoted, but do we give them the serious thought they demand? By what authority are we permitted to use these words? Paul gives us an answer in Rom. v., "Being justified by faith we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom also we have access by faith into this grace (or favor) wherein we stand and rejoice in hope of the glory of God." Without that justification we are alienated from God, but there is a way whereby we can be brought into relationship with him. It is through faith. Faith cometh by hearing the Word of God. If we believe the promises contained in the Word, they serve as a basis for our faith. Such a faith is well pleasing to God, for he justifies us on account of it. But the justification is through Jesus Christ our Lord. Why is this? Because God is of purer eyes than to behold iniquity. We have all sinned; there is none that doeth good. This applies to all mankind, except the Lord Jesus. Notice the contrast between him and all others. He was separate and undefiled from sinners. He pleased not himself, but his Father who sent him, therefore he said of him, "This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased." Through the favor he found in the sight of God, we too, can approach unto him, for Jesus truly said, "No man cometh unto the Father but by me." To those in him, "He is made of God righteousness, wisdom, sanctification and redemption." "They are justified freely by God's favor, through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus." "There is therefore no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus."

After showing that our justification is by faith in Jesus Christ, the apostle continues, "We rejoice in hope of the glory of God." Think it not strange that we are told to rejoice in hope of the glory of God, for it is the natural and logical conclusion that all should arrive at. Have we not enough set before us to make us rejoice? What more can he say, than to you he hath said, who unto the Savior for refuge hath fled?

Hath not God sworn by an oath, that he will fill the earth with his glory as the waters cover the sea? Then the angelic proclamation which was sung at our Savior's birth will be fulfilled, "Glory to God in the highest; peace on earth and good will to men." The contemplation of these things will cause us to rejoice in hope if our hearts are set upon them. But there is more yet, Paul styles it the glory to be revealed in us. It began at the coming of the Lord when he shall be glorified in his saints. Then our position will be the reverse of what it now is. For the sorrowing ones there is joy. The redeemed of the Lord shall come to Zion with singing; everlasting joy shall be upon their heads. The lingerers and thirsters after righteousness shall be filled. There is glory and honor for those who labor in the cause of God and truth, for they are wise and shall shine as the brightness of the firmament and as the stars for ever and ever. For these earthly bodies in which we groan there shall be given the glorious vesture of immortality, and the Lord will take away the rebuke of his people from the earth, by exalting them to the highest positions of glory and renown. Is it any wonder that the glorious Lord said when on earth, Rejoice and be exceeding glad even in the midst of tribulation. To rejoice in the Lord is not only a privilege but a command as well. David said, Rejoice in the Lord, oh ye righteous. Paul enjoins it in these words, Rejoice in the Lord always. We need to rejoice in hope, for it is only those who hold fast the beginning of their confidence and the rejoicing of the hope firm unto the end that are to be made partakers of Christ. Beloved, let us see to it that the rejoicing of our hope comes first in our affections, then all will be well.

If he is not on hand bring your checks to the camp-ground and your baggage will be attended to promptly. Bring some bedding and a straw-tick. Tents and straw will be furnished free. Bed springs will be rented for a nominal sum for the entire session. Meals will be served at the Dining Hall at ten cents per meal or three meals for twenty-five cents.

Brethren, it is the earnest desire of our hearts, to have you at this meeting, to clasp glad hands with you again, and feel the Spirit flow from heart to heart. This may be our last of meeting together in Conference. Let us lay aside our cares for a brief five or six days and give our service to God's work. We assure you, you will say at the end of the year, I am farther ahead than if I had not attended the Conference, and have given the Lord a few days of my time.

Upon your attendance depends the success of the cause. Remember there are brethren who have devoted many years of their lives to the cause, all for the sake of the truth. Will you not come and help to show your appreciation of their labor.

Of our preaching brethren, Brothers Lindsay and Wilson of Illinois; Adams of Nebraska; Myers and Crowe of Kansas; Garton, Lucas, Moyer, Eychaner, Stouffer, of Iowa; and others, it is expected, will be in attendance.

Thursday, August 27th will be Berean Day.

And now we commend you to his care, and hope to meet you all at the Conference. Come early and enjoy a "feast of fat things."

O. J. ALLARD, Pres.
FLORENCE ALLARD, Sec'y.

On account of the recent high water at Kansas City, it is thought best to change our Conference, to Severance Kan., commencing Aug. 28, and continue ten days. Severance is 25 miles west of St. Joseph, Mo. on the Grand Island Railroad. Those coming from points in Missouri will change cars at St. Joseph Union depot, and come direct to Severance. The tent ground is five blocks from the station. Let all who expect to attend notify me at Ransom, Kan. at once. Board and lodging has been arranged for at a price not to exceed 60 cents a day. Board and lodging is arranged for with parties near the grounds, thus avoiding the disagreeableness of looking after bedding and sleeping in tents in case of wet weather.

The mornings will be taken up with praise and song services and Bible readings, and the brethren present will arrange for the afternoon service. The evening and Sunday services will consist of the following discourses:

Friday evening, General talk.
Saturday, Why I believe the Bible.
Sunday morning, The Atonement.
Afternoon, The Promises.
Evening, Relation to Promises.
Monday, Salvation—for what?
Tuesday, How saved.
Wednesday, Their on the Cross.
Thursday, Judgment.
Friday, Immortality.
Saturday, Resurrection.
Sunday morning, Coming of Christ.
Afternoon, Coming of Christ.
Evening, Glories of the world to come.

Let all the brethren that have subscribed to the fund send in the balance at once so that we may be able to square up everything at the close of Conference. We have been falling behind, and it will take all that is due to come out even. The business meetings will be held the last Friday and Saturday of the conference.

Brethren, there has been many good meetings at Severance; let us make this the best one. Come with love for the Master, with love for one another.

A. W. DARBY,
Sec. & Evangelist.

The Annual Conference of the Church of God in Christ Jesus of Southern Illinois, will be held in the Restitution Church at Moriah, commencing Oct. 8 and lasting to the 11th.

LEWIS WEAVER, Sec.

For the Illinois Bereans.

I wish to remind the Bereans that the dollar pledged last conference is about due, and we want to have all funds in by August. Let us all attend to this and have a full treasury to work on at the next conference.

A third edition of the above named work is just out, and ready for delivery. This book has been before our readers so long now that its worth is well known. The author is Robert Ashcroft. The price for this edition is put low so that the brethren and sisters can get it to lend to honest enquirers after truth. We hope there are a few who have not turned their ears from the truth to fables. The book will speak for itself in its unfoldings of the purposes and plans of Jehovah, regarding the near future of the earth and its inhabitants. All should be interested in these truths, and those who have never read this book will have a feast. Price 65 cents post paid. Send to this office for them, or orders can be sent to J. O. Woodruff, Elizabeth, N. J.

Popular Lectures by M. Joblin.

Brethren and Sisters, Have you loved ones who think sincerity will save them? Have you friends who think they worship acceptably while ignorant of God's promises? Have you acquaintances with false hopes of heaven, or who believe themselves immortal by nature, or who think their sins are forgiven, although they are ignorant of the Law of Pardon, or who have no use for a God who consigns sinners to Eternal Torment, and are ignorant of Jehovah's beneficent purpose to fill the earth with his glory and bestow Eternal Life upon believers of the Gospel, so they can enjoy it for ever? If so, send for Popular Lectures by Bro. Joblin, entitled:—"The Kingdom of God;" "Old Mother Earth to Be Born Again;" "Strangers from the Covenants of Promise;" "Vain Worship;" "No Immortality Out of Christ;" "Hope Begotten by the Resurrection of Christ;" "God's Love and Solicitude for Mankind;" and "What Shall We Do to be Saved?"

All letters should be addressed to "THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Marshall, Co., Ind."

Remittance should be sent by bank draft, postoffice money orders, or express orders. Money sent in either of the above ways is at our risk, money sent loose in letters is at the risk of the sender. In ordering books or tracts get the latest copy of the paper you have and order only what you see advertised in that.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Poetry.

Rejoice Evermore.

"Rejoice though storms assail thee;
Rejoice when skies are bright;
Rejoice though round thy pathway
Is spread the gloom of night.

If the good hope be in thee,
That all at last be well;
Then let thy happy spirit
With joyful feelings swell."

Communicated.

Jerusalem Restored.

All nations and kingdoms that we read of have a central place called a capital, where the laws are made, and where the ruling authority resides. It was so with the kingdom of Israel. David took the stronghold of Zion for his habitation. "Here will I dwell."

Jerusalem of old with God's house or temple was literally destroyed as foretold by Christ and the prophets, which is proof that its restoration predicted by Christ and the prophets will be as literally fulfilled, as to place and time and manner.

Christ limits the time Jerusalem is to be trodden down to the end of Gentile times, Luke xxi. 24, it being when Christ comes to Zion and rules in the midst of his enemies. Per. ex. Christ comes and gathers his elect saints to him in the air, both dead and living. Paul says Christ comes with all his saints. Jude says, The Lord comes with his saints. Christ says, The Son of Man shall come in all his glory, with all the holy angels, and sit on the throne of his glory, which is the throne of his father David. Zech. xiv. locates the definite place where he puts his feet, and where he comes with all his saints, and it is Mt. Zion, from where he ascended. Here is where the restitution commences. It is a day known unto the Lord as one day. At evening it shall be light. Living waters go out of Jerusalem, and men shall dwell therein, and there shall be no more utter destruction. Jerusalem shall be safely inhabited. Joel iii. gives the same events. The mighty ones, the saints, come down. Here God dwells in Zion, Jerusalem is called holy and a fountain comes from the house of the Lord.

These two prophets show that the Lord comes with his saints and the mighty ones, and Jerusalem and the locality about, with the living waters are restored and there is no more curse there. Not that the curse is removed from the whole earth, for the restitution is a gradual work. The stone that struck the image was small at first, but it became a great mountain and filled the whole earth.

Isa. lxv. 17, 18, follows the same order in the creation of the new heavens and earth. First, Jerusalem is created a rejoicing, and her people a joy, and the voice of weeping shall no more be heard in her.

Again, Isa. xxviii. 20, says, Look upon Zion the city of our solemnities. Thine eyes shall see Jerusalem a quiet habitation, a tabernacle that shall never be taken down. Here Zion and tabernacle are used interchangeably to represent Jerusalem as they are in many other places.

Amos uses tabernacle for Jerusalem in speaking of restitution events.

In Acts xv. 14-16, Peter quotes from Amos, saying, God at first visits the Gentiles to take out a people for his name. After this I (Christ) will return and will build again the tabernacle of David (Jerusalem) which is fallen down and will build the ruins again and set it up, that the residue of men might seek after the Lord.

The Lord told David that he would raise up his seed after him, which shall be (not his sons but) of his sons, (referring to Christ) and he shall build me a house. I will settle him in my kingdom forever.

God spoke of a house for a great while to come. 1 Chron. xvii. This could not be the temples built by Solomon and Cyrus, for they were destroyed, and this stands forever. There are no provisions made for its destruction. Zech. v. 12, 13 is a further confirmation of the purpose of God to build him a house in the future age. A man whose name is the Branch (Christ) shall build the temple of the Lord and he shall bear the glory and shall sit upon his throne and be a priest upon his throne, a title Solomon did not possess.

Haggai ii. 7, 9, says, I will fill this house with glory, saith the Lord. The glory of this latter house shall be greater than the former.

Isa. lx. is a chapter wholly on the restoration of Jerusalem. It is personified and spoken to as a person. "Arise, shine, for thy light is come; the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee. Darkness covers the earth, and gross darkness the people, but the Lord shall arise upon thee, (showing it is the first to be restored) the sons of strangers shall build up thy walls, their kings shall minister unto thee; for in my wrath I smote thee, but in my favor have I had mercy on thee. Therefore thy gates shall be open continually. They shall call thee the City of the Lord. Whereas thou hast been forsaken so that no man went through thee, I will make thee an eternal excellency, and make the place of my feet glorious. For brass I will bring gold, and for iron silver, being so much superior to old Jerusalem. Violence shall no more be heard in thy land, wasting nor destruction within thy borders. Thy sun shall no more go down, neither shall thy moon withdraw itself; for the Lord shall be thine everlasting light, and the days of thy mourning shall be ended." Language would fail to picture a more beautiful and enduring city than this. That God has unconditionally purposed to rebuild Jerusalem, never to be taken down could not be more positively stated.

It is affirmed over thirty times in the chapter by the word "shall" without one negative or conditional "if."

So we may rest assured that Christ, the Branch, will rebuild the house of the Lord, restore Jerusalem, cause war to cease to the ends of the earth, speak peace to the heathen and remove the curse from the whole earth.

The rod of his strength goes out of Zion and he rules in the midst of his enemies. The law shall go forth from Zion, and the Word of the Lord from Jerusalem. He shall rebuke strong nations afar off, and they shall beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks. Nation shall not lift up sword against nation neither shall they learn war any more.

These Scriptures show that the restitution is a gradual work, being compared to a mustard seed and leaven, and that Jerusalem is re-built at Mt. Zion, and the land about it is restored from the curse first.

Jerusalem is beautiful for situation, the heavenly city that Abraham looked for, that hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God, built by the appointment of his Son. This is the beloved city round which the devil gathers the deceived of the nations when let loose at the end of the thousand years reign of Christ with the saints. It has been the joy and praise of all the earth, during the restitution age, with its river and tree of life and the glory of God is its everlasting light.

But, some will ask, What do you do with the New Jerusalem that comes down from heaven? Would it not be more proper in view of the Bible facts on this subject, a few of which are herein stated, to ask such to give a reasonable Bible solution to the question?

If God has a city 1500 miles square in heaven that he is going to send to this earth through vast ethereal space, with a river running, and trees growing that are made of the same material and illuminated by the same light of this beloved city, we say, (Amen, so let it be. There will be ample room within it for this beloved city and a score more if necessary, and space sufficient for an everlasting home for all the elect seed gathered in Christ at his coming to sit on his throne and reign as Priest and King. But if this elect seed are all that are to be saved, the outside world will be tenantless. There will be no subjects to rule over in the kingdom, nor nations to serve and bring their honor and glory into the city.

But why are there walls of defense 1500 miles high round a city, where wars have ceased to the ends of the earth, and the Lord has spoken peace to the heathen, and there is no more curse, nor weeping, nor death, is a mystery not yet revealed.

The Devil's Device?

A short time ago I met a preacher in Plymouth, who, when I told him I believed in the destruction of the wicked, replied, "That is a device of the Devil."

I used the words of Inspiration; and he in making remarks called it "destruction doctrine," using also a Bible term. This of course put him squarely against the words of inspired writers. So to be consistent he should say, "Paul, that is a device of the Devil's." The question is, Who is right, Paul or this modern preacher? According to this man's theory Paul used the wrong terms in setting forth the destiny of the wicked—used terms that would mislead the simple minded reader. This proclaimer of the gospel (?) believes that the doctrine of never ending torture is true, in opposition to the often repeated declarations of God's Word that death, destruction, is the doom of the wicked. To prove that he was right and Paul was wrong he began to philosophize about the nature of the soul. Here the fitness or nature of things came into play. How convenient! "The soul is immortal and immaterial and is the real man." It is strange that Paul and the whole inspired college of apostles and prophets overlooked so important a doctrine (?) giving it no place in the record of God's will. Had they believed it they would have put it in plain terms, embodying it in the one hope of the gospel.

It would have found [illegible] of the Bible, and notably in the [illegible] erous obituaries of eminent and saintly characters. All this judging from the use of the doctrine in modern times. The plainness of the statement of the doctrine in question stands out in such broad contrast with the silence of the Scriptures that none but the hopelessly blind may not see it.

It is conspicuous in almost all literature. The spelling book of our boyhood days set it before the young mind by the words "The soul is immortal" and the explanatory sentence, "it cannot die" and this in contrast with affirmations about the nature of the body; the whole language implying the superior worth of the soul, and the almost uselessness of the body. The doctrine meets us everywhere. It is sculptured on tombstones, and costly monuments to mark the spot where rich and poor find a common level. It is found in the hymnology of the most of the so-called Christian churches of the present day. It finds a place in nearly all obituaries, and the funeral sermon would be thought incomplete if it contained no allusion to the soul's survival. It so overshadows the doctrine of the resurrection that those who still hold that the body will be raised at the last day sometimes fail to mention the fact in a funeral discourse [illegible] and others seeing no advantage in the resurrection of that which in life shackeled the freedom of the soul have utterly rejected the theory of a future resurrection and substituted that of a resurrection of the soul (some say spirit) at the death of the body. This latter class are consistent at least, for, if the body in this life is but a clog hampering and hindering the soul's lofty powers may if not, if raised and made the vesture of the soul in the life to come, be in a measure a hindering cause, circumscribing its activity to narrower limits? Those who hold in common the doctrine of inherent immortality whether believing in the resurrection of the body or rejecting it are alike on untenable ground, because on unscriptural ground. If there should be among the readers of this brief paper any holding the doctrine of inherent immortality, let me say to you there is not the bare possibility that you are wrong, nor the probability that you are wrong, but the positive fact that you are wrong.

The Bible teaches a very different [illegible] Hear what Paul says on the [illegible] in question. "To them who by [illegible] continuance in well doing seek [illegible] glory, honor and immortality, [illegible] life" will be rendered as the [illegible] preceding verse states. Rom. ii. 6, 7. This marvelous endowment is not in [illegible] possession but is held in reserve [illegible] the meed of doing well. Bible students accepting Paul's statement here [illegible] not obliged to differ with him [illegible] sets forth the doom of the [illegible] godly, declaring it to be [illegible] tion.

Matthew xxiv. 20.

"But pray ye that your flight be not in the winter, neither on the Sabbath day."

This is considered by some folks a strong prop for the Sabbath. But as I cannot see it in that light, Come let us reason together a little, and consider this matter.

1. In the first place please consider the fact well, that the Master never taught any one to keep the Sabbath in all his teachings. And this is also true of his apostles. Neither did they ever reprove any one for not keeping it, or violating it, and they never mention the sin of Sabbath breaking.

Oh, my good brother and sister, how can you account for all this? One of two things must be true, and you can have your choice. Either the Sabbath was not very important then, or the Master and his apostles did not understand their mission. Which was it? I say it was the first.

Now to our text. It seems plain to us that the Master only had in mind their present temporal welfare, and mentions some of the things that would be in their way, and serve as impediments to their flight. To us it seems quite improbable and very unlikely (who in all his teaching never had told one soul to observe the Sabbath) would now seek to guard his disciples from its desecration, while in the same connection with our text, he says, Then let them which be in Judea flee unto the mountains, verse 16. Luke says the same, but omits to mention the Sabbath. Chapter xxi. 20-24.

Would the Master try to guard the Sabbath in the city while the gates were shut, and at the same time tell those outside the city to flee to the mountains. I have a better opinion of my Master than that. Then again can you really believe away down in your heart, that the good Master who had time and again fled on the Sabbath day to save his life from a mob of Sabbath people who were constantly hounding him and his disciples about the Sabbath, (a pretty set of blind guides as predecessors this,) would now be so inconsistent as to turn around and try to throw a safe guard around the Sabbath by telling his people to pray that their flight to save their life might not come on the Sabbath day.

I must say in conclusion you will please excuse me for dissenting from such a theory, as I hold and cherish a far more exalted opinion of my Master than that. He was consistent, it is the people, and their theories that are out of joint, that makes so much trouble and confusion in the world, and the end is not yet.

Editor Restitution:

Perhaps some of your readers will like to know what I am doing, so I will say that on June 20, I left home for the Northwest Conference, to be held at Scholls, Oregon. I sped away over hills and mountains, sandy deserts and beautiful farms, and at the end of four days landed at Portland, Oregon.

As I was met by Chas. Marrs, and we went to a hotel and had supper, then started for a ride of fifteen miles to the conference. Time went rapidly as we talked of other days when we used to be in Kansas. At length we arrived at the Church, but meeting was over. We went in and there met Bro. and Sister Skeels, and Bro. and Sister Willey, and Floyd Lawrence whom I baptised 15 years ago: and Sister Wicklin, and others.

After spending the night with Bro. and Sister Samuel Lawrence, the next morning we went again to the church and besides others I met Sister Almira Brooks, whose name is a household to readers of THE RESTITUTION. There was Bro. Brooks, and Bros. Knapp and Smeltzer and their wives and others. At 2 p. m. we spoke to the people on God's plan of the ages. I spoke again on Sunday morning, and Brother Skeels spoke in the afternoon. The meeting closed that evening with a [illegible]

I stayed over and preached again on July 12, on the begettal and birth of the natural and the begettal and birth of the spiritual. In the evening I gave them a general talk, and all seemed pleased.

It was a time of rejoicing with us, as several there had known me in former years. But at last the parting time came, and it is not likely we will ever all meet again in this life. I shall not forget their kindness to me—nothing seemed too good for them to do for me. I bid them farewell and went to Lake Shore, Wash., on July 18, where I was met by Bro. Peter Woolf. On Sunday I spoke to them on the plan of the ages, and again in the evening. We closed by singing God be with you till we meet again, and on Monday evening I was at Felida, with a house full of young people. How to talk so as to interest young folks was the question, so after telling them of myself a little, I got out the chart on the plan of the ages. I stayed with them three nights, and never in my life did I see such interest taken by the little children.

The last night I placed Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden, with trees in the garden, the tree of life, the tree of knowledge. After the man had partaken of the forbidden fruit, I then drove him out of the garden, and put the flaming sword between them and the tree of life, for fear they would take of the tree of life and live forever. Then I asked the question Was the life forever in the tree of life or was it in Adam? A little girl answered Why in the tree of life. Oh, why cannot older people see it as well as the little girl?

Sister Hicklin gave us a fine exhortation at the close, and we parted after promising to come back again if it was the Lord's will. We have a number of fine brethren at this place. Brother McIrvin took me over to Vancouver where I took the boat and crossed the Columbia river, then went by train to Portland, and from there home to Parsons, where I arrived all right and found all well, for which I thank God.

Wisdom of Seirach.

CHAPTER 11.

1. A humble man's wisdom hath exalted his head, and in the midst of great ones will it seat him.

2. Do not praise a man of mark for his fine appearance, and do not abominate an ordinary man on account of his looks.

3. A honey bee is small among things that fly and her fruit product is a chief of sweet things.

4. Do not boast thyself in the putting on of outer-garments and in a day of glory do not be lifted up; because wondrous are the Lord's works, and his doings are hidden to ordinary men.

5. Many petty rulers have been made to take the lowest seat, and the unexpected one hath worn a diadem.

6. Many men of ability have been exceedingly dishonored, and men of renown have been delivered into the hands of others.

7. Do not blame before, make a diligent inquiry; apprehend first and then reprove.

8. Do not reject before hearing and do not pitch camp in the midst of words.

9. Do not strive about a matter which is of no use to thee, and do not sit in judgment in a trial of obdurate sinners.

10. Child, let not thy doings stand around many things. If thou multipliest them thou wilt not have been held guiltless, and if thou pursuest them thou wilt not have overtaken them, and thou wilt not escape by accomplishment.

11. There is one who toileth wearily and taketh pains and hasteth and lacketh all the more.

12. There is a dullard and he seeketh inpositional help; lacking strength he aboundeth in poverty; and the eyes of the Lord have looked upon him for good, and he hath raised him up from his humiliation;

13. And hath exalted his head, and many have wondered at him because [illegible]

14. Good things and bad things, life and death, poverty and riches are from the Lord.

17. The Lord's giving stayeth with the truly reverent and his satisfaction will have been prospered for ever. (Compare this with "This is my beloved son with whom I am satisfied" not "well pleased" merely).

18. There is one who getteth rich by perseverance and stinginess on his part and this is his portion of his wages.

19. When he hath said, I have found rest, and now will I eat to repletion of my good things, and doth not know what an appointed time will come, and that he will leave them to others and will die.

20. Stand in thy covenant, busy thyself with it, and grow old in thy work.

21. Wonder not at the doings of an obdurate sinner, put faith in the Lord, and abide in thy pains-taking case; because it is a light thing in the eyes of the Lord quickly and suddenly to make a needy one rich.

22. The Lord's blessing is in the wages of a truly-reverent man, and in a swift hour he will make his blessing flourish.

23. Do not say, What is my need, and what from now on will be my good things?

24. Do not say, I am independent and what calamity from now on shall I experience?

25. In a day of good things there is a forgetfulness of bad things, and in a day of bad things one will not have remembered good things.

26. Because it is a light thing in the sight of the Lord in a day of one's end to pay a man according to his ways.

27. An hour's calamity causeth one to ignore delight and in a man's final end there is a revelation (an uncovering) of his deeds.

28. Before one's end account no one blessed-happy, and a man who is a man will have been known in his offspring.

29. Do not conduct every man into thy house; for the ambuscades of the treacherous man are many.

30. A partridge is hunted with a basket with a pointed bottom; even so the heart of a supercilious man, and like a spy doth he look down on ruin.

31. For perverting the good into bad he lieth in wait, and will attribute blame to the preferred ones.

32. From a spark of fire coals are multiplied, and a man who is an obdurate sinner lieth in wait for blood.

33. Beware of an evil-doer—for he deviseth wicked things—lest he give thee cause for blame forever.

34. Take an alien into thy household and he will rend thee with disturbances and he will alienate thee from thine own people.

COMMENT.

There is enough up-to-date good ethical teaching in this chapter alone to embody and elaborate in a class-book of moral philosophy for seniors in any college in our land, as well as some helpful hints for our most enlightened advocates of sociological reform the world over. There is nothing narrow nor merely Judaic in the ethics here taught. The trumpet of proclamation rings clear that God is in all his world of natural and generic creation, not in one nation merely but in a mankind of nations, and that men may unconsciously work for him, yea, must work for him or may consciously work with him and be factors in working out his great benefit purposes in creation and redemption. The alien of this chapter is the alien to the covenant or contract which a conscious co-operation with God and his revealed purposes implies. Whether rich or poor you are or can be God's partner in your every word and work and what better assurance of present and future good can there be than this living consciousness is, and the argument of the divine curriculum herein taught.

Plymouth, Indiana, Aug. 12, 1903.

Matters in the political world look ominous. Yet, while it is perplexing to the nations involved, it gives hope to the saints that the day of redemption is near. It behooves us to stand ready.

Affairs in Macedonia and the Balkan states do not improve, and Turkey is sending fresh troops into that region and has given warning that she does not intend to withdraw but rather increase her force there.

After being in session four days the Cardinals of the Catholic Church elected Cardinal Sarto to the position of Pope, and he takes the name of Pius X. He was Patriarch of Venice and it is supposed will follow out the plans of his predecessor.

Another reign of terror seems sure to rock China again. The Empress Dowager has started in to kill or imprison with torture some of the reformers, and the country is in an uproar. Some are trying to get away and others hiding. Evidently "the Powers" are not through with China yet.

Since the election of the new Pope it appears that the most popular man of all the candidates was Rampolla, who was the Papal Secretary of State, but in some way it appears that the Austrian ruler had made a protest against him, making threats which influenced some of the Cardinals, and he was beaten. It is considered a victory for the German ring over the French, as the opposition was instigated by the German Emperor.

Some one has said: "Stars shine brightest in the long dark nights of winter. The gentians show their fairest bloom amidst almost inaccessible heights. God's promises seem to wait for the pressure of pain to trample out their richest juice. Sorrow brings us nearest to the Man of sorrows, and is the surest passport to his loving sympathy. Only those who have sorrowed know how tender his comfort can be."

On Sunday Aug. 2, we had the unspeakable joy of assisting one more trusting soul to put on the sin-covering name of Jesus. It did the church much good by way of encouragement to continue their efforts to win a bride for their Lord and Master. In these strenuous times it seems almost impossible to get the attention of people long enough to interest them in any thing, but things of the present. In Cleveland the rush of business is such that our brethren are often working till late at night and part of Sunday to keep up with their duties, and save their places. But a streak of sunshine such as we had on Sunday helps to keep hope in the ascendant and so struggle on. The evidence that the gospel has lost none of its power to save when it is believed with the heart is most inspiring. Miss Mamie Galbraith was a member of the Presbyterian church when she discovered that practically she had no hope, because what she had was not founded upon any promise of God. The household of faith scattered abroad will, we are sure, rejoice with her in the choice she has made, and pray that she may prove to be a faithful witness for God in these times of abounding iniquity, and at last share God's great salvation.

God Stoops Down to Us.

Paul tells us in Gal. i. 16 that God separated him from his birth, and called him by his grace to reveal his Son in him. O what mercy and condescension there is in this! He manifested himself to us in a Son of his own,—who knew no sin,—but lest we despair of reaching or approaching such an exalted character, he selected a pardoned sinner, to show forth his Son,—thus stooping still lower to accommodate himself to our poor capacities, and blunted moral perceptions. What a God of love we have! How he yearns to save men! What infinite pains he takes to win our confidence.

We may learn from 1 Cor. iv. 11, what an excellent choice was made for this purpose. He says, "Even unto this present hour we both hunger and thirst, and are naked, and are buffeted, and have no certain dwelling place, and labor, working with our hands. Being reviled we bless; being persecuted we suffer it, being defamed, we entreat. We are made as the filth of the world, and are the offscouring of all things unto this day."

Again in 2 Cor. xii. 15 he sets another most notable example for us to follow,—saying:—And I will very gladly spend and be spent for you, though the more abundantly I LOVE YOU,—THE LESS I BE LOVED."

Beloved, this shows the transforming power of the truth when believed and obeyed from the heart. What has it done for us? What is it doing for us?

Salvation.

Salvation is a deliverance from death by resurrection and bodily glorification at the coming of Christ, together with the inheritance of the kingdom of God.

It is offered to all on condition of believing the glad tidings of Christ's accomplishments at his first appearing, and of his coming manifestation in the earth as King of Israel and ruler of the whole earth, at the setting up of the kingdom of God. And by immersion in water for a union with his name for the remission of sins, and by continuing in well-doing to the end of this probationary career.

Various Readings of Rev. i. 9.

"I John, your brother and fellow-partaker in the tribulation and kingdom, and patience [endurance] in Jesus, came to be in the island which is called Patmos because of the Word of God and the witness of Jesus." Rotherham's Translation.

"I John who am also your brother and fellow partner in the tribulation and in the reign and endurance [suffering] of Jesus Christ." Young's Translation.

"I John your brother and companion in the afflictions and in the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ." Henderson's Tran.

"I John your brother and partaker with you in the affliction and suffering that are in Jesus the Messiah;" or One Anointed to be King."

"I John your brother and partner in the afflictions and patience of Jesus Christ." Whiting's Tran.

Note on above. Jesus in the 5th verse is said to be the ruler or Prince of the kings of the earth; but he is not that yet. The 11th chapter tells when [illegible] have been made kings and priests unto God, but this is prophetic of what will be. Proof of this is found in the 8th chapter where he tells them to hold fast till he come, and then he will make them rulers. See Acts. xiv. 22. Could they reign and suffer at the same time? John was suffering at that very time in Patmos. Rom. viii. 17. God speaks of things that are not as though they were. Rom. iv. 19; see what Peter says 1 Epistle v. 1: "The elders which are among you I exhort, who am also an elder, and a witness of the sufferings of Christ, and a PARTAKER of the glory that SHALL be revealed. This makes Rev. i. 9 easily understood. Peter will be a partaker of the glory when it is revealed.

This tribulation was the persecution of Domition who revived the persecution of Nero.

Answer to a Correspondent.

You say "God's promise of the land to Abraham, was fulfilled to his descendants."

We reply that the promise of the land for an everlasting inheritance was made to Abraham and Christ, see Gal. iii. 16. It was absolute. It was without conditions. The conditions had been complied with BEFORE the promises were made. His faith had been tested; he had been justified by faith, and then the word of promise, attested by an oath, was given. This supplied part of the means of blessing all the families of the earth, through a divine government to be established on the territory promised. This would bring peace on earth and good will to mankind.

The birth of Christ was the beginning,—the first visible act, the first visible step toward the fulfilment of the promise to Abraham, as you will see by reference to Luke i. 67-79, if you want to know the truth in the premises. If you will carefully read the 96th and 98th Psalms in connection with the passage from Luke, you can hardly fail to see how impossible it would be to fulfill the promise of the land when of the two legatees one was dead, and the other was not yet born. This is confirmed by the Word of the Lord in Heb. xi. 8 where is the proof that Abraham was [illegible] live as a stranger in the land he was [illegible] AFTER receive for an inheritance, in this life. Beside that it is distinctly said that flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom,—hence the necessity of a better resurrection which is set forth as the motive for the entrance manifested, (v. 35) and the being made perfect (v. 40) before everlasting inheritance could be entered upon.

We add in this connection that [illegible] declared there was one hope, Eph. iv. 4,—and confessed that that hope was the hope of Israel, and the hope himself cherished. And before Agrippa he stated that hope to be "the hope of the promise made of God unto our fathers." Acts xxvi. 6. And in chapter xxviii. 20 he calls it "the hope of Israel." And in chapter xxiv. 15, he shows that this hope can only be realized by a resurrection from the dead. And in view of these explicit statements, you should see that the hope of the promises is the "Hope set before us," see Heb. vi. 13-19. [illegible] is the light by which [illegible] whatever hope you have. We consider it not to be able to see how you can have any valid hope, if not based upon these promises of the fathers which you do not regard as gospel, and God, when he preached to Abraham; Gal. iii. 8; that being so how can you expect to be blessed with him? Gal. iii. 9, 29.

You say the gospel of the kingdom was not preached after the ascension of Christ. To show how utterly wrong you are we can only at this time give you the following Scripture proofs: Acts ii. 30; Psa. cxxxii. 11; Acts viii. 12; Heb. xii. 28; Jas. ii. 5; 2 Pet. i. 11; Matt. xix. 24; xxi. 43; ch. 13; xxiv. 14; John iii. 3; Acts xix. 8; xxviii. 23; Rom. xiv. 17; 1 Cor. vi. 9, 10; 1 Cor. xv. 20; 1 Thes. ii. 12; 2 Tim. iv. 1; Rom. xv. 12; 1 Cor. xv. 25; 2 Tim. ii. 12; Rev. v. 10.

A Striking Sign of the Times.

A special despatch to the Cleveland Leader from Delaware, Ohio, Aug. 5. says:—

"Rev. Charles Spicer, rector of St. John's Episcopal Church, Cincinnati, says that in his opinion the time is coming when there will be liquor served in churches in order to appease the appetites of those who otherwise cannot keep away from the saloon.

He says that the time is fast [illegible] religious work must furnish such social environments to the world that will bring people closer to the church. If he were to build a church after his own idea he would have a gymnasium, complete in all its proportions, where exercises and amusements could be participated in at any time by all who choose. In another department of the church he would have pool tables and near by a reading room.

He realizes that the church today is not coming in contact with the masses, and there is a growing and pressing need of reaching them through the social features which he holds are enjoyed at the saloon, where acquaintances and friends meet and spend their leisure hours.

Mr. Spicer says it is not so much a battle against the liquor habit as it is a fight for some suggestion that will invite people away from the saloons and get them into the churches, nearer its influences. Holding that religious worker might do effective work he says that the social problem of the saloon is greater today than ever before and the church must adopt some means to overcome it."

Abundance of evidence has been furnished by the great religious bodies of this and other countries during the last twenty years, that they were rapidly losing their hold on the people. They have had to adopt many questionable devices practiced by non-professors such as dancing, kissing games, money, all sorts of games, athletics, etc., etc., in order to secure their attendance and support.

Can this be wondered at when we remember that for many years, the taught the torments of hell for ever as the wages of sin, instead of death; and when through superior educational advantages this awful threat became disgusting to the people they discontinued that practice? It is as true now as ever it was, is it not? Who confidence could be put in men who drop out of their preaching whatever it is distasteful?

In addition to this a great number of their preachers discredit Moses, some of the prophets, and Psalms, and have undermined the authority of the Scriptures generally. These are the things that cause them to change their base, and gratify the flesh to prevent a break up.

But after all we had learned of their devious paths we were hardly ready for the shameful suggestion of Rev. (?) Spicer in the above dispatch. And yet, seeing it was shown in choir scandal in this city that some of its members stole off to a saloon while the sermon was being delivered, and hurried back to sing at the close,—it might have been expected.

We cannot begin to do justice to this subject; but seeing there is no saving power in anything but the gospel of the kingdom of God which Jesus preached of which they knew not the first principles, we rejoice in the incident above, as a sign that the day is at hand when the false prophet and those who receive his mark in their foreheads and hands shall have their portion in the lake of fire and sulphur, and will deceive the nations no more.

Selections.

The Rich Man and Lazarus.

These variously interpreted words of our blessed Lord are best understood by comparing Scripture with Scripture, with sincere prayer that the Spirit of Truth may guide us into all truth, and teach us all things concerning it.

We must bear in mind, in the first place, that our Lord Jesus Christ is "The Truth," and that, therefore, his words must be—in whatever form they may be found—the truth.

In the second place we must bear in mind that in speaking to the Pharisees he would have spoken in the Hebrew tongue, and would therefore have used a Hebrew word to express what has been rendered Hades (instead of Gehenna), in its translation into the Greek.

In the third place we shall see that though this story of the Rich man and Lazarus may have a two-fold application, it is so perfectly in accordance with all our Lord's teaching concerning the final state of the Jews—or tribes of Judah and Levi—at "the end of the Age," that we need have no difficulty in understanding it.

To speak first of the two-fold application of this truly-depicted and prophetical scene. It was the same "evil heart of unbelief in departing from the living God" (Heb. iii. 12), which was the root of the covetousness and all other sins of the Scribes and Pharisees of our Lord's time, as [illegible] under the Anti-Christ, are clothed in purple and fine linen and fare sumptuously every day—while their poorer brethren are hungered and they give them no meat, thirsty and they give them no drink, naked and they clothe them not—the same callousness to their sufferings, in binding heavy burdens and grievous to be borne on men's shoulders, while they themselves would not move them with one of their fingers. So that, although the sumptuous living might be far from those to whom our Lord was speaking, whose lives in that way, history tells us, were usually austere, their sins and hypocrisies were such that, after pointing them out one by one, he could fitly ask them: "How can ye escape the judgment of Gehenna"? (Matt. xxiii. 33) that same Gehenna, or lake of fire in which the rich man—who has 'forgotten God'—will lift up his eyes, restored to him again in resurrection, being "in torments." Our Lord had a lesson for that present time, as well as a prophecy of the future to give those Scribes and Pharisees who had just "derided" him, and as without a parable he spoke no religious truths to them, he put it in the form of a conversation between Abraham, as the Father of the nation to the rich man, and as the [illegible] natural shrewdness [illegible] of the faithful to [illegible] showing especially these four facts:

1. That there is, after death, no communication between the saved and unsaved.

2. That after the burial of one who has lived and died without God, there is no future opportunity of salvation, but—"after death the judgment." Heb. ix. 27.

3. That it is useless to think that any warning from one who has been dead and raised again would avail to convince those still on earth, if the Scriptures they already have do not do so—a truth which was proved in the case of the raising of Lazarus, the brother of Martha and Mary, when the chief priests only "consulted that they might put him to death, because by reason of him many of the Jews believed on Jesus"? Jno. xii. 10.

4. That before one who has died can return to this world, he must have been raised again.

In using the words "Abraham's bosom," our Lord would be continuing the two-fold application of his parable, as it was not only the phrase current among the Jews for describing the state of their blessed in death, but also his own for describing their state of rest and comfort in their future resurrection life—"I say unto you, many shall come from the East and West and shall recline—as at a peaceful feast of that country—with Abraham and Isaac and Jacob in the kingdom of heaven, but the children of the kingdom—those apostate Jews who have elected to receive the Anti-Christ in his own name (Jno. v. 43), in place of the true Messiah—shall be cast out into outer darkness, where shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth." Matt. viii. 11, 12. Lazarus, or Eleazarus, whose name signifies "Who has God only for his help," would be in either case "comforted," while the rich man, having had his all apart from God in this world, would remain apart from him in death, as well as apart from Abraham and Lazarus in the "resurrection of judgment," John v. 29.

In studying the subject with the help [illegible] our Lord's discourses, hell is rarely mentioned, and when it is, it is, with two exceptions, as Gehenna. These two exceptions are when he speaks of Capernaum and of his Church. In speaking of the city Capernaum, the word—if translated according to the parallel cases in Ezekiel etc.,—would either be "the nether parts of the earth," or "the pit." When he said, in Matt. xvi. 18, that the gates of hell should not prevail against his Church, we believe it means simply that the gates of the grave (such as were common in Palestine) would not prevail to prevent the resurrection of the dead in Christ when their call came.

We have a beautiful instance here of the perfection of Christ's parables in every detail, for while the rich man, in speaking of Lazarus as being raised from the dead, uses only the term for a general resurrection, Abraham speaks of his being raised from among the dead, or out of the dead, in accordance with his teaching in Mark ix. 10, -which caused his disciples to question one with another what the rising from the dead should mean.

The purple and fine linen show a life absorbed in pride and self, even if our Lord had no deeper reference in them, the purple dye being so costly that $1000 worth could be held in the palm of the hand, and the fine linen or byssus spoken of as worth its [illegible] cur in Rev. xviii. 12, as part of the merchandise of Babylon in the future, and is Rather they form part of the adornments and gifts of the voluptuous heathen King Ahasuerus.—Lydia H. Cole in The Faith.

A Deceptive Age.

The present age surpasses all others for rank deception. We see a wholesale exhibition of it in all the affairs of life. In the mercantile world things are made to appear better than what they really are. The outside is fixed up so it is very inviting to the eye, while the inside is a poorer quality, and sometimes a perfect sham.

If this condition of things were confined wholly to the things relative to this life we could get along fairly well. But the one who is the instigator of all that is wicked and mean is not content with robbing us of our just dues on worldly matters, but his main aim and object is to so deceive us that we will fail of gaining those durable riches that are reserved in heaven for all that will comply with God's requirements.

This enemy knows just how to deceive all who are his willing dupes. He has been in the business so long he has become an expert. But with all [illegible] preaching very faithfully, we can be [illegible] watch for him if we will [illegible] take heed to the advice of the Captain of our salvation. He never lost a soldier that obeyed his orders.

The command that came from heaven was, "Hear ye him;" and he said, "Take heed that no man deceive you. For there shall arise false Christs and false prophets, and shall shew great signs and wonders insomuch that if it were possible they shall deceive the very elect." The danger of being deceived by false Christs is in the past. The great danger now that confronts the professed people of God is in being deceived by false prophets.

The prophet Isaiah has given us a rule to test such: "If they speak not according to this word it is because there is no light in them." If people would always use it, it would keep them out of lots of trouble.

These false prophets that were to shew great signs and wonders as evidence of their high calling, according to Peter's description of them, were to be very successful in making followers, for, "many would follow their pernicious ways." Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses and Aaron by performing great and marvelous things. The apostle Paul says, as they did, so will these in the last days pursue the same course so as to resist or turn people away from the truth.

The reader will notice, according to the saying of Christ, that it is not possible for them to deceive the elect. Hence, all the hope there is for us is being one of God's chosen ones. The apostle saw this evil time, so he said, "Wherefore take unto you the whole armor of God that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day, and having done all to stand."

There is no niche nor corner in this armor reserved for the devil's falsehoods—as you will notice by examining it closely. The helmet is salvation, or the hope of salvation that is based on the truth of Christ's second coming.

The breastplate of righteousness, that is, putting on Christ our right[illegible] [illegible] and the life.

The girdle is truth; and the feet all shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace. This was the teaching of Christ. The sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God.

The shield of faith, or the giving credence to divine testimony. Being thus equipped, we can quench all the fiery darts of the adversary, and be ready to go into the marriage supper of the Lamb.

Dear reader, have you this armor on? If not, hasten to procure it before the door of mercy is forever closed.—F. E. Blaisdell.

A Visit and Some Meetings.

May 29 I left home and went to see Brother Wagoner and family at Rochester. Was with them one week, and had a pleasant visit.

From there I went to Argos, and while there made my home with Bro. Taylor. They were all very kind to me. I was laid up a part of the time from a hurt I received while with Bro. Wagoner. I called on others of the brethren and sisters there, some of the sick. God bless them and save them in his everlasting kingdom.

After the Antioch meeting I went with Sister Biggerstaff, to visit with her father, Bro. Andrew Brookover, at Bracken. I preached five discourses for them. While I was there a grand daughter of Bro. Joseph Lewis died at Huntington, and was brought near there for burial, and I was called on [illegible] fifteen years ago that I was there and Bro. Lewis died and I preached a sermon for him. While there I visited Sister Littler, also Bro. and Sister Fry, and others, and passed the time very pleasantly. They will be remembered as sunny spots in my pathway. I want to meet them each in the kingdom. Before I left Bracken Bro. J. L. Wince came to fill his monthly appointment, and I went home with him and stayed till the next Saturday, I had not been at their house for some years, and it was a grand treat to me. While I was there Sister Wince took me to Pierceton where we called on two of Brother Quackenbush's daughters.

On Saturday I went to Warsaw and stayed with Bro. Quackenbush and family till Tuesday morning. I intended visiting other places, but decided to go directly to my son's at Kempton. May all be faithful until the end.

The brethren at Roll desire to have as large a number present as possible. They are able, and will be glad to entertain you. Brethren and sisters in Indiana, let us, one and all, make it a point to attend this meeting of believers. We have had good meetings at other places, and can have a good one at Roll. Let us have a personal interest in this matter. Begin at once to make plans to attend this Conference. A programme will be published later.

Poetry.

He Knoweth the Way.

I know not—the way is so misty—
The joys or the griefs it shall bring;
What clouds are o'erhanging the future,
What flowers by the roadside shall spring,
But there's One who will journey beside me,
Nor in weal, nor in woe, will forsake;
And this is my solace and comfort:
"He knoweth the way that I take."

I stand where the cross-roads are meeting,
And know not the right from the wrong,
No beckoning finger directs me,
No welcome floats to me in song;
But my Guide will soon give me a token,
By wilderness, mountain, or lake,
Whatever the darkness about me
"He knoweth the way that I take."

It is true that I cannot perceive Him,
If backward or forward I go,
He biddeth himself; but he tries me,
That more of his love I may know.
And Oh, that the gold may be purer,
For the trouble that comes for love's sake;
I'm not afraid of life's sorrow,
"He knoweth the way that I take."

Who knoweth? The Father who loves me,
The Savior who suffered for me,
The Spirit all present to guide me,
Whatever the future may be.
So let me have hope and take courage,
This truth shall my joy-bathem make;
The Lord is my strong tower of refuge,
"He knoweth the way that I take."

And I know that the way leadeth homeward,
To the land of the pure and the blest,
To the country of ever-fair summer,
To the city of peace and rest.
And there shall be healing for sickness,
And fountains, life's fever to slake:
What matter besides—I go homeward,
"He knoweth the way that I take."

Must We Keep the Sabbath?

"We" are those who have been "Gentiles in the flesh, called the uncircumcision by that which is called the circumcision in the flesh made by hands," who at that time were "without Christ, being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope and without God in the world: but now in Christ Jesus, we who sometimes were far off, are made nigh by the blood of Christ." Eph. ii. 12, 13. We understand that we put on Christ by baptism, and thus become Christ's (own,) and heirs according to the promise. Gal. iii. 27-29. By putting on Christ we came into Christ, and as a result are "in Christ." Rom. xvi. 7.

There is no doubt that whatever commands the Lord enjoined upon his followers, they are bound to keep. On the other hand, whatever commands he did not command them, no matter where they might be found, and however good they might be of themselves, they are not obliged to keep them. If he requires his followers, by express command, to keep the ten commandments as Moses received them from the hand of God and delivered them to the Children of Israel, in order to obtain everlasting life or enjoy God's favor, they are bound to keep all of them without distinction. If he freed his followers from all the commandments of the decalogue, they are free from all of them. If he enjoined upon them some of these, omitting any part of the rest, they must needs keep those which are thus enforced upon them. If Jesus commanded his followers to remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy, and to do no work therein, they must certainly so sanctify that day.

Now, the question is, Did Jesus command his followers to keep the seventh day of the week as the Sabbath? In view of what the record says about the commandments which were given by Jesus, the only answer can be a negative one. There is no such command on record. Neither did the apostles command the keeping of the Sabbath by the members of the Church [illegible] writings. A command expresses the will of the one commanding, and implies authority. That Jesus had authority to command the observance of the seventh day of the week as a Sabbath, if this should contribute toward the salvation of his followers, we do not doubt. Nor can we question that if he willed his followers to so keep that day, he would have given such command. But the fact is, no such command is on record in his expressed will. Both he and his apostles after him explicitly warned against idolatry: Matt. iv. 10; Eph. v. 5; 1 Cor. x. 14; 1 John v. 21. Against disrespect and dishonor to parents: Matt xv. 4; Eph. vi. 2. Against swearing: Matt. v. 34; Jas. v. 12. Against killing: Matt. v. 21, 22; 1 John iii. 15. Against adultery: Matt. v. 27, 28; Heb. xiii. 4. Against theft: Matt. xix. 18; Eph. iv. 28. Against false witness: Matt. xix. 18; Col. iii. 9. Against covetousness: Luke xii. 15; Eph. v. 3-5. All these things are mentioned many times and ways, both by the Lord and the apostles, as insuperable barriers to an entrance into the kingdom of God, but the nonobservance of the Sabbath is not mentioned in the New Testament as constituting any kind of hindrance in entering the kingdom or obtaining salvation. This is not only a fact, but an important one, which all who have regard for the truth should ponder.

Among the Indiana Churches.

The Church of God near Scirclaville is an old settlement of believers. This was the scene of many a conflict in former days. Some of those who fought the battles of the truth were J. M. Stephenson, W. J. Fennimore, J. S. Hatch, and J. F. Wagoner. Both of the last named spent many years of hard and faithful labor in that neighborhood preaching the word of faith.

For many years meetings were held in School houses, as for instance, Burgett's Corners, the Cue school house, and the Whitcomb school house, as well as other places, and there are brethren living in the entire triangle from Frankfort to Tipton and Kokomo.

The church building now in use was erected in 1895. The brethren have a large field of work, and, with the proper care and vigilance, can accomplish a great deal of good. Additions to this Church are not confined to special efforts, though such are put forth at suitable times of the year, but take place at regular meetings. I regard this as an indication that men and women do some serious thinking on the truth when no special influences are being exerted. The brethren have recently organized a Sunday School, and I am told that the average attendance for six Sundays was about 80. The school is held at 3 o'clock in the afternoon.

On my last visit, two young ladies who professed faith in the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ were baptized, and I hereby introduce to the household of faith Sisters Laura Plummer and Jennie Williams. That they may prove faithful to the end of the race, is our earnest prayer. We were pleased to greet not only Brother and Sister McCory and Sister Truby, but also Mr. and Mrs. Cox of Sheridan.

Bible readings are conducted at the homes of the faithful at that place each Sunday, and a few outsiders are becoming interested.

Selected.

Faith and Works.

In James ii. we read: "For as the body without the spirit is dead, so faith without works is dead also." "Now faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." Heb. xi. 1. "Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the Word of God." Rom. x. 17. And "without faith it is impossible to please God: for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him." Heb. xi. 6.

I understand by these texts that our future life is based on faith, as the substance, or beginning, of our maturity. "Through faith we understand that the worlds were framed by the Word of God, so that things which are seen were not made of things which do appear." Heb. xi. 3.

It is the work of God, "that we believe on him whom he hath sent." John vi. 29. By faith in him we eat the bread of God, which cometh down from heaven, and this gives us eternal life. There is no other faith but a living faith of obedience, for it is plainly [illegible] dead, being alone." James ii. 17. Faith, hope and charity abide forever, and are three essentials on which eternal life is founded.

"What doth it profit, my brethren, though a man say that he hath faith, and have not works? can faith save him? If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of daily food, and one of you say unto them, Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled: notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful to the body; what doth it profit?" James ii. 16. "Examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith: prove your own selves. Know ye not your own selves how that Jesus Christ is in you, except ye be reprobates?" 2 Cor. xiii. 5. Our experience must be in harmony with Gal. ii. 20, where the apostle says: "I am crucified with Christ; nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me; and the life which I now live in the flesh, I live by faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himself for me."

Our experience as followers of Christ is very much like that of a child from the time of birth—first the babyhood, then the childhood with growth, until the perfect man is developed. It is step by step, here a little, and there a little. We gather nourishment and strength from everything wholesome which we eat. If we eat anything that is hurtful or distasteful, we gain thereby in knowledge to discern the difference between good and evil. It is the same both on the natural and spiritual plane.

Faith and works can not be separated; as faith without works is dead, so also is works without faith. Christ Jesus became the possessor of the law of God by obedience, having fulfilled all the commandments of ordinances, nailing them to the cross. The law is good, but he that fails in one point is guilty of breaking the whole of it. Salvation can not therefore be interpreted through merits of our own, or by works alone, neither is life attainable any more by keeping the letter. The law of commandments given to the children of Israel demanded a continual sacrifice, so long as the sacrifice was imperfect; which proves that God was the author of the law, he being perfect. The sacrifices of earthly life and origin could not atone for sin; they were therefore only typical of the true and perfect sacrifice—"the Lamb of God."

God required a sacrifice of life that was higher than that of beasts; therefore "The Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us (and we beheld his glory, the glory of the only begotten of the Father), full of grace and truth." He was born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God. No other life than God's own life could stand on the level with his commandments. Christ became worthy in the sight of his Father (by keeping his commandments) to finish the law by death on the cross. The life once contained in the commandments is now to be found through faith in our risen Savior, by obedience.

The law once written on tables of stone is now written in the hearts of men by the Holy Spirit. The same Spirit that raised Jesus from the dead shall also quicken our bodies from dead works to life and activity for him. The grace of God is sufficient in all our trials of life to keep that which is committed unto him in perfect peace, provided we are not ashamed of the gospel of Christ; "which is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." "For therein is the righteousness revealed from faith to faith; as it is written, The just shall live by faith." Rom. i. 17.

By faith the children of Israel possessed the promised land after forty years of chastisement, learning obedience through suffering for the perfection of their faith. The promise to Abraham was also obtained by faith. Heb. vi. 12, 13, 15. Faith was counted unto him for righteousness, because of the virtue by obedience. His faith was active and alive. When God told him to slay Isaac and make of him a sacrifice he conferred not with flesh and blood, but believed God, that he was able to raise him from the dead. Abraham's faith did not fail, because he knew that the promise to him was sure. See Gen. xv. 5.

Faith that works by love is the only perfect way of salvation.

We are living in perilous times, and the apostle's warning is due: "Take heed, brethren, lest there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief in departing from the living God. But exhort one another, daily, while it is called today; lest any of you be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin. For we are made partakers of Christ, [illegible] dence steadfast unto the end." We are living in a time when it behooves us to earnestly contend for the faith once delivered unto the saints. If we do this, we shall be numbered among those that have made their calling and election sure, without spot or wrinkle, ready to go into the marriage supper of the Lamb. He that overcometh shall inherit all things.—E. O. Carlson in Herald of Life.

The church has relaxed in both her doctrine and practice. She occupies a lower and broader platform than is meet; and having laid aside, as ultra and unnecessary, much of what is forbidden to the carnal mind, she has enticed multitudes to join hands with her, whose hearts are not right with her Lord, and who would never have made a show of joining her, had she adhered to the faithfulness of her Lord's truth, and the holiness of her Lord's example.—Hugh McNeile.

Announcement.

The Cleveland Church having postponed the Ohio State Conference, and the Salem Church being anxious to begin work in Ohio, it was decided to hold the Conference in Salem, beginning August 13, to 16 inclusive.

All the brethren in Ohio are urged to attend this first meeting to help devise ways and means to carry on the work of the Lord. Brethren from other states are cordially invited to come.

We earnestly desire all churches in Ohio to be represented, but if it is impossible to attend please send letters to be read. Let us all join heartily and unitedly with David in saying, "Thy saints shall bless thee, they shall speak of the glory of thy kingdom and talk of thy power, to make known to the sons of men his mighty acts and the glorious majesty of his kingdom." Psa. cxlv.

Brethren, it is the earnest desire of our hearts, to have you at this meeting, to clasp glad hands with you again, and feel the Spirit flow from heart to heart. This may be our last of meeting together in Conference. Let us lay aside our cares for a brief five or six days and give our service to God's work. We assure you, you will say at the end of the year, I am farther ahead than if I had not attended the Conference, and have given the Lord a few days of my time.

Upon your attendance depends the success of the cause. Remember there are brethren who have devoted many years of their lives to the cause, all for the sake of the truth. Will you not come and help to show your appreciation of their labor.

Of our preaching brethren, Brethren Lindsay and Wilson of Illinois; Adams of Nebraska; Myers and Crowe of Kansas; Garton, Lucas, Moyer, Eschaner, Stouffer, of Iowa; and others, it is expected, will be in attendance. The Corporation Board of the Camp ground will meet August 25.

And now we commend you to his care, and hope to meet you all at the Conference. Come early and enjoy a "feast of fat things."

O. J. ALLARD, Pres.
FLORENCE ALLARD, Sec'y.

On account of the recent high water at Kansas City, it is thought best to change our Conference, to Severance Kan., commencing Aug. 28, and continue ten days. Severance is 25 miles west of St. Joseph, Mo. on the Grand Island Railroad. Those coming from points in Missouri will change cars at St. Joseph Union depot, and come direct to Severance. The tent ground is five blocks from the station. Let all who expect to attend notify me at Ransom, Kan. at once. Board and lodging has been arranged for at a price not to exceed 60 cents a day. Board and lodging is arranged for with parties near the grounds, thus avoiding the disagreeableness of looking after bedding and sleeping in tents in case of wet weather.

The mornings will be taken up with praise and song services and Bible readings, and the brethren present will arrange for the afternoon service. The evening and Sunday services will consist of the following discourses:

Friday evening, General talk.
Saturday, Why I believe the Bible.
Sunday morning, The Atonement.
Afternoon, The Promises.
Evening, Relation to Promises.
Monday, Salvation—for what?
Tuesday, How saved.
Wednesday, Thief on the Cross.
Thursday, Judgment.
Friday, Immortality.
Saturday, Resurrection.
Sunday morning, Coming of Christ.
Afternoon, Coming of Christ.
Evening, Glories of the world to come.

Let all the brethren that have subscribed to the fund send in the balance at once so that we may be able to square up everything at the close of Conference. We have been falling behind, and it will take all that is due to come out even. The business meetings will be held the last Friday and Saturday of the conference.

Brethren, there has been many good meetings at Severance; let us make this the best one. Come with love for the Master, with love for one another.

A. W. DAIBY,
Sec. & Evangelist.

The second Annual Conference of the Church of God, in S. E. Kansas, will be held at our proposed colony site at Rollin, Kansas, from Sept. 16th, to the 21st. Excursions on the 3rd Tuesday in September for one fare plus two dollars.

Bring some bedding, an empty tick, hammer, old carpet for tent floor, eatables, dishes, knives, forks and spoons, and mosquito netting.

Brothers Dewey, Jones, and myself are all that are left in the colony. We are not rich, so will charge 60 cts per day for board and a bed on the floor for all we can thus accomodate. Others who wish to have a tent and to board themselves can have one by paying freight charges from Iowa and back on the tents. They can buy groceries from Bro. Jones, who has a small store here. Come and see our resources and town-site, and advise us as to what should be done to build up a colony of believers here, and also to attend the meetings in the big tent. We expect good speakers here.

Write for any particulars to W. L. Crowe, R. F. D. No. 3, Chanute, Kan.

The Eighteenth Annual Conference of the Church of God of the State of Nebraska, will be held (D. V.) at St. Paul, Neb., beginning Aug. 20th and convening till Sept. 5th, inclusive.

The brethren thought it best to hold meeting in the Court House instead of in the large tent.

The Court House is a large, roomy, well seated, lighted, heated and ventilated building, being capable of holding all who will attend.

The brethren of St. Paul have again kindly volunteered to care for all visiting sisters and brothers who will attend. The kind hospitality shown by each and every one of the brethren of St. Paul last year is an ensample of what will be done this year.

Now sisters and brothers, we need your assistance and presence to carry on the work of the Lord. Last year's conference at St. Paul was one of the best ever held in Nebraska. I hope each and every one will endeavor to make this one exceed the last one.

Each and every one make an effort to be present and do your share of the good work. The time is short to can work. The day of the Lord draweth nigh.

MISS EMMA ELTON, Sec'y.

The Second Annual Conference of the Church of God in Christ Jesus, will be held in the Restitution Church, at Moriah, Ill., commencing Oct. 3rd, and closing Oct. 11th, 1908. We expect Brother S. J. Lindsay, Evangelist of Ill., Bro. W. H. Wilson of Chicago, Ill., Bro. A. H. Zilmer, Evangelist of Indiana, Bro. John Claypool of Marshall, Ill., and perhaps others to be here to tell the glad tidings of the soon coming King.

Dear Brothers and sisters, one and all, we want you to come to our Conference, and have a good time. We will take care of you. The program will be arranged after we gather and it is understood that we remain at the church as much as possible. We heartily invite the Bereans to attend and we aim that you shall have a good part of the time.

Dear brothers and sisters, these brethren have promised to be here to preach to us, now, how many will write to me to meet them at Casey, on the 3rd of Oct., so that we may know how many teams to send for you. Lay aside the cares of this world and come and have a love feast that will long be remembered, and may each one be able to say that it good is to be here. Remember that Bro. Lindsay said, What a nice trip for the northern brothers and sisters it would be to come to this meeting. May all have good meetings wherever they assemble themselves together for Conference, and may the glad tidings of the gospel be preached, that men and women can see the grand and precious promises and obey them while it is called today, and if we should never meet again in this world may we all meet in the kingdom of God.

Yours, in hope of eternal life.

Our Helping Fund.

We whose names are given herewith, believing that it is our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending THE RESTITUTION to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our names for the purpose of aiding the managers of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund to be applied as the doners request, (or when left to the publisher to decide) only for those who themselves state their circumstances and need, or whose case is presented by some one known to be trustworthy.

To a person who asked the profound thinker, John Locke, Which was the shortest and surest way for a man to attain to the true knowledge of the Christian religion, in the full and just extent of it? he replied: "Let him study the Holy Scriptures, especially the New Testament; therein are contained the words of eternal life. It has God for its author, salvation for its object, and truth without any admixture of error for its matter. It is all pure, all sincere; nothing too much, nothing wanting."

Some men make themselves a great name by the perpetual ruin of their good one.

The Restitution advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began. As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins; and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Poetry.

The Care of God.

There is an Eye that never sleeps,
Beneath the wing of night;
There is an Ear that never shuts
When sink the beams of light.

There is an Arm that never tires
When human strength gives way;
There is a Love that never fails
When earthly loves decay.

That Eye is fixed on seraph throngs;
That Ear is filled with angels' songs;
That Arm upholds the worlds on high;
That Love is measured by God's own sky.

—Bishop Heber.

Voluntary and Perfect Obedience.

In this age of the world the churches are teaching everything save the plain truth that men are saved only through voluntary and perfect obedience to the law of God. Voluntary and perfect obedience to the laws of our being will assure us almost perfect health. To ignore these laws we suffer the penalty. Why should we expect less from the transgression of the law of God? Adam was placed under the law of obedience. Thou shalt and thou shalt not. (I gave him the power to live forever, "eating thou shalt eat") the other placed him under the power of death, ("dying thou shalt die.") Unto Adam he said, Because thou hast hearkened unto the voice of thy wife, and hast eaten of the tree, of which I commanded thee, saying, Thou shalt not eat of it; cursed is the ground for thy sake; in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life: thorns and thistles shall it bring forth to thee; and thou shalt eat the herb of the field. In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken; for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return. Gen. iii. 17, 18, 19. In these three verses we have a record of God's dealing with Adam. He was commanded to render a voluntary and perfect obedience, which he failed to do when God passed upon him the sentence of death, viz., "dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return." In these words we have God's definition of death. Yet we hear men preach that God requires an honest heart, which means, do the best you can or know. Adam could have rendered perfect obedience, but did not. Cain was very angry when God accepted Abel's offering and rejected his. One offered the fruits of the ground, the other the firstlings of his flock. It seemed a trifling thing to do, yet God had instructed them as to their duty. Abel rendered perfect obedience and was accepted, Cain did not and was rejected. God said to Cain, "If thou dost well, shalt thou not be accepted? And if thou dost not well, sin lieth at the door." Gen. iv. 7. God sent Saul to destroy Amalek and all his people and substance. He was ordered to take nothing alive. Yet he spared the king and the best of the cattle and sheep. When Samuel met him Saul said, Blessed be thou of the Lord; I have performed the commandment of the Lord. Samuel hearing the bleating of the sheep and the lowing of the cattle said, What meaneth this? God commanded you to destroy and not keep alive every thing. Saul said he had obeyed the Lord, but Samuel knew he had not. Now Saul's excuse for saving them was for a sacrifice. Can any person honestly say that Saul rendered obedience to God's command? Certainly not. He was then told that, Behold to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams. For rebellion is as the sin of witchcraft, and stubbornness is as iniquity and idolatry. Because thou hast rejected the Word of the Lord, he hath rejected thee from being king. 1 Sam. xv. 22, 23. Dare we draw any other conclusion from this Scripture than that God requires a voluntary and perfect obedience from his creatures. And we hear those who claim inspiration preach, that we may believe what we please so we are honest. You may believe that Christ is God or you may believe that he is the Son of God, so you are honest and live a moral life. Noah saved himself and family by obedience to God's command. The world was destroyed because of disobedience. Abraham became the father of nations through his willing obedience. Paul says, Rom. iv. 20, "Therefore against the promise of God he (Abraham) did not dispute but was strong in faith, giving glory to God, (Macknight). Now, it was not written for his sake alone that it was imputed to him; but for us also to whom it shall be imputed, if we believe on him that raised up Jesus our Lord from the dead. John the Baptist preached repentance and required baptism. I indeed baptize you with or in water unto repentance. He preached the kingdom of God is at hand or that the royal Majesty of heaven is among you. That is Christ is here. Afterward he pointed him out and said, "Behold the Lamb of God that taketh or beareth away the sin of the world." In searching the Scriptures from Genesis to Revelations we find that man has been required to render a voluntary and perfect obedience to his law. Abraham was commanded to leave his country and his father's house and go to a land that God would show him. He disputed not but went. We have his example and the written Word for our guidance. Listening to me we hear that God will guide us by his Holy Spirit. We can do nothing of ourselves. Let the Lord move upon our hearts and we will be cleansed. Again we hear that we must believe, repent and obey without telling us what we must believe. They dispute over the promise which God gave to Abraham, "In thy seed shall nations be blessed." Claiming that God is through Christ blessing the nations, when James says, God is taking out of the Gentiles a people for his name. Acts xv. 14. The Scripture no where teaches us to convert the world to Christ before he comes. Go ye and teach (margin, disciples or make Christians of) all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, etc., etc. Now dare we ignore the words of James when he says plainly that God is choosing or taking out a people for his name. We can only disciple those whom we teach or are teachable. We find many who are not teachable, of such we cannot make disciples. Paul says to Timothy, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith." Not any faith. Had not only fought a good fight but kept the faith, the faith of Abraham, the faith once delivered to the saints. One Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all. One God, the Father of the Lord Jesus Christ, who preached the gospel of the kingdom of God and commanded his apostles to preach the same. They not only preached it, but commanded others to preach and obey it. It was not one gospel before Pentecost and another after that, but one gospel from Abraham to the close of this age. That gospel was preached before unto Abraham. In thee shall all nations be blessed. God saith not, and to seeds as of many; but as of one, and to thy seed, which is Christ. For ye are all children of God by faith in Christ Jesus. For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ, ye are all one in Christ Jesus. And if ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's heirs according to the promise. Conclusion, the promise of eternal life in the kingdom of God comes through faith in the promise to the unit seed of Abraham who is Christ. We get into Christ through baptism or a planting, burial in waters. As Christ fulfilled all righteousness in being obedient to God's commands, so must we get in the Father's favor by rendering a perfect obedience. It is written Lu. ii. 52, that Jesus increased in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and man. The apostle Peter admonishes us to grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Why? That through the knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ we may be partakers of his divine nature. It is my prayer that we may so grow that when Christ shall come we may be found worthy.

J. C. Rounds.

Dear Restitution:

As the days roll by, with trials, tribulations and sorrows, while sickness and death comes to sadden the hearts of the children of men, robbing us of our loved ones, who are laid in the cold grave, and in that day their thoughts perish, we are made to rejoice when we think of him who said, "I will redeem them from death, I will ransom them from the grave." He also said, "Come unto me all ye that are weary and heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke on you; for my yoke is easy and my burden is light." I rejoice to know that my Redeemer lives, and that he will stand in the latter days upon the earth. Yes he is coming to restore the kingdom to Israel. Yes; the kingdom his disciples asked him about just before he ascended, saying, Lord wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel? and his answer was, It is not for you to know the time or the seasons which the Father hath put in his own power. Acts i. 6. This kingdom was overturned 586 years before Christ. Ezek. xxi. 27, but Christ will come again and restore that kingdom to Israel. Read Amos ix. 11, to end of chapter, also Acts xv. 16, 17. After this I will return, after God has taken out of the Gentiles a people for his name, as stated in verse 14. We are told that the kingdom shall come to the daughter of Jerusalem; but Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles be come in, also that blindness in part has happened to Israel, until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in, so all Israel shall be saved. Rom. xi. 25-27. It will be well for some to read all of this chapter very carefully and see what Paul has to say about us Gentiles being grafted into the tame olive stock, or in other words adopted into the family of Abraham, then if we are Abraham's seed then heirs according to the promise. Gal. iii. 29. Before a Gentile is grafted into the tame stalk, Paul tells us the condition they are in in. Eph. ii. 12. Now read verse 19 to the end of the chapter and you will see where they stand after they became Abraham's seed, they become Jews inwardly. It is through Abraham and his seed that all the families of the earth are to be blessed, Christ is the seed. Paul has said the body hath many members but one body, so also is Christ. Christ is the head of the body and the members all joined to the head constitutes the one body, or the one seed, and as long as one member is absent from the body the body is not complete, so when the last member is joined to the body of Christ then he will come to be glorified in them, or when the Bride has made herself ready the Bridegroom will come and the marriage will take place. Will we have on the wedding garment, or, when weighed in the balance, be found wanting?

Paul speaking of the mystery which in other ages was not made known unto the sons of men, that the Gentiles should be fellow-heirs and of the same body, and partakers of his promise (made to Abraham) in Christ by the gospel, in Eph. iv. 17, says: This I say therefore, and testify in the Lord, that ye henceforth walk not as other Gentiles (who have never become Abraham's seed) walk, in the vanity of their mind, having the understanding darkened, being alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that is in them (of the great plan of redemption) because of the blindness of their heart; who being past feeling having given themselves over unto lasciviousness, to work all uncleanness with greediness. But ye (that become Abraham's seed) have not so learned Christ; if so be that ye have heard him and have been taught by him, as the truth is in Jesus."

We are told to "Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit, after the tradition of men, after the rudiments of the world and not after Christ." Col. ii. 8.

Oh, does it not stand us in hand to know where we stand? If we are in Christ, or as Paul says, "If ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promise" it stands us as Gentiles to look well to the foundation of our faith; for many are called but few chosen, only those that obey the call and step out from the world. Paul says, "If ye be risen (from a watery grave) with Christ, seek those things which are above, so that when Christ, who is our life shall appear then shall we appear with him in glory."

May we ever look to him who is the author and finisher of our faith. I see the signs of the times bespeak the coming of the King of kings and Lord of lords to restore the kingdom to Israel, when the kingdoms of this world will become the kingdom of our Lord and King. May the time soon come. Let us read, then stop and think of what the powers are doing. Let us not compromise the truth with error, as the custom of some is.

A Glimpse of Peril.

The morning of May 23rd dawned brightly and the day opened like a blooming lily, the birds sang blithely while the flowers wasted their fragrance upon the air, the cool zephyrs floated up from the south bearing healings in its wings, peace seemed to have settled over the valley, while the busy farmer viewed his promising prospect with admiration; but the stillness of my quiet home was stirred by a welcome and well known voice, "Joe, come go with us." It was the voice of Bro. Leland Bernard, and with some hesitancy I closed the door and started for a pleasant drive, and as we were leaving the valley I took one long lingering look backward. It was a beautiful picture, the mountains slumbered in the distance while field upon field of grain waved between, far to the southwest lay the dewy clouds at the horizon which gave depth to this miniscene. A clump of houses nestled in the foreground of toil-worn weary souls striving to build up a home. My short stay had endeared them to me and my fervent prayer was for peace and prosperity to bless their every effort. The scene soon vanished from view while we drove over a country where the face of kind providence had smiled and the "Rain had fallen on the just and the unjust." It was a promising season and the hours of pleasure quickly glided by and the afternoon found us many miles from home. Slowly but surely morning's child-like cloud had mounted the sky in anger and the muttering tones in the distance came nearer, the sky was obscure in inky darkness and peal upon peal of thunder rolled and the lightenings flashed. We sought shelter none too soon; the rain and hail came in torrents, time passed, heavily and the evening shades began to appear, and while the storm's threatenings lingered we were on our homward way. On and on through rain and darkness we drove, and when nearing Burns we learned the worst. The fury of the storm had swept our country and three of our neighbors were killed. The creeks were swollen and we could not reach home and mid wreckage we spent the night at [illegible] and the land seemed wrapped in sorrow the notes of the song birds were hushed and the flowers crushed and withering lay, fields were devastated. It is a scene never to be forgotten, but the worst was yet to see. Three cold forms in death. It was sad indeed. All that loving hands could do was to bear them away to the silent city of the dead to wait the resurrection, and in the darkness of night they were laid away and we wended our way homeward in sad meditation of the uncertainty of life. "Man is of few days and full of trouble." Monday morning found the faithful, loyal souls marshalling to the aid of the storm swept victims. On my return I found my home in ruins and myself without shelter, food or clothing; but no, no truer hearts ever felt a truer sense of sympathy, no warmer love of man was ever manifested, no firmer hand ever rushed to the aid than these that came to share the burdens. Their religion was a do religion and not lip service, self was lost and noble sacrifices were made. Committees were appointed for the various work while the saw and hammer were busy in the construction of houses, and for sixteen days I shared the work with the tireless workers. The work and expense was met by the more fortunate. God's messengers record such noble deeds. "If a man seeth his brother in want and shuteth up his bowels of compassion, how dwelleth the love of Christ in that man?" We may talk of the promises of Jesus and his coming and kingdom, but without love, "We are as sounding brass and tinkling cymbal." "Love thy neighbor as thyself." Do we who come to the rescue? The Gentiles. "I was homeless, they took me in; naked they clothed me, hungry and they fed me." The horny hand of infidelity was backed up with a heart that overflowed with love for humanity. The foreigners and strangers to the covenants of promise are rich in love and sympathy that Jesus showed to erring man. If I love the Master and his righteousness I must prove my love to humanity. "Faith without works is dead." Listen to the voice of Jesus. "For I was hungered and ye gave me meat; ye took me not in, naked and ye clothed me not, sick and ye visited me not. Then shall they answer him saying, Lord, when saw we thee an hungered or thirst, or a stranger or naked, or sick and did not minister unto thee?" Then shall he answer them, saying, "Verily, I say unto you, Inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not to me." "Depart, I never knew you, but to the faithful ones the reward is sure." And tonight my heart goes out in love and prayer to the loved ones at Burns, Okla., many were the precious hours we talked of the good time coming where storm clouds are unknown, when peace will flow like a river and man long subject to the mighty of his hands, and none dare molest or make afraid. And with deep regret I was forced to say good by and come to my invalid mother, and we pray that in our absence that no harm will come nigh them.

The Hidden Dispensation.

Some statements of the prophets to Israel concerning Christ, in which the events belonging to his first and second coming seem closely connected, or not distinguished at all, the intervening events and time, the "Christian dispensation," having been "hid from ages and from dispensations." Col. i. 26; Eph. iii. 1-13.

When Israel rejected their King he "returned to his place till they acknowledged their offence," the interval being usually passed over in silence, and their history in prophecy being resumed upon the resumption of God's relation to them, "after the manner of Egypt." Ex. iii; Acts vii. 9-11, 14, 17-37, 51.

In prophecy the subject is often treated topically rather than chronologically. The fall and rising again of Israel is usually closely connected in the text, which seldom mentions the many days which they would abide without a king.

The apostles seem after the assertion to have expected the immediate return of Christ to establish the kingdom of Israel, and hence Peter earnestly exhorts the Jews to repent, to acknowledge their offence, Acts iii. 19-21, which repentance he knew must precede and would bring the return of the Lord and the times of restitution. Matt. xxiii. 39.

They did not know the width of the dark and bloody valley which lay between the casting away of Israel and the receiving of them again. Nor did they fully understand the new order of things into which they had entered until the Holy Spirit had thrust the events upon them, Acts xv. 6-12, and James had explained the purpose and present work of the Lord "to take out of them—the Gentiles—a people for his name," after which he will return and build again the tabernacle of David, that the residue of men may seek after the Lord, and all the Gentiles, "that the world through him might be saved."

Below are some places where this parenthesis of silence of this unrevealed dispensation seems to occur:

Deut. xxviii. 68; ( ) xxx. 1-6; xxxii. 35, ( ) 36; Psa. ii. 1 ( ) 6; xxii. 15, ( ) 26-28; Isa. vi. 9 ( ) 11; ix. 2 ( ) 4; xvi 1-4 ( ) 5-8; xxxii. 14 ( ) 15-20; xl. 9 ( ) 10; l. 4-11 ( ) li. 9; liii. 1-11 ( ) 12; lxi. 1-3 ( ) 4; Dan. ii. 40 ( ) 41-45; vii. 28 ( ) 24-27; viii. 8 ( ) 9-12; ix. 26 ( ) 27; xi. 20 ( ) 21; Hosea iii. 4 ( ) 5; v. 15; ( ) vi. 1-3; Amos ix. 8 ( ) 11; Mic. iii. 12; ( ) iv. 1; Zech. xiii. 7 ( ) 9.

Before the World Began.

"In hope of eternal life which God, that cannot lie, promised before the world began." Titus i. 2. Thus it appears that the blessing of eternal life is the final consummation, the summing up, or sum total, or culmination of all the promises of God to created intelligences, in all the worlds of God's creation. Eternal life in its fulness embraces every good and perfect gift that cometh from the Father of light to the children of men.

How perfectly reasonable it is that God would not confer eternity of existence, immortality, eternal life, upon beings whom he could not make perfectly happy in all their relations and associations. Hence the propriety of putting all beings to whom the promise of eternal life is made first on probation. A period of trial is given, in which the individual may prove unworthy of everlasting peace, happiness, and joy, and hence unworthy of eternal life. So if we hope for eternal life we also hope for eternal joy without alloy, and for every other good thing that God has ever promised. It embraces more than the mortal eye of mortals has ever seen, or the ear heard, or the mind conceived.

How wonderful that mortals can choose eternal life, [illegible] still is the fact that the great majority neglect to make the choice, and reject the one thing needful, in order to make this life of probation a glorious and eternal success.

Reading the Bible.

It has been scornfully said that people get out of the Bible just what they bring into it. This principle applies to everything. Place the score of one of Beethoven's sonatas, or Haydn's symphonies, before an unmusical man, and it is only a jumble of dots and strokes and lines which mean nothing; place it before a musician, and it is alive with soul stirring, heart entrancing melody and harmony. An ignorant man opens a volume Euclid, and it presents to him nothing but senseless lines or circles; let a mathematician look upon it, and he will unfold to you the beautiful and universal laws which its figures illustrate. A horse or cow sees the colors and forms of a landscape, but it only suggests so much grass to them; but if a sentient soul looks out on it through a poet's eye it becomes full of mysterious meanings of nature, fraught with messages of God. Yes; just in proportion to what is in us will be what we find in outward things, and especially—this so with the Scriptures. Just in proportion as we have God in us shall we find God in the Bible.—J. Campbell.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, AUG. 19, 1903.

THE Editor and wife had the pleasure of attending the Ohio Conference at Salem. Returning home our paper must go at once to press, postponing further report till next issue. The entire meeting was a grand success, and a work was started which we hope will lead to great results.

Passing Events in the Light of Prophecy.

We call the following from Glad Tidings (English). Its editor says:—

"Evidently we are entering upon a period of great political unrest. The Colonial Secretary's policy, whether successful or not, is bound to affect a great change on the political situation. The Pall Mall Gazette succinctly remarks: "Politics altogether are manifestly entering a new phase, and old things are passing away. The nation seems to be turning a sharp corner, and unable as yet to perceive what awaits it on the other side of the bend."

"The issues will be best seen by Zion's Watchman by their standing outside the coming conflict, and noting the trend of events in its bearing upon the divine plan of the ages as revealed in the Scriptures of truth.

According to the Jewish Chronicle negotiations are proceeding between the Zionist leaders and the government of Egypt for the settlement of a very large number of Jewish families in that country. The locality selected lies between the Nile and the Suez Canal. The Chronicle is not favorable to the aims of the Zionists for a Jewish state in Palestine, and it twits them upon this new departure, which it says, "is none the less an excellent illustration of the irony of history. Or perhaps it is Dr. Herzl's attempt to force history to the practice of another congenital habit—the habit of repeating itself. Of old, Israel's way to Palestine and nationhood was via Egypt. Dr. Herzl may wish to repeat the itinerary."

It is expected that an announcement will be made at the forthcoming Zionist Congress at Basle."

War in the Balkans.

THE trouble in the Balkan district cannot be well understood unless one studies the map and has the places located. Just now Russia is sending a strong fleet to Turkey to enforce her demands that the reforms asked for be made at once. Turkey has let loose her most cruel soldiery upon the helpless women and children, who are slain by thousands and the streams are red with their blood. Austria does not seem to work with Russia altogether, though the demands were made jointly. She is suspicious of her big neighbor. We give some extracts from the Chicago Tribune which will help in understanding the situation there:—

Macedonia lies between Servia, Bulgaria, Greece, and the turbulent Turkish province of Albania. There are no Macedonian people, the inhabitants of the region being Bulgars, Greeks, Albanians, Serbs, Jews and Turks. These various elements have never intermarried and fused into one, as the different nationalities have done in American cities, but, on the contrary, have preserved their racial ties and racial jealousies. The Turk governs the country by the use of the bayonet, and the only tie which might bind the governed is a hatred of the Turk. But the wily Sultan prevents union on such a basis by playing off one element against the other. For instance, before Grecian weakness had been completely exposed by the Turko-Greek war the Sultan treated the Macedonian Greeks harshly and the Macedonian Bulgars well. Now that he finds he has nothing to fear from the Greeks and the Bulgarians are becoming strong he has reversed the process and is favoring the Greeks and misusing the Bulgarians.

The most valuable spot in Macedonia is the port of Salonica, where three great railroads center. It has a fine harbor, and in good hands might easily become the great transshipping point between European railways and Asia. Bulgaria is within 110 miles of this port, Servia within 125, Austria within 200, Greece within 60. All four powers scarcely conceal their designs upon it, although since its last war Greece's chance has disappeared.

The present "revolution" is conducted by the Macedonian Bulgars and directed by the revolutionary committee, which sits at Sofia, the capital of Bulgaria proper. Its object is to wrest Macedonia from the Turks and annex it to Bulgaria, just as Eastern Roumelia was gained from Turkey in 1885.

The revolutionists want to provoke the Turk into invading Bulgaria, knowing that such a move would mean the active intervention of Austria and Russia. Once they have intervened with soldiers, they will push the Turk back another step towards Asia, just as they did in 1878 and 1885. To whom the coveted territory would finally go it would be folly to predict.

The Apostasy.

By apostasy we understand "an abandonment of what one has professed: a total desertion or departure from one's faith or religion." The apostle Paul, who was not only a good preacher, but also a prophet of no mean order, frequently warned the churches against the dangers that were approaching. Thus he told the Thessalonian brethren (2 Thes. ii. 2), that the day of Christ would not come before a general falling away (Gr. apostasis, apostasy) in the Church. The question naturally arises, From what would men apostatize or fall away? A "falling away" can only take place where any one has taken a certain position. Paul also wrote them "in the latter times some shall depart (Gr. apostesontai) from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of demons." 1 Tim. iv. 1, 2. "The faith," then, is the object from which some would apostatize. Not "a faith," but definitely "the faith." There is, according to apostolic teaching, only "one faith." Eph. iv. 4. That is "the faith once delivered to the saints." Jude 3. This faith is elsewhere termed "the faith of the gospel." Phil. i. 27. The apostle Peter called it "the.....precious faith." 2 Pet. i. 1. There is, and in the nature of the case can be, but one faith, for there is only one object of faith—one gospel (Gal. i. 6-8); and as any thing else would be but a perversion of the gospel of Christ, so any other faith could not be the faith of the gospel. This gospel is "the gospel of God" (Rom. i. 1), "the gospel of Christ" (Rom. i. 16). It is the same of which Jesus said, "This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world as a witness to all nations." Matt. xxiv. 14. It is the same which the twelve preached (Luke ix. 2-6), after they had learned it of the Master (Lu. viii. 1), which he himself had been sent to preach. Luke iv. 43. This is "the gospel of the kingdom." This "gospel of Christ (in other words, Christ's gospel) is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." Rom. i. 16. By means of this gospel Jesus brought life and immortality to light. 2 Tim. i. 10. That is, the gospel shows, or illustrates, what life (zoe) is. And not only life, but immortality—endless life, as well as the means to be employed for their obtainment. "He that believeth (the gospel which was to be preached) and is baptized, shall be saved." Mark xvi. 16. This salvation is characterized as "so great salvation; which at the first began to be spoken by the Lord." Heb. ii. 3. In short, he who hears this gospel understandingly, and from the heart believes and obeys it, shall be saved—that is, his past sins are forgiven, he himself is kept from falling by the power of God (the gospel), and is made immortal at the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ. In this, the believer follows the example of "Christ the first fruits." 1 Cor. xv. 20, 23. He is the tangible illustration of life and incorruption. He was dead, but is now alive for evermore. Rev. i. 18. All of which, and much more of a similar nature, was faithfully inculcated by the apostles, and by them committed to faithful men, who, in turn, should be able to teach others also. 2 Tim. ii. 2. But they also foresaw and foretold that men would depart from the simplicity that is in Christ. And Peter said that not a few merely, but "many" would take part in their pernicious ways. 2 Pet. ii. 1, 2.

What about this apostasy? Has it taken place, or is it yet future? If it is a fact now we may reasonably look for the day of Christ now; if it is still future, then the day of Christ is beyond the apostasy. Then we must not say, Christ may come at any time.

But let us look about for a moment. What do we see? Is the religious element of today still teaching the gospel as it came from the lips of Jesus of Nazareth and was repeated by the apostles. No one at all familiar with the present status of religious teaching, would affirm that it is. On the contrary, much, very much, of what passes for gospel at the present time has no more relation to the gospel than many sermons do to the text. There is much religion in the world today, much devotion. Yet it cannot be denied that there is also a vast amount of contradiction in the religious system. All the doctrines taught by all the denominations can not be true. Some must be false, all may be. I do not wish to enter into the historic phase of the apostasy that has taken place, but will confine myself to the doctrinal aspect of the question. And I will charge the doctrine of the immortality of the soul with more error, error that is current at this

This doctrine, however assiduously taught and sincerely believed in, is not a Bible doctrine, from the fact that immortality is not once predicated of that which is soulical in its nature. If it were a truth that either man or part of him is immortal, and that one tenth as important as it would be to appear, we should expect to hear something about it from the Bible. But, strange as it may seem to many, there is no such doctrine between the lids of the Bible. Reader, do not condemn me for speaking thus plainly. But do you recall a single passage of Scripture which speaks of an "immortal soul," a "never dying soul," or any equivalent term? "Soul" is used 858 times in the Bible, but no adjective denoting deathlessness is ever connected with it. The Bible says, "The soul that sinneth, shall die." Ezek. xviii. 4, 20. But it never says "The soul is immortal, and can never die." This is a fact which ought to be weighed by every candid person. Just think of it. Here we are expected to believe and teach a doctrine which is not once as much as named in the Bible. Do you wonder that we decline to have anything to do with it?

It may be asked, "What is its origin, if the doctrine of the immortality of the soul is not a Bible doctrine?" And a proper question this is. I wish that all thousands would ask it inquiringly. The conception of the immortality of the soul hails from Egypt. Herodotus, B. C. 484, wrote, "The Egyptians were also the first that asserted the doctrine that the soul of man is immortal." In addition to this he says, [illegible] have at different periods of time adopted as their own." Enterpe, ch. 123. Bunsen says, "The Egyptians were the first who taught the doctrine of the immortality of the soul, a fact mentioned by all Greek writers from Herodotus to Aristotle." The Greeks learned it from the Egyptians. But what about that? Had this doctrine been confined to the unenlightened Egyptians and Greeks, no further harm would have resulted, but it was introduced into the church. Says Mosheim in his Ecclesiastical History (pp. 65, 66), "Its first promoters (in the Church) argued from the known doctrine of the Platonic school, which was also adopted by Origen and his disciples, that the divine nature was diffused throughout all human souls." By these men and their followers in the second and third centuries it was insinuated into the Church, and from that time it has existed as a leavening agent, corrupting and debasing the doctrine of the Church. And many have fallen in with its dark subtleties. In another article I shall show the effects of the doctrine of the immortality of the soul.

A. H. ZULAUF.

The Golden Rule, What is that?

To some this may seem a [illegible] significant question, but not [illegible]. "To do unto others as we would wish to be done by," is no light affair let me tell you. And this is what the Master has required of his disciples, and this is called "the golden rule," and most surely the name fits close and well. Hear the Master, And as ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise. Lu. vi. 31. This is the way the Master lived, walked and talked, and this was his example and the manifestation of his kind spirit to poor fallen men and women. And it seems but reasonable that his disciples, if they be his disciples, will delight to walk as he walked, talk as he talked, and thus manifest a like spirit in all their dwellings with the children of men. And if the spirit of the Master does not prompt and mark all our words and actions, we may well feel doubtful about our claim and title to a home in the renewed earth, where there will be no more death or dying, and where the former things are passed away. Paul in his letter to the church at Rome says, So then they that are in the flesh (live after and are led by the flesh) cannot please God. But ye are not in the flesh, but in the spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you. Now, if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his. Ch. viii. 9. Our words and our actions are a very correct index of our heart. For out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaks. But to observe the golden rule, Do unto others as we would have others do to us, is the testing point. Most of us perhaps really think we are walking by, and living out the golden rule, and sometimes boast over it, when in fact if we could only look a little deeper, and scan a little closer we would be surprised to find how far we were from the golden rule. Although man was made upright, yet he has invented, and sought out many inventions. And right here is one place where man has turned away from the divine rule and invented his own rule or way, that is do unto others as they do to you, or a little worse. If they mistreat you, pay them back in the same kind of coin. This is not the golden rule at all, this is our own rule, and a very misleading rule at that. The golden rule will not allow us to return evil for evil, railing for railing, but contrariwise, blessing. Brethren and sisters, this is one of the places that self needs watching closely. We are so depraved and prone to evil, that if we are not very careful we will lose sight of the Master and be led by another spirit, and feel that we are going the right way, when in fact we are on the wrong road. There is a way that seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death. Better get right here, and live and hope for the future. We are aware that it is oftimes very humiliating to live up to the golden rule in all that we do and say, and thus try to overcome evil with good. But our Master knew all this before we did, and he has so lived and overcome the world and all evil, and the promise is to the overcomer, and to him only.

T. E. ADAMS.

Wisdom of Seirach.

CHAPTER 12.

1. If thou art doing good, know to whom thou art doing it, and there will be gratitude for thy good things.

2. Do good to the godly man, and not from him yet from a Most High.

3. There are no good things for the one who persistently continueth in evil-doings and who doth not show gratitude for an act of mercy.

4. Give to the truly reverent man, and do not intervene for the obdurate-sinner.

5. Do good to the lowly, and do not give to an irreverent man; impede his bread and do not give to him, that he may not therewith oppress thee; for doubled evils wilt thou find in all good things thou mayest do to him.

6. Because even the Most High hath hated obdurate-sinners, and to the irreverent he will repay in the way of requirement.

7. Give to the good man, and do not intervene for the obdurate-sinner.

8. The friend will not have been requited in good times, and the enemy will not hide himself in bad times.

9. In a man's good times his enemies will be in sorrow, and in his bad times even his friends will have separated himself from him.

10. Do not trust thine enemy for ever (εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα—here equivalent to "as long as you live") for as the copper corrodeth even so his wickedness.

11. And if he should humble himself and go his way bowed down, know [illegible] will [illegible] to him like a polished mirror and that it hath not become corroded at all.

12. Do not stand him beside thyself lest when he hath upturned thee he stand in thy place. Do not seat him at thy right hand, lest when thou seekest thy seat thou mayest both fully comprehend my words at last, and feel compunction on account of my oracular sayings.

13. Who will show mercy to a charmer when bitten by a serpent, and all those who lead folks unto wild beasts?

14. Even so the one who goeth his way unto an obdurate sinner and mixeth himself up with his sins.

15. He is spending an hour with thee, and shouldst thou incline out, do not prolong it.

16. Thine enemy is sweet with his lips even, and in his heart he will counsel to upturn thee into a pit; with his eyes thine enemy will shed tears, and if he find opportunity he will not have been sated with blood.

17. Should adverse things blossom for thee, thou wilt find him there before thee, and like a responsive helper he will dog thy heel;

18. He will shake his head and clap his hands, and whisper many things and alternate his face.

COMMENT.

The good advice given in the first seven verses of this chapter in the matter of giving alms is as applicable today as when old Seirach uttered it and his grandson wrote it out and published it. Submit it to "The Bureau of Charities" for endorsement if you doubt it yourself.

The balance of the chapter devoted to how you are to treat friends and enemies, especially enemies in the intimate and confidential relations of life, when tried by the test of any merited or expected return of gratitude or reciprocal favor, will be found to be true in your own experience and that of others who have learned their lessons in this same thorough going school; and it does not contradict the later teaching of "Love your enemies and do good to those who deitifully use you." For no one actuated by this higher purpose should do it without regard to any expected reciprocity, and be willing to suffer loss, if he confer an actual benefit even upon an enemy. The measure and example is not human but divine. Be like your heavenly Father who sends his ordinary benefits and blessings upon the justified and the unjust alike. But in the ordinary affairs of life "be as thoughtful as serpents but as harmless as doves."

THE GATHERING OF THE SAINTS.

Gather my saints together unto me, those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice. O give thanks unto the Lord, for he is good, for his mercy endureth for ever, let the redeemed of the Lord say so. Whom he hath redeemed from the hand of the enemy and gathered them out of the lands, from the east and from the west, from the north and from the south, and the saints of the Most High shall take the kingdom and possess the kingdom for ever, even for ever and ever. And the kingdom and dominion and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven (not above the heavens as some teach) shall be given to the [illegible] whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom and all dominions shall serve and obey him, and the Lord shall be King over all the earth. In that day shall there be one Lord and his name one, and Jerusalem shall be safely inhabited, for the law shall go forth from Zion and the Word of the Lord from Jerusalem, and the ransomed of the Lord shall return and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads. They shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away. Be ye glad and rejoice for ever in that which I create, for behold I create Jerusalem a rejoicing and her people a joy.

ABIDING IN LOVE.

Abraham said unto Lot, Let there be no strife, I pray thee, between me and thee, for we be brethren. Jesus saith whosoever shall do the will of my Father which is in heaven, the same is my brother. Those that do the will of the Father and keep laws are as brethren, one in Christ to the brethren or one body. These words abide or dwell in love are full of meaning. Abide in love, let brotherly love continue, love the brotherhood, by this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another. A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another as I have loved you. This is a law unto the church. If the love of God dwells in our hearts we can abide in peace, and there will be no strife. Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the Spirit unto unfeigned love of the brethren, see that ye love one another fervently, and be kind one to another, tender hearted, forgiving one another, and above all things have fervent charity among yourselves. If we live by the Word and let the love of Christ rule our lives, we will be found abiding in love when Jesus comes.

ELLA T. KNOWLES.

Dear brothers and sisters:

It is with feelings of joy and gratitude that I sit down to tell you how we are getting along in this part of the Lord's vineyard. And O, how our hearts are filled with love to God that so many in our midst, after having heard the gospel of the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ, have become obedient by being baptized into the All-saving name. Bro. Wilson came among us last fall as a stranger, none of us had ever beheld his face, we only knew him through his writings, but it only took a clasp of the hand and a look in the face so kind and true, and we were soon chatting away on the things concerning the kingdom of God and the return of Master as though we had known each other for years. Like the prophet of old he came to us in peace and in the Spirit of Christ, which was made manifest throughout the meetings, and while fearlessly proclaiming the grand old gospel of the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ he did it in such a manner that those who differed from him in belief could take no offense. Again in July came the letter to Sister Bradley, stating that Bro. Wilson was coming again. How glad we were to see him, and O, how earnestly did we pray that God would bless the meetings. Praise be to his holy name, the result was glorious. Never did we hear the gospel of the kingdom proclaimed in a clearer manner, carrying conviction with it. Bro. Wilson seems to have a special talent for making things clear and plain. Several dear ones applied for baptism, so on Friday, July 24th, we drove in carriages to the banks of the Fox River, and John Bradley, Job Bradley and wife, Wm. Stiffler and wife, Lavina Baldry, Wm. Haedt and wife, George Fink and Dennison Daggett were buried in the All-saving name. May God in his great mercy grant that they may indeed have risen from the watery grave to walk in the newness of life. May they fight the good fight of faith, lay hold of eternal life, and proving faithful to the end receive the crown of life which the righteous Judge will give them at his appearing. Praise God, to him be all glory. Let the good work go on! May these dear brothers and sisters like the disciple of old hasten to bring others to Christ. We returned home from the river rejoicing that so many had been added to the household of faith, and especially that our youngest son Dennison was among the number, and while sitting down to rest our little daughter Jennie came to mother, she too wished to be baptized, and oh the glad surprise to find that Brother Wilson had made the gospel of the kingdom so plain that even this little child believed it and wished to become obedient. Many questions [illegible] were asked which were answered so clearly, showing that the good seed sown in the heart had taken root. Aaron, the oldest son of Sister Bradley, also wished to be baptized, so on July 26th we again went to the river bank and these two dear ones were buried with Christin baptism. It was indeed a beautiful sight to see one so young added to the fold of him who while on earth said, "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." This makes fifteen in all here baptized by Bro. Wilson. Brothers and sisters in Christ, pray for your little sister Jennie, pray for all that they may prove faithful to the end of life. Others are interested and we hope in time that they too may be added to our number. Sunday night closed the series of meetings. After the sermon we partook of the bread and wine, thus showing forth the Lord's death till he comes. Bro. Wilson has now left us to go into new fields. May the Lord bless him in his labors of love. We are sorry that his health is not so good as formerly, but we trust the Lord will strengthen him for his work, for truly the harvest is great, but the laborers are few. Among those lately added to our numbers are several earnest workers. Sister Job Bradley, Sister Baldry and Sister Lillie Haedt have long been earnest workers in the Sunday school work, and now that they have learned the way of the Lord more perfectly may the Master fit them for larger work in his vineyard. Our Berean society is doing good work. Sister Eva Bradley who was baptized last fall is president, Bro. George Daggett, treasurer, Sister Gertie Hess, secretary. And now, dear brothers and sisters in Christ, let us be faithful. We know not how soon our Lord may come, may we be ready to meet him. Paul says, If in this life only we have hope in Christ we are of all men most miserable. I cannot bear the thought of failure. Let us by living good and pure lives lead others to glorify our Father which art in heaven. Yours waiting for the return of the Master.

Life's Lessons.

A child came close to his teacher's side,
His book tight clasped in his little hand,
"Teacher," he said, with wistful eyes,
"We're coming to words that I don't understand.
I've turned the pages over and over,
And the words are so big, and they're all so new.
When we come to the lessons where they are put Oh, teacher, I don't know what I'll do."
The teacher smiled at the troubled face,
And tenderly stroked the curly head:—
"Before we reach them, I think you will learn
The way to read them," she gently said:
"But if you she- don't, I'll help you then.
And don't you think that the wisest plan
Is to learn the lesson that comes today,
And learn it the very best you can?"
And it seems to me it is so with us:
We look at the days that are still ahead—
The days that, perchance, may never be ours—
With a pitiful longing and nameless dread.
But surely the Teacher who gives the task
Will lovingly watch, as we try to read
With faltering tongue and tear-dimmed eyes,
And will help his children in time of need.

The Great Salvation.

"How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation?" Heb. ii. 3.

In writing to the churches, the apostles made many passing allusions to salvation, and to certain means which contributed to its attainment; for instance, saved by faith, by grace, by hope, by blood, by the name of Christ, by calling on the name of the Lord; without the shedding of blood is no remission; justified by his blood; by his cross; work out your own salvation; etc. Our Lord said, "My blood shed for the remission of sins;" and John the Baptist, "Behold the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world."

Most of these expressions, used in an incidental manner, do not afford any distinct answer to an inquirer as to the way of salvation. Such was not their purpose. An earnest inquirer has to assume the standpoint of the Jew of the first century. "How readest thou?" ought to be the prime inquiry with such. If we could trace the history of the persons spoken of in the phrases quoted, and who are the "we," the "us," and the "you," might find in certain cases that belong to a class who came with certain antecedent experi- such as the 3,000 on Pentecost, many priests who became "obedi- to the faith"—(Acts vi. 7), the Ephesians—(Acts xix. 8), and the Romans. Acts xxviii. 31.

"The gospel of life" and "The gospel of the cross"—terms which some are pleased to employ—have a certain degree of truth, but are not used by any writers in the New Testament. They are therefore not warranted to be used by us. The nearest approach to such language is where the apostle Paul says, "God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Anointed." Gal. vi. 14. But Paul well knew who the person was that suffered on the cross—that it was none other than the Anointed King of Israel. His title was placed on the cross by the Roman Governor, and the superscription was written in three languages—Hebrew, Greek and Latin—that the various peoples resident in Judea might read the accusation. This fact, although generally ignored by the common faith of Christendom, was recognized by the "old masters" of the painters' art in their celebrated works. In depicting the crucifixion, they placed overhead the capital letters, "I. N. R. I.," being the initial letters of the principal words of the Latin inscription, "Jesus Nazarenus Rex ille Judæorum;" in English, Jesus of Nazareth, the King of the Jews." Further, Paul alludes to Jesus' claim before Pilate as "the good confession"—(1 Tim. vi. 13)—that claim being that he was "The King of the Jews."

"Messiah" is a title of office, like "King" or "Emperor," and not a personal name, like "Jesus." The translators of both common and revised versions have failed to give the translation of the Greek Christos, which ought to be rendered "The Anointed One." Basileus is always translated "king;" why not Christos "The Anointed One?" The scholars who provided a translation of the Greek New Testament into Hebrew for the use of Jews understood this point, and their work might afford an object lesson for us Gentiles. So we find in the New Testament, in Hebrew, the Greek term Christos rendered "Messiah." A Jewish reader would know that Messiah meant "The Anointed One." If any Jew should desire to verify this by consulting the Old Testament in English, he would find it corroborated by some twenty instances where Messiah is rendered "Anointed." In the English New Testament, the case is very different, and the Gentile is placed at a great disadvantage, since the term Christos is never translated there.

These remarks will apply to another important Greek term—Christianos. This occurs three times in the New Testament. In the version made for the Jews, it is rendered by a Hebrew term equivalent to "a Messianist,' meaning a follower of the Anointed One. Thus, a Jew, when reading the New Testament in Hebrew, will find in Acts xi. 26, "The disciples were called Messianists first in Antioch;" in Acts xxvi. 23, "Almost thou persuadest me to be a Messianist;" and in 1 Pet. iv. 16, "If any man suffer as a Messianist."

The Messiahship, as a vital element of saving faith, was strongly declared by our Lord himself. "If ye believe not that I am he, ye shall die in your sins." John viii. 24. It is in John's gospel that Nathanael's confession is recorded. "Thou art the Son of God, thou art the King of Israel." John i. 49. The apostle informs us that his gospel was written "that ye might believe that Jesus is the Anointed, the Son of God: and that believing ye might have life through his name. Jno. xx. 31. He further says, "Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Anointed is born of God." 1 John v. 1. In his second letter, the same apostle repeats his estimate of the same great truth when he says, "If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine [of the Anointed One], receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed." 2 John ix. Nathanael's expression met the approval of our Lord. Although there were no other evidence than this from a Jew that the Messiahship signified royalty, it were sufficient. One testimony of Scripture is as good as a hundred, if clear and definite as this is. Even the chief priests, with the scribes and elders, acknowledged the connection of the Messiahship with royalty, for at the crucifixion they said, "Let [the] Christ, the King of Israel, descend now from the cross, that we may see and believe." Mark xv. 32. The foregoing declarations concerning the Messiahship of Jesus, and especially his own solemn words, may well be placed alongside of the apostle's statement regarding "the great salvation, which at first began to be spoken by the Lord." They show the fundamental idea of his preaching.

Oil prepared after a peculiar prescription, and called "holy oil," was used for anointing in various ways in the Mosaic dispensation. Inanimate objects—such as garments, musical instruments, the tabernacle, the altar, etc., and also persons—such as priests, prophets, and kings—were sanctified, made holy, consecrated, and set apart for some special use by anointing. Such cases of anointing do not detract from the anointing of our Lord, but rather illustrate the same. Saul and David were called Jehovah's Anointed, and this designation was not applied to priests or prophets. Luke records, ix. 20, that the confession of the apostles took the form of "The Christ of God," in other words, the Anointed of Jehovah. Samuel said to Saul, "The Lord hath anointed thee to be captain over his inheritance." 1 Sam. x. 1. Our Lord was anointed, not with material oil, but with the Holy Spirit. Acts x. 38.

These remarks simply amount to this—if the Messiahship of Jesus be not understood in the plain sense of King of Israel, as in the several Scriptures quoted, then the truth that Jesus is the Anointed One cannot be believed in its Bible sense. In such case our Lord's verdict is, "Ye shall die in your sins." Escape from this doom is a mere peradventure that somehow our Lord's words may be departed from, and some loophole provided.

Paul counselled even the disciples, "Examine yourselves whether ye be in the faith." 2 Cor. xiii. 5. Does not this become the urgent personal duty of such as are only inquirers, who acknowledged the blood, the cross, etc., and imagine they are in the right position? And should they not be encouraged in the performance of self-examination by such baptized believers as may be afforded the opportunity? It is difficult to understand how persons who for years have been enlightened in "the obedience of faith" should show any laxity here.

An apostle asks a question of prime importance, which sends the earnest inquirer back to the true quarter for a reply. "If the word spoken by angels was steadfast, and every transgression and disobedience received a just recompense of reward, how shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation, which at the first began to be spoken by the Lord, and was confirmed unto us by them that heard him?" Heb. ii. 2, 3. This plainly means, that if the great salvation first spoken by the Lord, is for any reason neglected, there is no escape. Many, through wrong teaching, inherited from the past, are content to rest on the terms casually used by the sacred writers—such as the blood, the cross, etc., already quoted—as the exclusive elements of saving faith. A glaring example of this is afforded by the so-called Reformation of Alexander Campbell. This religious body regarded the death, burial, and resurrection of Jesus as exclusively the elements of gospel truth, denying that Jesus was to reign over the twelve tribes of Israel. They may be said to be "not far from the kingdom of God," although far enough to incur the dictum of our Lord, "If ye believe not that I am he, ye shall die in your sins." Certainly the blood and the cross have their own place and importance; but if they are allowed to become a substitute for the great salvation, "which at first began to be spoken by the Lord," the record, as plainly revealed, leaves no escape from the doom of such as "obey not the gospel."

This great salvation was "published throughout all Judea, and began from Galilee." Acts x. 37. A call to repentance was sounded forth by the Lord himself. "The time is fulfilled, the kingdom of God is at hand; repent ye and believe the gospel." Mark i. 1. He was sent for this purpose by his Father. Luke iv. 43. "The people heard him gladly," although but few became his disciples so as to attain to salvation. His disciples were thus prompted to inquire, "Are there few that be saved?" His answer was, "Strive to enter in at the strait gate, for many, I say unto you, will strive to enter in, and shall not be able." Luke xiii. 22, 24. Salvation was thus the theme involved in the proclamation and its reception. His preaching "was confirmed unto us by them that heard him." Thus Peter on Pentecost (Acts ii.), Philip at Samaria (Acts viii. 12), Paul at Ephesus (Acts xix.), and at Rome (Acts xxviii.) gospelized the same things. In these instances, the kingdom of God was the prominent element. This is in exact accordance with our Lord's prediction. "This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations," (Matt. xxiv. 14;) and with his charge to his disciples shortly thereafter, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, but he that believeth not shall be condemned." Mark xvi. 15, 16. Those messengers had no difficulty in understanding what their mission was. They had been personally engaged in preaching the same gospel in Judea. They added to this the important facts concerning the death for sins, and the resurrection of the Anointed One, as they carried out their mission. "Christ crucified" that is, the Anointed One crucified, and his coming again to receive his kingdom—was the burden of their preaching.

This kingdom was a historical fact, having existed for some 900 years in Palestine. It was the only kingdom of God ever known upon the earth. "Thus saith Jehovah, the King of Israel, and his Redeemer, Jehovah of Hosts." Isa. xlv. 6. In Daniel ii. 35, we read that "the stone that smote the image became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth;" and in ver. 44, that this was the kingdom of God, which should break in pieces and destroy all other kingdoms, and stand for ever. In Dan. vii. 13, 14, the Son of Man is to be given this kingdom, "that all peoples, nations, and languages should serve him," and that "the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High." Verse 27. Having been preached as at hand by our Lord, he later explained that it should not immediately appear, as the Son of Man had to go to a far country and return. The existence of this kingdom in history, its conquest by the Romans, and its promised restitution when "He whose right it is," (Ezekiel xxi. 27)—should come, were all matters plain enough to the Jewish people. Nor should they be matters of difficulty to the Gentile reader who bestows ordinary care and diligence in the endeavor to know the truth. The apostle speaks also of "the deep things of God," which "eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man the things which God hath prepared for them that love him. But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit." 1 Cor. ii. 9, 10. Such was not the character of the proclamation of Jesus. His message related to things which had been clearly and fully set forth in the Scriptures, which were simple, and easily comprehended, lying, as it were, on the very surface. As a matter of fact, they required neither profound learning nor prolonged study, and were so well known by the common people to whom our Lord spoke. That no question was ever put to him as to what he meant by the kingdom of God which was at hand.

In view of these passages, and more also which might be quoted, who has any right to say that faith in the kingdom is not required? As well say that faith in the cross is not required. It is just as unscriptural to preach Christ without the one as without the other. The two things are inseparably connected—the sufferings of Christ and the glory that should follow: and what God hath joined let no man put asunder. The cross was necessary in order that those who believe in the kingdom might inherit the kingdom; for without the shedding of blood is no remission of sins. Until, therefore, the blood of Christ had been shed, none of the faithful of any period could receive the things promised; hence is seen the essential importance of the cross of Christ in the scheme of redemption. But that is a different thing from saying that the cross is to be preached instead of the kingdom.

Reader, the foregoing statements are placed before you for your careful and earnest examination. Strive to enter in at the strait gate, and escape the doom of such as choose the wide gate; for "broad is the way that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat." The Savior who uttered these words issued his call to repentance and faith. Specious reasonings abound on every hand, and it is for the earnest and unprejudiced inquirer to judge for himself that his "faith should stand not in the wisdom of man, but in the power of God." 1 Cor. ii. 5. And may this effort to set forth the truth as it is in Jesus redound to the praise of his glory.—Sent by J. Cameron.

Agonizing unto Perfection.

The are marvelous words that the apostle says of himself. In our own version they are sufficiently startling: Christ in you, the hope whom we proclaim, admonishing every man and teaching every man in all wisdom, that we may present every man perfect in Christ, where unto I labor also, striving according to his working, that worketh in me mightily." Col. i. 28, 29. But in the language in which he wrote, the word striving is agonizing. It is the word used of a man straining every nerve and muscle for the prize. Similarly, the word rendered working and working is rendered energizing. The words gain vividness and intensity whilst we read the words: "Whereunto I labor also, agonizing according to his energizing, that energizeth in me mightily."

In the spring, when the first flowers herald the advent of the boundless wealth of natural life, we become keenly sensible of the putting forth of God's energy. It throbs in every flower and tree, in orchard and hedgerow. So it is in the heart of each regenerate man. God is in him, and energizes him; and it is for him to agonize according to the inworking of the divine Spirit of life.

But what was the goal of the apostle's agony? What object was that towards which the divine energy bore him? Why that straining of nerve, that eager strife? To the superficial glance it seems as if for nothing else than that each of his converts should be perfect in Christ; but the word conveys an added thought, a touch of deeper meaning.

It is doubtless true that the apostle was eager to see each spiritual child stand complete in all the will of God, but it is equally true that he sought it with earnestness for himself.

And what of this perfection, which he so strenuously sought? The thought at the root of the Greek word is end, or fulfillment. The perfect thing is that which fulfills to its utmost limit its ideal. Everything has an ideal, toward the fulfillment of which it strives.....The ideal is possibly never realized. It exists in the mind of God alone. It combines in perfect and finished beauty, too fair for earth, all the essential properties of grace, beauty, and usefulness, peculiar to the order of which it is the type. But every member of the family, of which it is the ideal, is impelled by an inward impulse to strive towards its attainment. Though it has never been realized, in texture however delicate, in hue however exquisite, in form however shapely; though ages have striven for it and failed; yet it is the supreme goal for which each member of the family makes.

So there is an ideal man. In nature the ideal exists only in the mind of God, and has never been perfectly realized, because sin has blighted creation, and the creature is made subject to vanity. But the ideal man has been manifested. Human hands have touched him, human eyes beheld him, weary heads have rested near his heart. And each regenerate soul must strive even to agony to realize that ideal, and to be conformed to the image of the Son, that he may be the first born among many brethren. This is perfection, the fulfillment of the divine ideal, the realization of the divine type.....We have within us the germ of the perfect manhood of Christ. His seed remaineth in us. We have been made partakers of the divine nature. What is that incorruptible seed of which we are begotten again, except it be the germ of the Christ-life? And as the seed of flower or tree, as the young life of bird or beast, aspires to realize their perfect ideal, so that holy thing which has been born into our hearts by the Holy Ghost can do no other than aspire toward an even closer approximation to the likeness of the Lord Jesus.....

To put the same thought in another form we are joined by faith to the perfect Man himself. As the vine-root hidden far away in the earth, tries to repeat itself in every green frond that waves in the balmy air, and every reddening grape, so does the Christ-life, pouring into our nature from the heart of our Lord, repeat itself more fully and perfectly within us.

Directly we touch Christ, though the touch be slight as that of the woman on his robe, a relationship is established between him and us, and from that moment his perfect manhood begins to flow into our inmost being, moulding it after the fashion of his own.

But, to put the truth in yet another form, we have within the same Holy Spirit that fashioned and energized within the human nature of Christ. Through him he was conceived and anointed; and by him he offered himself without spot to God, and was raised from the dead. This blessed Spirit is actually within us, and is striving to conform us to the image of our Lord. In some he has been so often grieved and thwarted that his energizing is reduced to a minimum. But in others he energizes mightily. Probably the more we yield to them, the more mightily do these energizings become.

This is where our agonizing must begin. Not to be saved but to gather up with miserly care and to translate into immediate action those blessed yearnings and energizings. Agonizing that nothing be lost—agonizing to work out in each detail what he works in.

Deliverance from the power of sin is not the supreme attainment of the Christian life. It is incidental, though necessary to it. The mother longs to see her child delivered from the disease that scars its skin, or the fever that is burning up its life, but she would not be content for the child merely to be delivered. She longs to see it grow to perfect maturity. So deliverance from sin is but the stepping-stone, the vestibule, and threshold of the real life.

God's energizings are generally slight and gentle at the beginning. Do not miss them by expecting something overmastering and awful. Follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth. But the silver thread will become a stream, the stream a river, the river pulsating with the throb and beat of the ocean tide; launch on the rill, and you will presently feel the tidal currents. Then agonize to get from them all they give.—F. B. Meyer in Herald of Life.
